(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 15, 1921.)

Costs $$$ 260(4)—Appellants not fined for frivolous appeal where showing good faith.

Where the briefs of appellants failed to raise substantial point, no fine would be imposed for the prosecution of a frivolous appeal where, notwithstanding the condition of their briefs, counsel for appellants seem to be in earnest in their effort to present the appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Ventura County; Merle J. Rogers, Judge.

Action by John R. Alves and others against Manuel Alves and another. From judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Chauncey Gardner and Robert P. Rivera, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Durley & Downes, of Oxnard, for respondent Manuel Alves.

WORKS, J. This action represents a controversy between plaintiffs and defendant Manuel Alves; Soila Alves Carcarbur having been made a defendant because she refused to join as a plaintiff. Plaintiffs' pleading sought to enforce a trust against certain property held by defendant Alves, and he filed a cross-complaint, demanding that his title to the property be quieted. Defendant Alves had judgment under both his answer and his cross-complaint, and plaintiffs appeal.

In their opening brief appellants quote portions of the evidence, and claim that it establishes certain ultimate facts, but they make no assertion that any of the findings is not supported by the evidence. They cite authorities to a few abstract propositions of law in another part of the brief, but make no contention that the points decided by the cases they submit have any bearing upon errors of law committed by the trial court, nor do they direct our attention to any such errors. In short, the opening brief of appellants is utterly pointless. Respondent Alves, after taking exception in his brief to the barren effort of appellants, is forbearing enough to assume that they intend to assail certain findings, and he points to parts of the evidence as yielding a support to those findings. In fact, he sets up a straw man for appellants, but only to destroy it, for he shows that the findings he mentions—and they are the ones covering the important issues in the cause—have an abundant support in the record. Appellants, in their closing brief, seek to repair their earlier omissions in the matter of the findings, but they do so by the mention of certain findings by number, without giving us an inkling as to what facts are found by them. Under these circumstances, we do not feel that it is incumbent on us to recite the evidence upholding the findings to which respondent has called our attention. From our reading of the parts of the evidence noticed by both sides we are unable to say that any single finding in the cause fails of ample and substantial support.

As to the law of the case, there is none. In that matter the final brief of appellants does not better their opening brief, and respondent Alves does not come to their relief.

Notwithstanding the condition of their briefs, counsel for appellants seem to be in earnest in their effort to present the appeal. For that reason, and even if their zeal be both misguided and fruitless, we impose no fine for the prosecution of a frivolous appeal.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; CRAIG, J.

(54 Cal. App. 543)

LAKE v. O'BRIEN. (Civ. 3553.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 14, 1921.)

1. Estoppel ⇨92(3)—One receiving proceeds of sale by apparent owner estopped to deny purchaser's title.

Where plaintiff, to keep property from creditors, executed and recorded a deed to C., who sold the property to defendant and turned over the selling price to plaintiff, and plaintiff never offered to return the money, she was estopped to deny defendant's title, though it did not appear that defendant had no knowledge of C.'s lack of title.

2. Estoppel ⇨52—Definition of "estoppel."

"Estoppel" is a rule of evidence by which a man is precluded from alleging or denying a fact in consequence of his own previous action, inaction, allegation, or denial, which has led another to so conduct himself that, if the truth were established, such other would be damaged.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Estoppel.]

3. Trial ⇨163—Motion for nonsuit held sufficient to show ground of motion.

In an action to quiet title, a motion to dismiss on the ground that plaintiff had not made a prima facie case as to title, but had shown that her title had been conveyed away, and that she got the money and never challenged the transaction, was sufficient to show that it was based on estoppel arising from plaintiff's retention of the proceeds of the sale by an apparent owner of the property.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County, Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by Helen M. Lake against Thomas O'Brien. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. Crawford, of Los Angeles, and Dorsey Whitelaw, of El Centro, for appellant.

Conkling & Brown, of El Centro, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. This action is one to quiet title. The complaint was in the usual form; the answer denied plaintiff's ownership, and on the trial the following facts were established in connection with the introduction of plaintiff's evidence:

That she was the owner of the property from June, 1913, to October, 1914; that she deeded the property to one Creighton in October, 1914. This deed was recorded at plaintiff's request, but not delivered to Creighton; that the deed was made to avoid plaintiff's creditors taking the property to satisfy debts; that while he was still the record owner, Creighton deeded the land to the defendant, and received therefor from the defendant $400, which he immediately gave to the plaintiff and informed her of what he had done. Plaintiff kept this money, and has never offered to return it. There is an absence of evidence tending to show that O'Brien had no knowledge that Creighton was not the holder of the full title to the property.

[1-3] We have no doubt that upon this statement of facts, the plaintiff is estopped to maintain the action. Estoppel is a rule of evidence by which a man is precluded from alleging or denying a fact, in consequence of his own previous action, inaction, allegation, or denial which has led another to so conduct himself that, if the truth were established, that other would be damaged. 3 Black. Com. 308. But appellant contends that the defendant's motion for nonsuit was insufficient, in that the motion did not state the particular grounds upon which it was based, and should therefore have been denied. Immediately after the plaintiff rested her case, defendant's counsel moved for a nonsuit in this language:

"At this time we move to dismiss the action on the ground that the plaintiff has not made a prima facie case as to his title. He has shown that the deed was made from a man named Griffin to the petitioner, and it has been conveyed away, and the petitioner got the money for it, and never, at any time challenged the transaction."

While not in terms stating that the ground of the motion was that the evidence showed that the plaintiff was estopped to assert that she was the owner of the property, the statement was sufficiently definite to inform counsel on the other side and the court that this was the basis of the motion. It is apparent that this was the understanding of the trial court. Before granting the motion to review the facts constituting the estoppel, the court concluded by saying:

"I do not think that she can be heard, in this action, to claim a better title than the one in whom she has permitted the title to vest. I think the motion for a nonsuit should be granted."

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; WORKS, J.

54 Cal. App. 251

JOHNSON v. DAVIDSON et al. (Civ. 3927.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Sept. 15, 1921. Opinion of Supreme Court in Bank Denying Hearing Nov. 14, 1921.)

1. Trusts — 89(1)—Evidence held to sustain finding of trust in land paid for in part with plaintiff's earnings.

In action against heirs and estate of deceased attorney to establish joint ownership in real property, in that plaintiff's earnings as employee in deceased's office had been invested therein, evidence held to sustain finding that a one-half interest in the property was held in trust for the plaintiff by deceased.

2. Contracts — 138(5)—Action lies to recover property acquired with funds derived through illegal contract.

Where plaintiff and an attorney enter into an illegal contract of partnership, plaintiff not being an attorney, recovery can nevertheless be had by plaintiff of money derived from the business and invested jointly in real estate for the joint benefit of both parties, such an action not being one to enforce the illegal contract, but to establish title to property acquired thereunder.

3. Evidence — 271(17)—Self-serving declarations of deceased party not admissible.

Declarations of a person since deceased, but in support of his own interests, and tending to show that property belonged exclusively to him, are not admissible in favor of those who claimed rights which the declarations would maintain.

On Hearing in Supreme Court.

4. Attorney and client — 30—Agreement by attorney to pay layman fixed percentage of fees held not to create illegal partnership to practice law.

It is lawful for an attorney to employ a layman to take charge of the management of the work to be done in his office, to the extent of drawing pleadings and other papers, and to agree to pay such person for such services a fixed percentage of the receipts of the attorney from his clients; such an agreement not being one to become partners in the practice of law.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Bernard J. Flood, Judge.

Action by Lygia Johnson against Winn W. Davidson, as administrator of the estate of W. W. Davidson, deceased, and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed in District Court of Appeal, and hearing denied in Supreme Court.

McWilliams & Hatfield and Paul A. McCarthy, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

Sullivan & Sullivan and Theo. J. Roche, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from a judgment declaring that a certain parcel of real property situate in the city and county of San Francisco was held by W. W. Davidson at the time of his death for the joint benefit of himself and the plaintiff, each owning an undivided one-half interest therein.

The defendants and appellants are the sons of the deceased, one of them being the administrator of the estate. It is their contention that the contract with Davidson relied upon by the plaintiff to establish her claim to the said undivided interest constituted a partnership to practice law, and that, since the plaintiff was not an attorney at law, the contract was contrary to public policy, and void, thence affording no foundation for her claim. They also contend that the court erred in refusing to admit certain evidence.

W. W. Davidson for more than 20 years preceding his death was a duly admitted practicing attorney, devoting his attention principally to divorce litigation. From January, 1904, to January, 1913, he was a teacher in one of the public night schools of San Francisco. He had for many years been addicted to the excessive use of intoxicating liquors, which habit manifested itself periodically, and at such times the volume of his law business would be seriously diminished. In January, 1904, he was enjoying one of these lapses, which had lasted for about three months, during which time he had not visited his office, and had incurred debts amounting to about $2,000. At this time he encountered the plaintiff. She had been one of his pupils in the public school, and in the conversation which ensued she informed Davidson that she had been following the occupation of nurse, but was at that time disengaged, and she asked him if he could help her get employment. He replied that he needed a clerk in his office. To her objection that she knew nothing of stenography or typewriting or the business of a law office, he insisted that she could learn the duties of the position he offered her. Upon this phase of the case the plaintiff herself testified as follows:

"We went down to the office. We talked about the work, and he told me what it was, what kind of work he did, and his price for it. We talked a lot about his desire to get away from drink. I told him about the experience I had had in nursing, and about how I had taken care of men who had been addicted to drink, and that I thought if he would try we could soon get him to quit drinking, and he said if I could do that it would be a great thing for him. He gave me the keys to the office that night and told me to come the following morning, and to do any service in the morning that he would tell me, and that he would try to tell me what kind of work to do and what to do as my services in the office; I was to do anything that he wanted me to do, and to help him break away from drink. As compensation for that I was to have one-eighth, after the expenses of the office were paid, of all the income that came in from the office. I was to keep the office open evenings while he was at school, where he was a teacher, and the salary from the school was to be included in the money taken in at the office."

The plaintiff learned typewriting, and shortly after her employment, having progressed sufficiently to do so, she prepared complaints, answers, cross-complaints, demurrers, orders for and affidavits of publication of summons in divorce cases, and the like, bills of sale and bankruptcy petitions. She frequently consulted with clients about divorces, ascertained the facts, and prepared the necessary pleadings. While not admitted to practice, she became very proficient in the particular work of that office, leaving little for Davidson to do but the actual conduct of proceedings in court. In addition to the performance of these duties, she rehabilitated Davidson and restored him to his earning capacity. At the beginning of her employment her share of the profits of the business was but $12 a month, but her income increased as time went by, and at the end of 1905, she was receiving as her share of the income from $75 to $80 per month. In December, 1905, she had several conversations with Davidson with regard to an increase of her interest in the income of the business. Realizing the prosperous condition of his business, and the volume and character of the work done by the plaintiff, he agreed that she should have one-half the net income of the business, including his salary as school teacher, after deducting therefrom the expenses of the office and the personal living expenses of both parties. Four months later it was agreed by plaintiff and Davidson that their savings should be invested by Davidson in real property, each to own a one-half interest in any property so purchased, and it was under this arrangement that he used their surplus earnings in the purchase of the property described in the complaint. The deceased frequently referred to the plaintiff as his partner in the law business and in the ownership of said real property.

[1] Our examination of the record in this case leads us to the conclusion that the evidence abundantly sustains the findings of the trial court that an undivided one-half interest in the real property in question was held in trust for the plaintiff by the deceased.

[2] Where, as in this state, a license or certificate is required by statute as a condition for one to practice law, an agreement to engage in such practice without a license or certificate is ordinarily held illegal and void. 13 C. J. 423. Part of the services performed by the plaintiff in the office of Davidson were of a legal nature, and constituted the practice of law. It is not essential that one actually participated in the trial of causes in order to practice law. To draw up pleadings and findings, to examine witnesses, and prepare cases for trial, as the evidence shows the plaintiff did, is to practice law. But, however this may be, and conceding that the business arrangement, whether it constituted a partnership or not, was contrary to public policy, and void, still we think the plaintiff was entitled to recover. If the original contract between the plaintiff and Davidson were void, as claimed, nevertheless, that agreement having been performed, and the money derived therefrom having been collected and invested in real property by Davidson for the joint benefit of both parties, this action to enforce a trust as to the plaintiff's one-half interest in such property against the successors of Davidson cannot be affected by any illegality in the original agreement, through the performance of which the purchase price of the property was acquired. It cannot be doubted that courts will refuse to enforce contracts which have for their object some act which is contrary to law or sound public policy. But where, as here, the action is not to enforce such contract, but is to establish title to property acquired under such a contract, the action may be maintained. The difference between the enforcement of an illegal contract and a suit to recover property acquired with funds derived through such a contract has always, been recognized by the courts. In Andrews v. New Orleans Brewing Ass'n, 74 Miss. 362, 20 South. 837, 60 Am. St. Rep. 509, it is held that one in possession of the gains and profits of an executed transaction cannot retain them as against another party thereto on the ground that the business which produced the fund was illegal. In the case of Brooks v. Martin, 2 Wall. 70, 17 L. Ed. 732, it is held that, after a partnership contract, admittedly against public policy has been carried out, and money contributed by one of the partners had passed into other forms of property, a partner in whose hands the profits are cannot refuse to account for and divide them on the ground of the illegal character of the original contract.

In De Leon v. Trevino, 49 Tex. 89, 30 Am. Rep. 101, it is held that, although a contract may be illegal, it does not follow that it is illegal or immoral for the parties to it after its completion to fairly settle and adjust the profits and losses which have resulted from it. The vice of the contract does not enter into such settlement. It appears to be well settled that after an illegal contract has been executed one party in possession of all the gains resulting from the illicit transactions will not be permitted to interpose the objection that the business which produced the fund was one conducted in violation of law. Gilliam v. Brown, 43 Miss. 641; McDonald v. Lund, 13 Wash. 412, 43 Pac.

348. The doctrine is thus stated in 13 Corpus Juris, p. 505:

"Certainly, when the profits of an illegal transaction have been actually divided or invested in other property, the illegality of the other transaction in no way affects the title to such property or subsequent dealings in regard to it."

See, also Wayman Inv. Co. v. Wessinger, 13 Cal. App. 108, 108 Pac. 1022; Cal. Cured Fruit Ass'n v. Stelling, 141 Cal. 714, 75 Pac. 320; Blochman v. F. G. Invest. Co., 177 Cal. 762, 171 Pac. 943.

In the case at bar, the funds of the plaintiff, derived, it is true, from a transaction not legally enforceable were invested in the real property for her benefit as the result of an agreement collateral to and independent of the illegal contract and under the authorities cited this action to enforce the trust is clearly maintainable.

[3] It is also claimed that the court committed error in excluding evidence of statements made by Davidson tending to show that the property belonged exclusively to him. The rulings of the court in this behalf were justified by established rules of evidence.

"Declarations of a person, since deceased, * * * but in support of his own interest, are not admissible in evidence in favor of those who claim rights which the declarations would maintain." Poorman v. Miller, 44 Cal. 270.

This rule was approved in the case of Hausman v. Hausling, 78 Cal. 286, 20 Pac. 570, where, in referring to the admission in evidence of certain letters written by the defendant, the court said:

"It is entirely clear that the letters were not admissible in evidence, and that the objection to them should have been sustained. A litigant is not permitted to strengthen his case by his own declarations, whether written or verbal. They may be used against him, but not for him."

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, P. J.; RICHARDS, J.

Opinion of Supreme Court in Bank
Denying Hearing.

PER CURIAM, [4] The petition for a rehearing in the Supreme Court after decision of the District Court of Appeal in this cause is denied.

That portion of the opinion of the District Court of Appeal declaring that the services performed by the plaintiff in the law office of the deceased, W. W. Davidson, constituted the practice of law is, in our opinion, not warranted by the record. It is lawful for an attorney to employ any person to take charge of the management of the work to be done in his office to the extent of drawing pleadings and papers necessary to be drawn by such attorney in his practice, and to agree to pay such person for such services a fixed percentage of the receipts of the attorney from his clients. Such an agreement is not an agreement to become partners in the practice of law. It is an agreement to hire the person as an assistant or clerk in the office, the wages being fixed by reference to the fixed percentage of the receipts of the office. The evidence and the findings show, and the findings declare, that this was the relation between the plaintiff and the deceased attorney. The additional agreement, whether made at the same time as the other or subsequently, that the attorney should invest the money due to the plaintiff for such services in land was in no wise against public policy. This is decisive of the case, and the discussion upon the subject of the effect of the supposed partnership should be disregarded. There was no partnership for the practice of law, or any other partnership relation between the parties.

The statement to the effect above set forth was not necessary to the decision of the District Court affirming the judgment, and we therefore allow that judgment to stand.

SHAW, C. J., and WILBUR, LENNON, SLOANE, and SHURTLEFF, JJ., concur.

54 Cal. App. 568

ROSS v. McCARTHY. (Civ. 3999.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Oct. 17, 1921.)

1. Appeal and error ⇨907(3)—Every essential fact presumed proven on appeal on judgment roll alone.

On appeal from a judgment on the judgment roll alone, every fact essential to support the court's finding and judgment must be presumed to have been proved.

2. Appeal and error ⇨907(3)—Findings construed to uphold rather than defeat judgment on appeal upon judgment roll.

On appeal on the judgment roll alone the findings will receive such construction as will uphold rather than defeat the judgment, and, whenever from the facts found other facts may be inferred which support the judgment, such inference will be deemed to have been made by the trial court and will be followed by the appellate tribunal.

3. Appeal and error ⇨907(3)—No reversal on findings alone unless affirmatively showing improper rendition of judgment.

Judgment will not be reversed on the findings alone unless they affirmatively show that no such judgment could properly have been rendered.

4. Trial ⇨395(2)—Finding held sufficient to support judgment.

In action for the contract price of berries sold at an alleged price of $125 per ton, a finding that defendant agreed to pay "$75 per ton and the Berry Growers' raise" held sufficient to support the judgment based on price of $125 per ton, in view of a stipulation as to the price paid by a certain berry growers' association.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Thomas C. Denny, Judge.

Action upon an account stated by I. D. Ross against John W. McCarthy, Jr., doing business under the name and style of the Green Valley Canning Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Paul A. McCarthy, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Geary & Geary and Jos. P. Berry, all of Santa Rosa, for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. The defendant appeals from a judgment against him in an action brought by plaintiff, and as assignee of nine others, to recover from defendant balances alleged to be due on account from defendant to plaintiff and his assignors for berries sold. The appeal is on the judgment roll alone. Each of the ten causes of action set out in the complaint is in the form of a common count for berries sold and delivered to the defendant at the contract price of $125 per ton, with appropriate allegations as to the amounts paid and unpaid, by reason of each particular transaction. The answer traversed the allegations of the complaint, other than admitting that the defendant purchased berries during the year 1918 from plaintiff and his various assignors for the price of $75 per ton, and alleged that defendant paid that amount for all the berries purchased. Judgment was entered for the plaintiff in accordance with each of the counts in the complaint.

Appellant seeks a reversal on the ground that the findings are too indefinite and uncertain to sustain the conclusions of law or the judgment. His point may be illustrated by referring to the finding as to the first cause of action, which relates to plaintiff's own transaction with the defendant. It is as follows:

"That during the year 1918 plaintiff delivered to the defendant at Graton, in Sonoma county, Cal., 16,722 pounds of loganberries and 10,559 pounds of blackberries; that the defendant agreed to pay to the plaintiff therefor $75 per ton and the Berry Growers' raise; that for the crop of blackberries and loganberries during the year 1918 the Sebastopol Berry Growers' Association paid for similar berries in the same locality as hereinabove referred to for the crop of blackberries raised during 1918 the sum of $123 per ton, and for loganberries $125 per ton; that defendant has paid to plaintiff for all of said berries the sum of $75 per ton and no more; that there now remains due and unpaid from the defendant to plaintiff on account of said berries so delivered the sum of $401.32 for the loganberries delivered as aforesaid, and the sum of $263.97 for the said blackberries delivered as aforesaid."

[1-3] Appellant argues that the finding that defendant agreed to pay plaintiff $75 per ton "and the Berry Growers' raise" is meaningless, and that it is not helped out by the further finding as to what the Sebastopol Berry Growers' Association paid for berries in the same locality during the season. We agree with the appellant that the finding is not as explicit as it should be, but on appeal from a judgment on a judgment roll alone every fact essential to support the court's finding and judgment must be presumed to have been proved. The findings will receive such construction as will uphold, rather than defeat the judgment, and whenever from the facts found by the court other facts may be inferred which support the judgment, such inference will be deemed to have been made by the trial court, and will be followed by the appellate tribunal. Judgment will not be reversed on the findings alone unless they show affirmatively that no such judgment could properly have been rendered. Burnham v. Abrahamson, 21 Cal. App. 248, 131 Pac. 338; Breeze v. Brooks, 97 Cal. 72, 31 Pac. 742, 22 L. R. A. 257; Krasky v. Wollpert, 134 Cal. 338, 66 Pac. 309; Semple v. Cook, 50 Cal. 26.

[4] It is alleged in the various counts that the contract price for the berries was $125 per ton. The court found that the defendant agreed to pay "$75 per ton and the Berry Growers' raise." There appears in the judgment roll a stipulation to the effect that the Sebastopol Berry Growers paid $125 per ton for berries during the season of 1918. From this stipulation and from the findings it is very apparent that the parties to the action, and the court, considered the amount paid by the Sebastopol Berry Growers' Association during 1918 as a material fact in determining the rights of the parties in the transaction. There is no difficulty in inferring that the defendant agreed to pay $75 per ton plus the difference between that sum and the amount paid by the Sebastopol Berry Growers for the season of 1918 crop. The two amounts added together make the price $125 per ton as alleged.

What we have already said disposes of appellant's contention that there is a fatal variance between the pleading that there was a contract price of $125 per ton and the finding that defendant agreed to pay plaintiff $75 and the Berry Growers' raise. Under the facts found the allegation and the finding amount to one and the same thing.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; KERRIGAN, J.

54 Cal. App. 565

KOHN v. RUPLEY et al. (Civ. 2341.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 15, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 12, 1921.)

Executors and administrators §513(11)—Order settling claim against estate, and allowing executor's account, held conclusive as against defense of limitation.

Where the owner of a note and mortgage presented his claim thereon in the mortgagor's estate three months prior to bar by limitations, and the court allowed the claim a few days after it had apparently become barred, in the holder's subsequent action thereon, held, in view of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1628, 1635-1637, that the order settling and allowing the executor's account in which the claim sued on was duly reported is conclusive on the defendants, and the claim is not barred.

Appeal from Superior Court, El Dorado County; George H. Thompson, Judge.

Action by N. L. Kohn against John B. Rupley, as executor of William Rupley, deceased, and others. From judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Charles A. Swisler, of Sacramento, and Abe Darlington, of Placerville, for appellants.

Aitken, Glensor, Clewe & Van Dine, of San Francisco, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. Plaintiff, being the owner of a promissory note and mortgage executed by the testator, presented his claim for the amount due thereon more than three months prior to the time the same would have become barred by the statute of limitations. The executor and the judge of the superior court allowed the claim a few days after it had apparently become barred. Thereafter, as required by law, the executor rendered "a full account and report of his administration." The report contained a list of claims allowed and filed, among which was plaintiff's claim, with a statement of the name of the claimant, the amount of the claim, that it was secured by mortgage, and the dates of presentation and allowance thereof. After due notice and hearing the account was by the court "allowed, settled, and approved." Thereafter this suit was brought, and the defendants pleaded the statute of limitations as a defense thereto. The court rendered judgment for plaintiff, reforming the mortgage and foreclosing the same as so reformed.

The only question presented by the appeal is whether the allowance of the account as stated is a conclusive adjudication against the defendants as to the validity of the claim upon which this suit is based. The question was answered in the affirmative in Estate of McDougald, 146 Cal. 191, 79 Pac. 878, and Kowalsky v. Superior Court, 13 Cal. App. 218, 109 Pac. 158, where the same issue was presented. Appellants contend that these cases have been overruled by the later decisions in Haub v. Leggett, 160 Cal. 494, 117 Pac. 556, where it is said that "an allowed claim against an estate does not attain to the dignity and force of an absolute judgment until, upon the settlement of an account, an order is made directing the executor to pay it," and Estate of Bell, 168 Cal. 258, 141 Pac. 1179, where similar language is used. With equal logic it might be said, however, that the cases last cited have been overruled by Estate of Hellier, 169 Cal. 80, 145 Pac. 1008, wherein it is said that—

"Until a claim has been passed upon on settlement of an account or rendition of an exhibit, or in making a decree of sale, * * * it may be contested by the heirs or legatees."

The decisions in the five cases cited are not inconsistent. The first two decide the identical question here raised. The others decide only that the allowance of a claim by the executor and the judge of the superior court, "is not the equivalent of an ordinary judgment." It is what is decided, and not what is said, in an opinion which is controlling. In Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 157 U. S. 429, 15 Sup. Ct. 673, 39 L. Ed. 817, it is said:

"This court, and other courts organized under the common law, has never held itself bound by any part of an opinion, in any case, which was not needful to the ascertainment of the right or title in question between the parties."

The executor is required to "render a full account and report of his administration." Code Civ. Proc. § 1628.

"Any person interested in the estate may appear and file his exceptions in writing to the account, and may contest the same." Section 1635.

"All matters, including allowed claims not passed upon on the settlement of any former account, or on rendering an exhibit, or on making a decree of sale, may be contested by the heirs for cause shown." Section 1636.

"The settlement of the account and allowance thereof by the court, or upon appeal, is conclusive against all persons in any way interested in the estate." Section 1637.

From the foregoing Code provisions and the cases cited, it seems clear that the order settling and allowing the executor's account, in which the claim sued on was duly reported, is conclusive upon the defendants.

Appellants urge that the note on which the claim against the estate is based was barred by the statute of limitations when the claim was allowed, and that therefore the court was without jurisdiction to allow it.

"The jurisdiction of a question is the lawful power to enter upon a consideration of and to decide it," and "it is not limited to authority to render a correct decision, but * * * includes the power to decide wrong as well as right." Ex parte Moran, 144 Fed. 594, 75 C. C. A. 396.

This court cannot infer from an inspection of the claim that it was in fact barred. Section 1499 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides:

"When a claim is presented to a judge for his allowance, he may, in his discretion, examine the claimant and others, on oath, and hear any legal evidence touching the validity of the claim."

From legal evidence, the judge may have determined that the maker was absent from the state, as in the case of Scott Stamp, etc., Co., Ltd., v. Leake, 9 Cal. App. 511, 99 Pac. 731, for such length of time as to prevent the bar of the statute, or other facts may have been proven to avoid the apparent limitation.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: BURNETT, J.; HART, J.

54 Cal. App. 537

FIRST NAT. BANK OF ESCONDIDO v. WILLIAMS et al. (Civ. 3392.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 14, 1921.)

1. Husband and wife — 232(3)—Finding wife liable as maker and not surety sustained.

In an action on a note brought against a husband and wife as principals, evidence held to sustain a finding that the wife signed as comaker, notwithstanding evidence offered by the wife as permitted by Civ. Code, § 2832, tending to show that she was a surety merely.

2. Bills and notes — 139(3)—Cancellation and delivery of note held consideration for renewal note.

The cancellation and delivery of a note to one person is a sufficient consideration for a new note given as a revival of the first and to secure an extension of time of payment of the debt.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; S. M. Marsh, Judge.

Action by the First National Bank of Escondido against C. L. Williams and another. From judgment for plaintiff and from order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

L. E. Dadmun, of San Diego, for appellants.

Bischoff & Thompson, of San Diego, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. Judgment was rendered against the defendants, from which and an order denying a motion for a new trial they appeal. The points to be considered as alleged by appellants are: First, the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings of the court that Mina W. Williams signed the note as principal and comaker and for a valuable consideration; and, second, the right to have findings presented and served upon the opposing counsel five days before the same are signed by the judge.

Concerning the second proposition, we dismiss appellants' contention without passing upon its merits because it nowhere appears in the record on appeal that the findings were not served upon defendants' counsel, as provided by law. The only information which we have to that effect is an assertion contained in appellants' brief. However, it may be said that the provision of section 634 of the Code of Civil Procedure here cited has been held to be directory only. Amundson v. Shafer, 36 Cal. App. 398, 172 Pac. 173.

[1] The other ground urged must be determined upon the rule that the findings of the trial court will not be disturbed where there is a substantial conflict in the evidence. We are asked to say that the evidence showed Mina W. Williams to be a surety and not a principal. Upon this issue the court found:

"That the said defendant, Mina W. Williams, executed and delivered to said plaintiff said note as maker or principal, for a valuable consideration, and not as a surety."

There is no doubt but that she, with her husband, signed the notes sued upon. From this fact a strong inference arose that she signed as maker. But section 2832 of the Civil Code provides:

"One who appears to be a principal, whether by the terms of a written instrument or otherwise, may show that he is in fact a surety, except as against persons who have acted on the faith of his apparent character and principal."

To make the showing thus permitted, C. L. Williams testified that one Hall, representing the First National Bank of Escondido, came to the Williams' house and asked for additional security upon the note in question, which was then due and unpaid; that Hall suggested "that I have Mrs. Williams sign this note as surety"; that Williams then told Hall he would see about it and let him know. L. E. Dadmun, counsel for the defendant, testified to several conversations with a Mr. Thompson, an attorney representing the plaintiff. Dadmun's evidence, which bears upon the capacity in which Mrs. Williams signed the note, was to the effect that Thompson told him that Hall said if Williams would sign a note and get Mrs. Williams to sign it with him as surety, the bank would agree to an extension; that Dadmun told Mrs. Williams that Thompson said the bank would not bring suit, but would extend the note from time to time if she would sign as surety with Mr. Williams.

As opposed to this testimony, Thompson took the stand on behalf of the plaintiff, and denied that in the conversation related by Dadmun anything was said to the effect that Mrs. Williams should sign the note as a surety and not as a principal. He testified, on the contrary, that what was said was that the bank would "accept a new note."

As to the alleged conversation between Williams and Hall, it is not shown that the statement attributed to Hall was even communicated to Mrs. Williams. Upon this conflicting evidence, the finding of the trial court will not be disturbed.

[2] The claim is also made by appellants that there was no consideration for the note upon which suit was brought. There is no merit in this contention. The cancellation and delivery of the note to one person is a sufficient consideration for a new note given as a revival of the first and to secure an extension of time of payment of the debt. Hobson v. Hassett, 76 Cal. 203, 18 Pac. 320, 9 Am. St. Rep. 193; Miller & Lux v. Dunlap, 28 Cal. App. 315, 152 Pac. 309.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WINLAYSON, P. J.; WORKS, J.

54 Cal. App. 528

LUITWIELER v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al. (Civ. 3765.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Oct. 13, 1921.)

1. Appeal and error ☞71(3)—Certiorari ☞5(1)—Appeal lies from restraining order, and hence certiorari does not lie.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 963, allowing appeal from an order "granting or dissolving an injunction," a restraining order in its effect is an injunction, though temporary, for the statute makes no distinction between temporary and permanent injunctions, and the only remedy of a party against whom an injunction pendente lite has been granted is by appeal from the order or a trial of the action on the merits, and, under section 1068, certiorari does not lie.

2. Appeal and error ☞71(3), 460(2)—Appeal allowed for mandatory "injunction"; appeal stays operation of mandatory injunction.

Notwithstanding Code Civ. Proc. § 525, defining an "injunction" as a writ or order requiring refraining from a particular act, an order in a divorce suit requiring defendant husband to vacate the wife's residence and to deliver up the keys thereto was a mandatory injunction, so that the order was appealable under section 963, and an appeal from it would stay its operation so far as it was mandatory in character.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Injunction.]

Application by Samuel W. Luitwieler for certiorari to review an order of the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the County of Los Angeles, Hon. Thos. O. Toland, judge thereof, in an action by Sophia C. Luitwieler against petitioner for divorce. Writ quashed, and proceeding dismissed.

Taylor & Forgy, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Bradner W. Lee, Bradner W. Lee, Jr., and Kenyon F. Lee, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CONREY, P. J. In an action of divorce wherein the petitioner, Samuel W. Luitwieler, is defendant, respondent superior court made an order wherein, among other things, the defendant was required "to forthwith vacate the residence of plaintiff" at a stated address in the city of Los Angeles; also to "deliver to counsel for plaintiff the key to the front door of said premises and any other keys that will give defendant ingress to said premises or any part or portion thereof."

Being of the opinion that respondent court exceeded its jurisdiction in the premises, this court issued the writ of review as demanded by petitioner. Inadvertently we assumed that the order in question, being an order pendente lite and made prior to judgment in the action, was an order from which there is no right of appeal. Respondents now move that the writ be vacated and the proceedings dismissed upon the ground that the order of which petitioner complains is an appealable order.

[1] An appeal may be taken from an order "granting or dissolving an injunction." Code Civ. Proc. § 963. A restraining order in its effect is an injunction, and is an injunction though temporary. The statute, in giving the right of appeal from an order granting an injunction, makes no distinction between temporary and permanent injunctions. Laam v. McLaren, 28 Cal. App. 632, 635, 153 Pac. 985. The only remedy of a party against whom an injunction pendente lite has been granted, "if aggrieved by the injunction issued, is an appeal from that order, or a trial of the action on the merits in the superior court." United Railroads v. Superior Court, 170 Cal. 755, 766, 151 Pac. 129, 134 (Ann. Cas. 1916E, 199).

"It has been uniformly held by this court, in accord with the provisions of section 1068 of the Code of Civil Procedure, that if a party has the right of appeal from an order in excess of jurisdiction, he cannot have such order reviewed in certiorari proceedings." Hildebrand v. Superior Court, 173 Cal. 86, 89, 159 Pac. 147, 149.

[2] Petitioner contends that the foregoing decisions are not applicable in the present case for the reason that the order complained of is not an injunction referring to the definition of an injunction as stated in section 525, Code of Civil Procedure, wherein it is stated that "an injunction is a writ or order requiring a person to refrain from a particular act." Counsel say that the alleged order is not an injunction; that "it is in the nature of a mandamus, or of a judgment in ejectment, or probably an order of arrest, in that it is an order commanding an affirmative personal action on the part of the defendant." The decisions relating to this subject recognize the power of the courts in this state to grant mandatory injunctions.

"When the character of an injunction is subjected to review before a higher tribunal, that tribunal * * * will not condemn an injunction even if it be mandatory in character; for injunctions of this character, when they afford the only adequate means of relief to a petitioner, are steadily growing in favor." United Railroads v. Superior Court, 172 Cal. 80, 87, 155 Pac. 463.

It thus appears that the order sought to be reviewed herein is an appealable order; and, if it were necessary to go farther, it might be pointed out that the appeal, if taken, would stay the operation of the order in question in so far as it is mandatory in character. For in the case last cited (172 Cal. 82, 155 Pac. 464) the court said:

"It is well settled, indeed conceded, that an appeal does not stay the operation of a preventive injunction. Equally well settled is it that an appeal does stay the operation of a mandatory injunction."

The writ is quashed, and the proceeding is dismissed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; JAMES, J.

(54 Cal. App. 589)

STEERE v. BARNET, Sheriff, et al.
(Civ. 4005.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Oct. 18, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 15, 1921.)

1. Husband and wife ⚭262(1)—Presumption that property conveyed to husband and wife as tenants in common may be overcome.

The presumption under Civ. Code, § 164, which provided in 1908 that property conveyed to a married woman and her husband should be presumed conveyed to them as tenants in common, was only a rebuttable presumption which might be overthrown by evidence, showing that the property was community property.

2. Husband and wife ⚭254—Property paid for out of earnings after marriage held community property, notwithstanding form of conveyance.

Under Civ. Code, § 687, defining community property, land purchased and paid for out of the husband's earnings after marriage, and occupied as a home, was community property, though conveyed to the husband and wife so as to create a presumption, under section 164, that they took it as tenants in common.

3. Husband and wife ⚭265½, New, vol. 14A Key-No. Series—Wife's return of inventory held not to estop her to assert community character of property.

That an executrix returned an inventory of her husband's estate, setting out a one-half interest in the land as belonging to the estate, did not estop her from asserting that the land was community property where the return was made by her attorneys in reliance on the form of a deed without understanding the real nature of her interest, especially where the error had been called to the attention of the probate court and the land set apart to her as a homestead.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Fred V. Wood, Judge.

Action by Minnie A. Steere against Frank A. Barnet, Sheriff of Alameda County, and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Cushing & Cushing, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Walter H. Linforth, of San Francisco, for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. This is an action to enjoin the sheriff of Alameda county, and the First National Bank of San Francisco, an execution creditor, from selling, under execution sale certain real property claimed to be exempt by reason of an alleged declaration of homestead, the validity of which is the only issue in the case. Plaintiff obtained a judgment, and defendants have appealed.

On October 8, 1898, Jesse E. Steere, now deceased, and Minnie A. Steere, the plaintiff, were married, and on June 24, 1908, were husband and wife. On that date, by deed designating "Jesse E. Steere and Minnie A. Steere, his wife, of the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, parties of the second part," they acquired the real property here in question. The plaintiff did not know that she was named as one of the grantees in the deed until some time later, when in conversation with her husband he informed her that the property was in her name, as well as in his. A dwelling house was erected on the property. Both the lot and the house were paid for with the earnings of the husband after marriage. The parties continued to live on the premises, and there raised their family. On July 12, 1915, Jesse Steere, the husband, then residing on the premises with his family, filed a declaration of homestead. Thereafter until his death, which occurred on the 16th day of September, 1918, he so resided, and following his decease the family has continued to live on the premises. On April 7, 1920, the First National Bank of San Francisco, one of the defendants here, obtained a judgment against this plaintiff on a promissory note for the sum of $2,785.59, and costs of suit. Thereafter the bank caused a writ of execution to be issued, and placed in the hands of the defendant Barnet, sheriff of Alameda county. He levied on the homestead, and advertised it for sale. This action was instituted by the plaintiff to enjoin the sheriff from proceeding under the execution, and to quiet her title to the property.

The only issue on the appeal is whether or not the evidence is sufficient to justify the findings of the trial court that the property was acquired, and held until the death of the husband, as community property.

[1, 2] Appellants rely on the presumption laid down in section 164 of the Civil Code, which, at the time of the execution of the deed to respondent and her husband, provided that, whenever any property was conveyed to a married woman and her husband, the presumption arose that the married woman took the part conveyed to her as a tenant in common, unless a different intention was expressed in the instrument of conveyance. From the fact of such a conveyance, however, only a rebuttable presumption arose that any portion of the property was the separate property of the wife. Estate of Young, 123 Cal. 337, 346, 55 Pac. 1011; Fanning v. Green, 156 Cal. 279, 282, 104 Pac. 308; Volquards v. Myers, 23 Cal. App. 500, 504, 138 Pac. 963. In this case the presumption was disputed and overthrown by other evidence amply sufficient to justify the finding of the court that the property was community property when designated as a homestead. Civ. Code, § 687; Fulkerson v. Stiles, 156 Cal. 703, 706, 105 Pac. 966, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 181; Fanning v. Green, supra; Hammond v. McCollough, 159 Cal. 639, 643, 115 Pac. 216.

[3] In the course of the administration of her husband's estate, plaintiff, as executrix of the will of the deceased, returned an inventory in which she set out a one-half interest in the property as belonging to the estate. The explanation given by her is that she took the deed, by which the property was conveyed to herself and husband, to her attorneys, who, without explanation or inquiry, returned it as indicated, not understanding the real nature of her interest. The error in the inventory was called to the attention of the probate court, which thereafter made an order setting apart the property to the plaintiff as a homestead. Under the plain circumstances of the case the plaintiff was not estopped from asserting the community nature of the property by the statement in the inventory. Dean v. Parker, 88 Cal. 283, 288, 26 Pac. 91.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; KERRIGAN, J.

54 Cal. App. 586

MATSON et al. v. FORTUNA HIGH SCHOOL DIST. et al. (Civ. 2329.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 17, 1921.)

Costs  48—Defendant nonsuited on his motion entitled to costs.

A defendant as to whom a nonsuit is granted on his motion is entitled to costs in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 581, authorizing dismissal on defendant's motion when plaintiff's proof is insufficient to take the case to the jury, and section 1024, authorizing allowance of costs to defendant upon a judgment in his favor in certain proceedings.

Appeal from Superior Court, Humboldt County; George D. Murray, Judge.

Action by Isaac Matson and another against the Fortuna High School District and others. From an order denying a motion to strike out a memorandum of costs as to certain defendants to whom a nonsuit was granted, plaintiffs appeal. Modified and affirmed.

Henry L. Ford and T. H. Selvage, both of Eureka, for appellants.

H. C. Nelson, of Eureka, for respondents.

FINCH, P. J. This appeal is from an order denying plaintiffs' motion to strike out the memorandum of costs of certain defendants and taxing said costs at the sum of $82.65. At the close of plaintiffs' case the court granted a nonsuit as to those defendants, and judgment was entered in their favor for their costs.

Appellants contend that a defendant is not entitled to recover his costs on the granting of his motion for a nonsuit. Section 581 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides:

"An action may be dismissed, or a judgment of nonsuit entered * * * by the court, upon motion of the defendant, when upon the trial the plaintiff fails to prove a sufficient case for the jury."

Section 1024 provides:

"Costs must be allowed of course, to the defendant upon a judgment in his favor in the actions mentioned in section ten hundred and twenty-two, and in special proceedings."

Under these provisions of the Code, the defendants were clearly entitled to costs. In Spinks v. Superior Court, 26 Cal. App. 793, 148 Pac. 798, it is held that when a plaintiff dismisses the action pursuant to section 581 of the Code of Civil Procedure the defendant is entitled to recover costs. No reason appears why a different rule should govern where a nonsuit is granted on motion of the defendant under the same section of the Code.

Respondents admit that the court, through inadvertence, allowed the defendants an item of costs in the sum of $2.50, to which they were not entitled, and consent that their costs be reduced accordingly.

The order appealed from is modified by reducing the amount taxed as costs to the extent of $2.50, and, as so modified, the order is affirmed, the respondents to recover costs of appeal.

We concur: BURNETT, J.; PREWETT, Justice pro tem.

54 Cal. App. 495

MILLER v. OLIVER et al. (Civ. 2270.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 7, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 5, 1921.)

1. Wills ⚡629—Remainders construed as vested.

If the question be doubtful, the rule is to construe a devised estate as vested, rather than contingent.

2. Wills ⚡634(19)—Remainders held vested; "upon her death," "hold."

Under Civ. Code, §§ 694, 769, a devise to testator's wife L. "for and during the natural term of her life, and upon her death the remainder to" F. and H., "said remainder to be held by" F. and H. "from the time of the death of said" L. "as tenants in common," held to give F. and H. vested, not contingent, remainders, especially in view of the use of the present tense in the words of devise, which were, "I do hereby give and bequeath and deliver," and the presumption against intestacy; for the phrase "upon her death" is equivalent to the phrase, "upon the termination of the life estate," which refers to the time of enjoyment of the remainder, and not to the time when the estate became vested, and the primary significance of the word "hold," as it relates to real property, is to enjoy and possess.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Hold.]

3. Wills ⚡634(2)—Statute not render remainders contingent; "to take effect."

Civ. Code, § 780, providing that "when a remainder on an estate for life or for years is not limited on a contingency defeating or avoiding such precedent estate, it is to be deemed intended to take effect only on the death of the first taker, or the expiration, by lapse of time, of such term of years," does not nullify section 694, as to when remainders are deemed vested, for the phrase, "to take effect," means to become operative or executed, and implies not only a vested interest, but a present right of enjoyment.

4. Descent and distribution ⚡75—Title vests in heirs at death.

On death of an intestate, title to his real property immediately vests in his heirs, subject to the right of his administrator to possession of it for purposes of administration.

5. Descent and distribution ⚡90(1)—Heirs can maintain action for realty of intestate against any one but administrator.

The administrator's title and possession is not adverse to the heir, and under Code Civ. Proc. § 1452, the heir, subject to the right of the administrator to possession of intestate's real property for administration purposes, may sue to quiet his title and recover possession against any one but the administrator, even while the estate remains undistributed.

6. Quieting title ⚡1—Object of action stated.

The object of an action to quiet title is to finally settle and determine, as between the parties, all conflicting claims to the property in controversy, and to decree to each such interest or estate therein as he may be entitled to.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; D. M. Young, Judge.

Action by Charles Elmer Miller against J. E. Oliver, as administrator, and others. From a judgment of dismissal, plaintiff appeals. Reversed in part and affirmed in part.

A. H. Carpenter, of Stockton, for appellant.
Thomas S. Louttit, of Stockton, and S. K. King, of Escalon, for respondents.
George F. McNoble, of Stockton, amicus curiæ.

BURNETT, J. The action was to quiet title, and the court below sustained a general demurrer to the complaint, interposed by J. E. Oliver, as administrator, etc., and dismissed the action as to all the defendants. From this judgment of dismissal, the plaintiff appeals.

The allegations of the complaint are substantially as follows:

That on the 27th day of March, 1892, Charles Sperry was the owner of the real property involved, and on or about that date died testate. That thereafter his will was admitted to probate, and thereafter, after proper notice given and proceedings had, a decree of distribution in the matter of the estate of said Charles Sperry, deceased, was entered, under and by virtue of the terms of which it was provided "that there be, and hereby is, distributed to the said Lydia J. Sperry, for and during the natural term of her life, and upon her death the remainder to Frank Sperry and Harriet A. Miller, née Sperry, forever, said remainder to be held by said Frank Sperry and Harriet A. Miller from the time of the death of the said Lydia J. Sperry, as tenants in common, in equal proportions forever, of in and to all of the following described property, to wit: [Here follows description.]”

That Lydia J. Sperry, the surviving widow of Charles Sperry, is now living, occupying, and using the real property. That Harriet A. Miller, prior to the 12th day of July, 1917, intermarried with J. E. Oliver. That said Harriet A. Oliver died on or about the 12th day of July, 1917, and thereafter, and after proceedings had, J. E. Oliver was appointed the administrator of her estate. That on the 1st day of July, 1918, T. F. Emerson was appointed the administrator with the will annexed of the estate of Charles Sperry, deceased, “and that as such administrator he claims that, upon the death of the said Harriet A. Oliver during the existence of said life estate, and before the termination as aforesaid, her contingent remainder in said real property, constituting an undivided half thereof, reverted to the said estate of Charles Sperry, deceased.”

That Frank A. Sperry is the son of the said Charles Sperry, deceased, and the person designated in said decree of distribution as entitled to take the remaining undivided half of said real property and premises upon the death of his mother and the termination of her said life estate therein, and that he and the plaintiff herein are the sole heirs of the said Charles Sperry, deceased.

That the plaintiff is the grandson of the said Charles Sperry, deceased, and the sole and only child of the said Harriet A. Oliver, deceased, who was begotten by her and a former husband, and the nephew of the said Frank A. Sperry, and the only person entitled to take and receive his mother's said contingent remainder in all the said real property hereinafter described upon the termination of his said grandmother's life estate therein.

“That the said defendant J. E. Oliver, as the administrator of the estate of Harriet A. Oliver, deceased, claims that he, as such administrator of her estate, and as her surviving husband, is entitled to have said undivided one-half of all said real property and premises set off and distributed to him in the matter of the said estate of Harriet A. Oliver, deceased.

“That the said claims of the said defendant, J. E. Oliver are without merit, invalid, and void.

“That the said defendants J. E. Oliver and T. F. Emerson, as the administrators of their several respective estates, have not, nor has either of them, any interest or estate in or to said real property, or any part or portion thereof.”

It is also stated in the complaint by way of conclusion that:

“The remainder to be taken under the said decree of distribution after the expiration of said life estate by the said Harriet A. Oliver was a contingent one, and was not to take effect until the termination of the life estate of Lydia J. Sperry, and that no title ever vested in said Harriet A. Oliver, and upon her death an undivided one-half of the property vested in the plaintiff subject, to the life estate of said Lydia J. Sperry.”

Instead of simply alleging the ultimate fact of ownership, as is usual in actions of this character, the plaintiff has set out his asserted chain of title, and we are therefore called upon to determine from this exhibit what interest, if any, the plaintiff has in and to said property. It is admitted that the interest devised and distributed to said Harriet A. Miller is what is known as a “remainder” (section 769, Civ. Code), and the main discussion is over the question whether it is a vested or a contingent interest, appellant contending for the latter and respondent for the former view. If it was a contingent interest, it would lapse on the death of said Harriet A. Miller, and appellant claims that thereby it would become a vested interest in him as the sole heir of his mother. Respondent's position is that, being a vested interest, it was subject to administration and succession, and that, as administrator of his wife's estate, he is entitled to the possession of the property for purposes of administration, and that any claim of appellant to said property must be determined in the probate court.

[1] If the question be doubtful, the rule is to construe the estate as vested rather than contingent. However, under the decisions in this state it can hardly be said that there is any serious doubt as to the character of the estate that was created by said language. The case, indeed, is governed by the decision of this court in the case of In re De Vries, 17 Cal. App. 190, 119 Pac. 109, wherein similar language was construed as creating a vested estate. Therein the subject was exhaustively considered with a comprehensive review of the authorities, and it is hardly necessary to do more than refer to said decision as an authority for the conclusion of the lower court herein.

[2] In that case the language of a will was involved, and the particular estate was devised to the wife of the testator “for her natural life, the remainder thereof to my sons hereinafter named in proportions for the time and upon the conditions hereinafter expressed.” The corresponding language of the decree of distribution here is:

“There is hereby distributed to the said Lydia J. Sperry for and during the natural term of her life, and upon her death the remainder to the said Frank A. Sperry and Harriet A. Miller.”

The only substantial difference is that in the latter is found the phrase, “and upon her death.” But in the fourth clause of the De Vries will the testator used this language:

“Upon the termination of the life estate hereby created in my wife, Mary Jane De Vries, I give and devise unto my son,” etc.

"Upon the termination of the life estate" is, of course, exactly equivalent to the expression, "upon her death." While there is a slight difference in the structure of the sentences in the two cases, yet the language is properly construed as conveying the same import. It is shown in the De Vries decision that the phrase, "upon the termination of the life estate," refers to the time of enjoyment of the remainder, and not to the time when the estate becomes vested. The reasoning of the De Vries decision and the authorities therein cited are strictly applicable to the situation herein. We may recall that in said decision it was held that a consideration alone of said fourth clause of the will would lead to the conclusion that a vested remainder was created, it being said:

"Where, as here, words of devise refer to the present or are in the present tense, the words, 'upon the termination of the life estate,' or 'after' such termination, relate to the time of the possession or actual enjoyment of the interest so devised, and not to the time at which such interest shall vest or become in the donee a fixed right."

In the will in this case, also, there was a present devise of the remainder as well as of the particular estate, the language being: "I do hereby give and bequeath and deliver," etc. The decree following the will used, too, the present tense, "is distributed," etc.

In aid of this construction may be invoked also the presumption that the testator intended to devise the whole of the estate in said property. If it had been his purpose to create merely a contingent estate, he would quite naturally have made provision to prevent intestacy in case of the death of the remainderman prior to that of the life tenant.

Many authorities could be added to those cited in the De Vries decision, supra, but we content ourselves with a reference to 23 R. C. L. p. 500 et seq., for an instructive discussion of the "distinguishing characteristics of vested and contingent remainders," and to the opinion of the learned Chief Justice in the case of In re Estate of George W. Ritzman, deceased, 199 Pac. 783, and to Redman v. Hubbard, 140 Ky. 71, 130 S. W. 955, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 728, and an exhaustive note thereto in 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 728.

If it be true, as stated in the Ruling Case Law, that "a remainder is vested if, so long as it lasts, the only obstacle to the right of immediate possession by the remainderman is the existence of the preceding estates, or, again, a remainder is vested if it is subject to no condition precedent save the determination of the precedent estates," then it cannot be doubted that the estate created herein was a vested interest. Indeed this rule is embodied in section 694 of the Civil Code, and since at the time of the death of Charles Sperry and the distribution of his estate, Harriet A. Miller was in being, and would have a right to the immediate possession of the property "upon the ceasing of the intermediate or precedent interest," namely, the life estate of Lydia Sperry, the remainder immediately vested.

It may be added, that this presumption or inference is strengthened by a consideration of the language "said remainder to be held by said Frank Sperry and Harriet A. Miller from the time of the death of said Lydia J. Sperry, as tenants in common," etc. The primary significance of the word "hold," as it relates to real property, is to enjoy and possess. Cooke v. Doron, 215 Pa. 393, 64 Atl. 595, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 659, 7 Ann. Cas. 505. If thus construed, the enjoyment or possession being expressly postponed to the death of the first taker, the implication would arise that there was no such intention as to the vesting of the title.

The authorities cited by appellant are dissimilar to this case in their facts, and are not controlling herein.

Barnett v. Barnett, 104 Cal. 298, 37 Pac. 1049, involved the interpretation of a deed containing this language:

"Give, grant, alien, and confirm unto the party of the second part and to his heirs * * * all those certain lots * * * to have and to hold, all and singular, the said premises * * * unto the said party of the second part * * * for and during his natural life, and to the issue and heirs of the body of the said party of the second part."

The contention of the immediate grantee was that thereby was conveyed to him the fee, but the Supreme Court rightly held that, taking into consideration the whole of the instrument, it was the intention of the grantor "that the habendum should operate as a proviso or limitation to the granting clause, and control it to the extent of limiting the estate conveyed to the plaintiff to a life estate, with a remainder to the issue and heirs of his body." It is true the court said no present estate would pass to the "heirs." That necessarily followed from the consideration that at the time of the creation of the estate there was no ascertained person in whom the right to the enjoyment of the remainder could vest. Estate of Washburn, 11 Cal. App. 735, 106 Pac. 415.

In Hall v. Wright, 17 Cal. App. 502, 120 Pac. 429, a similar deed was involved, and it was held that the remainder was a contingent interest, the person or persons in whom it was to vest being uncertain, and not ascertainable until the death of the first taker. Herein the conveyance of the remainder was not to the "heirs" of Lydia J. Sperry, as in the above citations, but to two designated persons who were then in being and capable of taking the interest immediately upon the death of the life tenant.

Gray v. Union Trust Co., 171 Cal. 637, 154 Pac. 306, involved the question whether a conveyance in trust created a dry, naked trust which was terminable upon the option of the trustor, and it was held that, since there was no power of revocation reserved by the trustor in the instrument creating the trust, a court of equity would not, in the absence of the beneficiaries, decree a termination of the trust. It is well to note, however, that, after declaring that it was immaterial whether the remainders thereby created were vested or contingent, the court said:

"But in truth these remainders are to be regarded as vested remainders, subject to divestiture only upon the exercise of the power of nomination by will reserved to the trustor."

It is to be observed that the remaindermen were not named in the declaration of trust, but they were designated as "her heirs at law," subject to be displaced by nomination in the will of the trustor.

The Supreme Court approved and followed the decision of the New York court in Crackanthorpe v. Sickles, 156 App. Div. 753, 141 N. Y. Supp. 370, wherein the plaintiff, an unmarried woman, conveyed property to a trustee to invest and manage and pay the net income thereof to her during her life, and at her death to distribute it to such persons as she might designate by her will, or, should she die intestate, then to divide the property among her lawful issue which she might leave surviving. Therein it was said:

"It is a well-established rule, both of the common law and by statute, in this state that estates in remainder which are limited to take effect upon default in the exercise of a power of appointment are not prevented from vesting by the existence of the power, but take effect in the same manner as if no power existed, subject, however, to be divested by an exercise of the power."

It might well be doubted whether either of said courts was right in saying that there was a vested remainder, since the designation of "heirs at law" does not indicate definitely a person in being at the time of the creation of the estate. At any rate, the Gray Case affords no comfort to appellant.

In Shirran v. Dallas, 21 Cal. App. 405, 132 Pac. 454, 462, the provisions of a deed to the grantee named therein for and during her natural life, with the reversion at her death to the grantor, or to his heirs or devisees, were involved. Prior to the death of the life tenant, the grantor died intestate, leaving sons and daughters as his heirs. It was properly held by this court that, at the time of the death of the grantor, the interests of the heirs became vested remainders, although before that time they were contingent remainders. When the grantor died, the parties were in esse who had the right "to the immediate possession of the property upon the ceasing of the intermediate estate." Section 694, Civ. Code. But such condition did not exist until the death of the grantor. But here, as we have seen, the remaindermen were in esse at the time of, and they were designated in the decree of, distribution.

Also, in the Washburn Case, supra, the devise was to a class, the members of which were to be living at the time of the death of the life tenant, a situation entirely different from this.

In Thomson v. Ludington, 104 Mass. 193, the remainder was devised "to such of my children as shall then be living" at the death or marriage of the widow of the testator. Necessarily this was a contingent remainder, since the remainderman continued uncertain till the death or marriage of the widow.

In Compton v. Rixey's Ex'rs, 124 Va. 548, 98 S. E. 651, 5 A. L. R. 465, also, the testator designated his children as the remaindermen "to take upon the death or remarriage of his wife." It was properly held to be a contingent remainder, as "no one can tell until the happening of the event which is to terminate the [wife's life] estate, which of the children will answer the description of being 'then living.'"

[3] Appellant declares that the estate in remainder would not vest until the death of the life tenant by reason of the rule prescribed in section 780 of the Civil Code as follows:

"When a remainder on an estate for life or for years is not limited on a contingency defeating or avoiding such precedent estate, it is to be deemed intended to take effect only on the death of the first taker, or the expiration, by lapse of time, of such term of years."

If said section is to be construed as claimed by appellant, it would manifestly have the effect of nullifying section 694 of the same Code, providing:

"A future interest is vested when there is a person in being who would have a right, defeasible or indefeasible, to the immediate possession of the property, upon the ceasing of the intermediate or precedent interest."

However, the phrase, "to take effect," as used in said section 780, means to become operative or executed; it implies not only a vested interest in the property, but a present right of enjoyment. Manifestly, in that sense the remainder would not "take effect" until the death of the life tenant.

While we do not find any decision construing said section 780, it is clear that appellant's contention cannot be reconciled with the numerous decisions in this state relating to vested remainders or with the decisions in New York, in which state section 238 of the Field draft of the Civil Code (section 55 of Real Property Law [Consol. Laws, c. 50]) contains the same language as said section 780.

Indeed, as directly supporting respondents' position that the estate of Harriet A. Miller was a vested estate, and not a contingent remainder, we may cite the following New York decisions: Byrnes v. Stilwell, 103 N. Y. 453, 9 N. E. 241, 57 Am. Rep. 760; Nelson v. Russell, 135 N. Y. 137, 31 N. E. 1008; Matter of Seebeck, 140 N. Y. 241, 35 N. E. 429; Stokes v. Weston, 142 N. Y. 433, 37 N. E. 515; Miller v. Gilbert, 144 N. Y. 68, 38 N. E. 979; Vanderpoel v. Burke, 63 Misc. Rep. 545, 118 N. Y. Supp. 548.

It is sufficient to quote from the last of these the following:

"When testator gave all his estate to his wife for life, on her death to be divided * * * among his children, the children living at the time of the testator's death took 'vested remainders.'"

It was further held therein that the use of the words, "after her death," in connection with the remainders, "must be regarded as defining the time of enjoyment simply, and not of the vesting of title."

[4] If the said Harriet A. Miller at the time of her death owned an interest in said property, the title thereto immediately vested in her heirs, subject, of course, to the right of the administrator to possession of it for purposes of administration. Estate of Woodworth, 31 Cal. 595.

[5] The administrator's title and possession is not adverse to the heir, but the latter, subject to said right of the administrator, can maintain an action to quiet his title and recover possession as against any one but the administrator even while the estate remains undistributed. Spotts v. Hanley, 85 Cal. 155, 24 Pac. 738.

[6] The object of an action to quiet title is to finally settle and determine as between the parties all conflicting claims to the property in controversy, and to decree to each such interest or estate therein as he may be entitled thereto. Peterson v. Gibbs, 147 Cal. 1, 81 Pac. 121, 109 Am. St. Rep. 107.

Plaintiff, however, claims as heir of his mother, and he cannot therefore maintain this action against her administrator. Section 1452 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides:

"The heirs or devisees may themselves, or jointly with the executor or administrator, maintain an action for the possession of the real estate, or for the purpose of quieting title to the same, against any one except the executor or administrator."

We conclude that the trial court was right in sustaining the demurrer of J. E. Oliver, as administrator, to the complaint. The court, however, dismissed the action as to all the defendants. It is not claimed in the complaint that said Frank Sperry claimed any interest adverse to plaintiff. Hence it was proper to dismiss the action as to him, but a cause of action was stated against T. F. Emerson, as administrator of the estate of Charles Sperry, deceased. Plaintiff was entitled, therefore, to have the controversy between him and said administrator adjudicated.

The judgment is reversed as to Emerson as administrator, and affirmed as to Frank Sperry and J. E. Oliver, as administrator of the estate of Harriet A. Oliver, deceased.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; HART, J.

54 Cal. App. 505

MILLER v. OLIVER et al. (Civ. 2271.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 7, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 5, 1921.)

Appeal and error $\S$ 151(2)—Pleading $\S$ 120 (1)—Denial which was merely conclusion of law, contrary to admitted facts, raised no issue; defendant without interest in action not aggrieved by dismissal.

In action against administrator, where he admitted the facts alleged in the complaint, which showed as a matter of law that plaintiff had a vested half interest in certain property devised by defendant's decedent, but denied such half interest vested in plaintiff, and alleged that said half interest reverted to and became a part of decedent's estate, his answer, being based upon his conclusion from the facts that a contingent and not a vested remainder was distributed to plaintiff's mother, raised no material issue to be tried, so that judgment dismissing the action was not error as to him; nor, since it was apparent from the complaint and answer that defendant had no interest in the property, was he aggrieved by the dismissal.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; D. M. Young, Judge.

Action by Charles Elmer Miller against J. E. Oliver, T. F. Emerson, and others. From judgment dismissing the action, defendant Emerson appeals. Appeal dismissed.

S. K. King, of Escalon, for appellant.

George F. McNoble, of Stockton, amicus curiæ.

A. H. Carpenter and Thomas S. Louttit, both of Stockton, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. This is an appeal by T. F. Emerson, as administrator of the estate of Charles Sperry, deceased, from a judgment dismissing said action. The facts are sufficiently set forth in the opinion filed herewith in the same cause, No. 2270, 202 Pac. 168, on the appeal of plaintiff. Defendant Emerson claims that his answer presented an issue of fact that should be tried.

His answer was as follows:

(202 P.)

"Now comes T. F. Emerson, as administrator with the will annexed of the estate of Charles Sperry, deceased, and, answering the plaintiff's complaint on file herein, admits, alleges, and denies as follows, viz.: Admits all the allegations in the said complaint contained, save and except that he denies that upon the death of the said Harriet A. Oliver an undivided half of the said property in controversy, vested in the plaintiff herein; and in that behalf alleges that such undivided half reverted to and became a part of the estate of the said Charles Sperry, deceased, subject only to the life estate of the surviving widow of the said Charles Sperry, deceased; and save and except also the several respective claims to said property of the plaintiff and the defendant J. E. Oliver as administrator of the estate of the said Harriet A. Oliver, deceased."

Appellant's denial is the denial of a conclusion of law, since he admits the facts alleged in the complaint, which show as a matter of law that plaintiff has a vested interest in the property. His claim that said undivided half became a part of the estate of Charles Sperry, deceased, is based upon his conclusion from the facts that a contingent, and not a vested, remainder was distributed to the said Harriet A. Oliver.

Taking the complaint and answer, therefore, it appears that said Emerson, as administrator, has no interest whatever in the property, and hence he has not been aggrieved by the judgment of dismissal. However, as upon plaintiff's appeal we have reversed the judgment as to Emerson, the latter may have an opportunity to amend his answer so as to tender, if possible, some material issue of fact if he is so advised.

The appeal of Emerson is dismissed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; HART, J.

101

101

101

101

101

101

101

101

101

101

101

101

101

101

101

101

101

101

101

101

101

101

101

101

101

101

101

101

101

101

101

101

101

101

101

101

101

101

101

101

101

101

101

101

101

101

ROTTMAN v. HEVENER. (Civ. 3386.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 7, 1921.)

1. Evidence ⚡444(6)—Trial ⚡105(5)—Parol evidence inadmissible to show note was not to be paid until demand; specific objection to parol evidence unnecessary.

Oral agreement, entered into at the time of or prior to the execution of a note, that it should not become payable until demand, was not admissible to vary express written promise in the note to pay "one day after date, without grace," in the absence of fraud, accident, or mistake, under Civ. Code, § 1625, and such rule is not one merely of evidence, but of substantive law, and it is immaterial that some evidence relating to the oral understanding was not specifically objected to.

2. Bills and notes ⚡137(1)—Contracts ⚡242—Time of payment not extended by unexecuted oral agreement.

The time of payment as fixed by a written contract, such as a promissory note, may not be suspended or extended by a subsequent unexecuted oral agreement, in view of Civ. Code, § 1698.

3. Estoppel ⚡85—Payee of note not estopped by oral agreement to deny note due.

An oral agreement that a note should not be payable until demand, made prior to the execution of the written instrument, which was payable "one day after date, without grace," could not estop payee from claiming that the note was due and payable one day after date, so as to prevent recovery of attorney's fees in an action without demand, the doctrine of estoppel having no application when representation relates to rights depending on contracts yet to be made, and the same is true as to an oral statement made after the execution of the note, in the absence of consideration, notwithstanding Civ. Code § 1511, subd. 3, in view of sections 1625, 1698.

4. Bills and notes ⚡394—Demand for payment unnecessary before action.

Both at common law and under Civ. Code, § 3151, as amended by St. 1917, p. 1543, holder of a note may maintain an action against the maker to recover the principal, without demand or presentment at the bank where made payable; the ability and willingness of the maker to pay it at maturity at the place named being a matter of defense that must be pleaded and proved by him, if he would establish the equivalent of a tender, and thus prevent the holder from recovering further interest and costs of suit.

5. Interest ⚡50—Tender ⚡19(1)—Does not extinguish debt, but may stop interest.

A tender of payment of note does not pay the debt, but, at most, only stops the running of interest and deprives holder of his right to recover costs and stipulated attorney's fees, under Civ. Code, § 1504; Code Civ. Proc. § 1030.

6. Tender —25—Must be deposited in bank in name of creditor.

To constitute a tender to holder of note, a deposit in a bank under Civ. Code, § 1500, must be in the name of the creditor.

7. Tender —25—Money deposited after action brought must cover costs and attorney's fees.

Money deposited in a bank under Code Civ. Proc. § 1030, after action brought by holder of note, which provides for attorney's fees, would not extinguish the debt, where it did not include attorney's fees, and could not preclude plaintiff from recovering his costs and attorney's fees.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by Ignatius Rottman against Frank D. Hevener. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

M. C. Atchison, of Calexico, for appellant. Alfred Blaisdell and Louis Lamy, both of Calexico, for respondent.

FINLAYSON, P. J. This is an action upon a promissory note. From a judgment that he take nothing by the action and that defendant recover costs, plaintiff appeals.

On May 31, 1919, at Calexico, for value received, defendant signed and delivered to plaintiff his promissory note, whereby he promised to pay to plaintiff, or order, "one day after date, without grace, * * * at International Bank of Calexico, California," the sum of $2,522.57, with interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum until paid, together with attorney's fees equal to 10 per cent. on the amount unpaid, plus $20 if suit should be commenced or other proceedings taken to enforce payment. The note expressly provides that "demand, diligence, protest and notice" are waived. On December 10, 1919, no part of the principal or interest having been paid, plaintiff commenced this action to recover the principal of the note, interest to the date of the commencement of the action, and attorney's fees as provided for by the instrument.

The answer attempts to set forth facts showing, in substance, that prior and likewise subsequent to the execution of the note plaintiff, through his agent, orally represented to defendant that the instrument should not become payable until such time as payment should be demanded—and this notwithstanding that, by the express terms of his written promise, defendant agreed to make payment "one day after date, without grace," and notwithstanding the further fact that, by the specific terms of his written contract, he expressly waived "demand." We speak advisedly when we say the answer "attempts" to allege these facts, for that pleading is such a jumble of inarticulated matters that we are somewhat uncertain as to what were the precise ideas in the mind of the pleader.

It seems that when the note was executed, May 31, 1919, it was the intention of the parties that defendant should deposit with the International Bank of Calexico, as collateral security, 50 shares of the capital stock of a certain Mexican corporation. The corporation never issued the stock, and hence the contemplated security never became available. Defendant, testifying as a witness on his own behalf, was asked concerning the alleged understanding at the time of the execution of the note as to the date when it should be paid. His answer was that it was not the intention that the note should become due one day after date, June 1, 1919, which came on a Sunday, but that it was stated to him by plaintiff's agent, and agreed to, that the note would run until such time as plaintiff should demand payment—that it was not to be paid until plaintiff should ask for its payment; also that in these oral conversations the parties did not fix any definite time for payment. He also testified that it was agreed that the stock of the Mexican corporation, when issued, would be delivered to plaintiff as collateral security for the note. He further testified that a similar conversation was had between himself and plaintiff's agent subsequent to the delivery of the note.

No demand for the payment of the note was made prior to the commencement of the action on December 10, 1919. Two days thereafter defendant's property was attached, and then, so he testified, he learned for the first time that plaintiff was seeking payment of the note. Thereupon, namely, on December 12, 1919, defendant deposited with the International Bank of Calexico the sum of $2,654.17. This amount equalled the principal of the note and accrued interest, but did not include the attorney's fees provided for in the event that suit should be commenced to enforce payment. Immediately after depositing said sum with the bank, defendant caused a registered letter, signed by the bank's vice president, to be mailed at Calexico, addressed to plaintiff at his Los Angeles residence, advising the latter that the money had been so deposited. At the same time defendant caused a similar letter, addressed to plaintiff at Calexico, to be deposited in the United States mail. There is no evidence that the sum deposited with the bank was deposited in plaintiff's name, as required by section 1500 of the Civil Code when it is sought to extinguish an obligation for the payment of money as there provided. On this particular feature of the case defendant's testimony is as follows:

"Q. What, if anything, did you do toward the satisfaction of the obligation after you became aware that they were seeking to recover the money from the note? A. I deposited the full amount of principal and interest due at that time two hours after the attachment had been made."

Upon substantially this state of facts the trial court found that all the sums due to plaintiff by defendant were paid on December 12, 1919, at the International Bank of Calxico, and gave judgment for defendant accordingly.

[1] We are at a loss to understand upon what theory judgment was awarded the defendant. The oral agreement which it is claimed was entered into at the time of or prior to the execution of the note, to the effect that that instrument should not become payable until such time as plaintiff should see fit to demand payment, was not admissible to vary defendant's express written promise to pay the note "one day after date, without grace." It is not claimed that by reason of fraud, accident, or mistake there was any failure to cause the written instrument to express the intention of either of the parties. There is no allegation or proof that defendant was induced by fraud or mistake to agree to the insertion of the clause making the note payable one day after date. That instrument was written by the defendant himself. What he did he did with his eyes open. And he is charged with knowledge that under the law of this state (Civil Code, § 1625) a written contract supercedes all preceding or accompanying oral negotiations or stipulations. In the absence of fraud or mistake, the time of payment as fixed by the written terms of the note cannot be varied by any contemporaneous oral agreement. The rule that a writing which purports to be the complete contract of the parties is deemed in law to be the full repository of the agreement or contract, that the whole contract is expressed by it, and that evidence of oral stipulations is not admissible to incorporate other elements in it or to alter or enlarge its terms, is applicable to negotiable as well as to nonnegotiable instruments. Dollar v. International Banking Corp., 13 Cal. App. 331, 341, 109 Pac. 499; See, also, Booth v. Hoskins, 75 Cal. 271, 17 Pac. 225; Pierce v. Avakian, 167 Cal. 330, 139 Pac. 799; Kinsel v. Ballou, 151 Cal. 755, 91 Pac. 620; Aud v. Magruder, 10 Cal. 282; San Jose Savings Bank v. Stone, 59 Cal. 183; Carver v. San Joaquin Cigar Co., 16 Cal. App. 767, 118 Pac. 92; Consolidated L. Co. v. Frew, 32 Cal. App. 118, 162 Pac. 430; Foley v. Emerald, etc., Brewing Co., 61 N. J. Law, 428, 39 Atl. 650; Commercial Nat. Bank v. Hutchinson Box, etc. Co., 98 Kan. 350, 158 Pac. 44; Cherokee County v. Meroney, 173 N. C. 653, 92 S. E. 616; Hall v. First National Bank, 173 Mass. 16, 53 N. E. 154, 44 L. R. A. 319, 73 Am. St. Rep. 255; and Getto v. Binkert, 55 Kan. 617, 40 Pac. 925. The fact that some of the evidence relating to the alleged oral understanding was not specifically objected to by plaintiff cannot affect the latter's right to insist upon the agreement as written—as evidenced by the promissory note. According to the modern view, and the one which obtains in this state, the so-called "parol evidence" rule—the rule which denies effect to an oral agreement that varies a written contract entered into at the time or earlier—is not merely one of evidence but of substantive law. The accepted theory is, not merely that the writing is the best evidence of the agreement, but that what is embodied in the writing is the actual contract of the parties, unless affected by fraud or mutual mistake. And, therefore, the failure to object to the admission of evidence of such an oral agreement does not alter the legal rights of the parties, but its incompetency to vary the writing may be considered as a matter of law. See Dollar v. International Banking Corp., supra. The authorities bearing on this question are collected in Thompson Co. v. Foster, 101 Kan. 14, 165 Pac. 841.

[2] Equally unavailing as a defense is the fact, if it be a fact, that subsequently to the execution of the promissory note plaintiff's agent again told defendant that the instrument would not become payable until payment should be demanded. Under the statute of this state (Civil Code, § 1698) a contract in writing may be altered by a contract in writing or by an executed oral agreement, but not otherwise. Therefore, whatever may be the rule in jurisdictions where there is no such statutory provision, it is the established rule in this state that the time of payment as fixed by the written contract may not be suspended or extended by a subsequent unexecuted oral agreement. Henehan v. Hart, 127 Cal. 656, 60 Pac. 426; Harloe v. Lambie, 132 Cal. 133, 64 Pac. 88; See, also, Foster v. Furlong, 8 N. D. 282, 78 N. W. 986.

[3] It cannot successfully be contended that plaintiff is estopped to claim that the note is payable according to defendant's express written promise to pay "one day after date, without grace." No oral agreement made prior to the execution of the written instrument, in conflict with defendant's written promise, can work such estoppel. It is the general rule that, to work an estoppel, a statement or representation made during the negotiations that terminate in a written contract must relate to an existing fact, and not to a mere promise of future performance. The only exception to this rule is where the representation relates to the intended abandonment of an existing right. The doctrine of estoppel, therefore, has no place for application when the representation relates to rights depending upon contracts yet to be made to which the person complaining is yet to be a party. He has it in his power in such case to guard in advance against any consequences of a subsequent change of intention or conduct by the person with whom he is dealing. For compliance with arrangements respecting future transactions, parties must provide by stipulations in their contracts when reduced to writing. Union Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Mowry, 96 U. S. 544, 24 L. Ed. 674; Langdon v. Doud, 10 Allen (Mass.) 433; Thomson v. Langton, 187 Pac. 970. The rule is stated in Corpus Juris (vol. 21, p. 1142) as follows:

"The doctrine of estoppel by representation is ordinarily applicable only to representations as to facts either past or present, and not to promises concerning the future which, if binding at all, must be binding as contracts."

Nor can estoppel be predicated of the oral statement alleged to have been made subsequently to the execution of the note, to the effect that that obligation would not become due until payment should be demanded. Aside from the fact that, by the express terms of his written contract, defendant specifically waived demand, the alleged representation was only of a present intention or purpose; and the rule is that the doctrine of estoppel will not arise simply from a breach of promise as to future conduct or from a mere disappointment of expectations. There was no consideration for any extension of the time of payment as fixed by the terms of the written contract. Nor did defendant alter his position by any affirmative action on his part. Having the right to pay the note at any time after the day when it was delivered, he chose rather to remain inactive and to allow the interest to accrue. The statement of plaintiff's agent subsequent to the execution of the note, to the effect that payment would not become due until demand should be made, was not the statement of an existing objective fact or of a state of things actually existing on which a party might reasonably rely as fixed and certain, so as to be induced thereby to change his position, but was the statement of a present intention respecting a future course that was subject to change at any moment. Plaintiff, at any time, might conclude that he wanted his money and bring suit accordingly. The intent of a party, however positive and fixed, concerning his future conduct with respect to such a matter, is necessarily uncertain as to its fulfillment, and must depend upon contingencies and be subject to change and modification by subsequent events and circumstances. See Travis v. Davis, 15 S. W. 525, 12 Ky. Law Rep. 825, and Langdon v. Doud, supra. In this latter case, the Massachusetts court says:

"The reason [of the doctrine of estoppel] wholly fails when the representation relates only to a present intention or purpose of a party, because, being in its nature uncertain and liable to change, it could not properly form a basis or inducement upon which a party could reasonably adopt any fixed and permanent course of action."

In taking leave of this question, it may indeed be said that if the doctrine of estoppel were extended to cover a situation such as we have here, it would subvert the salutary rule that a written contract must prevail over previous verbal arrangements, as well as the rule that a written contract can be altered only by a contract in writing or by an executed oral agreement, and would open wide the door to all the evils which these two rules were intended to prevent.

We are referred to subdivision 3 of section 1511 of the Civil Code, which, with the introductory portion of the enactment, reads:

"The want of performance of an obligation, or of an offer of performance, in whole or in part, or any delay therein, is excused by the following causes, to the extent to which they operate: * * * 3. When the debtor is induced not to make it, by any act of the creditor intended or naturally tending to have that effect, done at or before the time at which such performance or offer may be made, and not rescinded before that time."

The oral statements by plaintiff's agent, to the effect that the note need not be paid until after a demand, could not excuse a "want of performance" of defendant's obligation to pay his debt. The debt remains until extinguished by payment. The extreme claim that could be advanced by the most plausible argument is that, under these provisions of section 1511, the oral statements made by plaintiff's agent at the time of and subsequent to the execution of the note excused defendant's "delay" in the performance of his obligation to pay. But this claim, if tenable, would have the effect of permitting a party to a written contract to alter by parol his most solemnly executed written obligation, and thus violate the express inhibitions of sections 1625 and 1698, and this notwithstanding neither party had been prevented by fraud or mistake from causing the writing to express his real intentions. We do not think that any such result was contemplated by the framers of section 1511. That section refers to "any act" of the creditor. It would seem that the Legislature must have had in mind such an act as, being done in and about some matter not covered by the terms of the agreement, and entirely separate and apart from its terms, would operate to induce the debtor to delay performance of his obligation. It does not seem possible that the Legislature intended to change, so far as the question of the maturity of an obligation is concerned, the rule of law forbidding the alteration of a written contract by parol. Here, according to the debtor's claim, there was an attempted oral agreement between the parties, which, if allowed to operate, would indubitably have the effect of varying the terms of the written obligation as to time of payment. If subdivision 3 of section 1511 applies to such a situation, the Legislature has, in effect, declared that, as to one of the terms of practically every written agreement, that fixing the date of maturity, the writing may be varied by parol. It is inconceivable that such could have been the legislative intent. If the rule forbidding the alteration of written contracts by parol can be so readily circumvented, then a written instrument, however emphatically it may purport to be the embodiment of the entire agreement between the parties, will afford no obstacle to its facile and convenient overthrow by any debtor who may be able to adduce an amount of parol evidence sufficient to induce a credulous jury to believe that the time fixed by the writing for the maturity of the obligation is not that which the parties contemplated. We decline to give to section 1511 a construction that leads to a result so at variance with the "parol evidence" rule.

[4] No demand was necessary before the suit was commenced; nor was it necessary to make presentment of the note at the bank where it was made payable. It is settled in this state, both at common law and now by statute, and by the weight of authority in the other states of this country, contrary to the law in England, that where a note is payable at a particular time and place neither demand nor presentment at the place named is necessary in order to entitle the holder to maintain an action against the maker to recover the principal. The failure to make presentment at the place named would not discharge the debt. At most it could be pleaded only as a defense to the recovery of costs or interest, and then only if the maker were ready and willing to pay his note at maturity at the place fixed for payment. See Montgomery v. Tutt, 11 Cal. 307, where the court, on page 327, says:

"The undertaking of the parties and the legal effect of such contracts is this: That if ready at the time and place with the funds, the obligor has so far satisfied the contract that he cannot be responsible for any future damages, either as costs of suit or interest for delay; not that he is thereby discharged of the debt."

Section 3151 of the Civil Code (Negotiable Instruments Law, Stats. 1917, p. 1543) reads:

"Presentment for payment is not necessary in order to charge the person primarily liable on the instrument; but if the instrument is, by its terms, payable at a special place, and he is able and willing to pay it there at maturity, such ability and willingness are equivalent to a tender of payment upon his part. But except as herein otherwise provided, presentment for payment is necessary in order to charge the drawer and indorsers."

The maker of a note is "the person primarily liable" (Jones v. Nicholl, 82 Cal. 32, 22 Pac. 878; Nichols v. Asbeck, 179 Cal. 695, 178 Pac. 705), and by the express terms of the statute presentment is not necessary to charge "the person primarily liable," even though the instrument be payable at a special place.

[5] The ability and willingness of the maker of a note to pay it at maturity at the place named therein is a matter of defense that must be pleaded and proved by him, if he would establish the equivalent of a tender and thus prevent the holder from recovering further interest and costs of suit. See Florence Oil, etc., Co. v. First National Bank, 38 Colo. 119, 88 Pac. 182, Greeley v. Whitehead, 35 Fla. 523, 17 South. 643, 28 L. R. A. 286, 48 Am. St. Rep. 258, and Nichols v. Asbeck, supra. Here defendant made no attempt to show that he was able and willing to pay the note at the time when, according to its terms, it was due and payable. On the contrary, his claim throughout was that he was not to make payment at that time. But even if he had been able and willing to pay at the date of maturity fixed by the terms of the note, so as to constitute such ability and willingness the equivalent of a tender, that would not extinguish plaintiff's right to the principal of the note, nor deprive him of the right to a judgment therefor. A tender does not pay the debt. At most such tender, if made, would only stop the running of interest and deprive plaintiff of his right to recover costs, and, possibly, his right to the stipulated attorney's fees. Civ. Code, § 1504; Code Civ. Proc., § 1030; Himmelman v. Fitzpatrick, 50 Cal. 650.

Our conclusion is that nothing that transpired prior to the commencement of the action was a defense thereto. It only remains to consider the effect of the deposit in the bank after the action was brought.

[6, 7] Respondent's claim that his obligation to pay the debt for which plaintiff has sued him was extinguished by his depositing in the bank a sum of money equal to the principal and accrued interest—a sum deposited two days after the action was brought—is evidently based on section 1500 of the Civil Code, which reads:

"An obligation for the payment of money is extinguished by a due offer of payment, if the amount is immediately deposited in the name of the creditor, with some bank of deposit within this state, of good repute, and notice thereof is given to the creditor."

There is no evidence that the money was deposited with the bank in the name of plaintiff. To effect the extinguishment of an obligation under this Code section there must be a full compliance therewith; and a failure to deposit the money in the name of the creditor is fatal to any claim of extinguishment. Segno v. Segno, 175 Cal. 743, 167 Pac. 285. Moreover, the money was not deposited with the bank until after the commencement of the action; and, since it did not include the attorney's fees to which plaintiff became entitled when he sued, it was for an amount less than the sum to which, when plaintiff brought his action, he was entitled. For these reasons alone the deposit with the bank not only could not extinguish the debt, but it could not preclude plaintiff from recovering his costs and attorney's fees. Code Civ. Proc. § 1030; Fell v. Frierson, 171 Cal. 351, 153 Pac. 229.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: WORKS, J.; CRAIG, J.

54 Cal. App. 485

ROTTMAN v. HEVENER. (Civ. 3385.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2. California. Oct. 7, 1921.)

1. Bills and notes  147—Paper not negotiable unless payable to order or bearer.

An instrument, wherein maker agrees to pay certain money to another person on demand, is not negotiable under Civ. Code, § 3082, subd. 4, as amended by St. 1917, p. 1532, where not payable to order or bearer.

2. Bills and notes  129(3)—Note held due immediately on delivery.

A note promising to pay "on demand, after date, without grace," is due immediately on delivery.

3. Bills and notes  394—Demand for payment unnecessary before suit.

No demand or presentment is necessary before bringing suit on a note payable on demand under Civ. Code, § 3151, as amended by St. 1917, p. 1543, and this is true though the paper is nonnegotiable because not made payable to order or bearer, as provided in section 3082, subd. 4, as amended by St. 1917, p. 1532, especially where the note expressly declares that "the makers and indorsers of this note hereby waive demand, diligence, protest and notice."

4. Bills and notes  534 — Maker on demand note held liable for attorney's fees.

Maker of a note payable on demand, and providing for attorney's fees, is liable for costs and stipulated attorney's fees in action brought without demand, where note recited that demand was waived.

5. Evidence  444(6)—Oral agreement that note should not be due until demand inadmissible.

An oral agreement that note was not to be paid until demand could not be shown in an action on the note, where it recited that it was payable on demand, and that demand was waived, in the absence of fraud or mistake.

6. Customs and usages  11—Custom proved to interpret, but not to establish contract.

Custom may be proved to interpret, but not to establish, a contract, and in an action on a note without demand, court erred in permitting defendant to introduce evidence of a custom among bankers to demand payment on demand notes before bringing suit; the note in question being payable on demand, and demand being waived, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 12.

7. Tender  11—Willingness to pay on demand not sufficient tender.

An ability and willingness to pay a note upon presentment or exhibit or demand cannot be deemed the equivalent of a tender of the amount due on a note under which neither presentment nor demand is necessary.

8. Costs  42(1, 2)—Tender  9—Deposit in bank after suit brought not available as defense, nor to save costs, but offer of judgment might relieve of future costs.

The deposit in bank of principal and interest after suit brought on note was neither available as a defense nor operative to deprive plaintiff of his right to costs under Civ. Code, § 1500, but the defendant might at such time serve an offer on plaintiff to allow judgment to be taken against him for principal and interest and attorney's fees and costs incurred to date, and relieve himself from liability for further costs under Code Civ. Proc. § 997.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by Sam E. Rottman, trustee, against Frank D. Hevener. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

M. C. Atchison, of Calexico, for appellant.
Alfred Blaisdell and Louis Lamy, both of Calexico, for respondent.

FINLAYSON, P. J. On March 15, 1919, defendant signed and delivered to plaintiff an instrument as follows:

"$1100.00 Calexico Cal. 3-15 1919. On demand, after date, without grace, for value received I promise to pay to Sam E. Rottman, trustee, at the International Bank of Calexico, California, at its banking house in Calexico, the sum of eleven hundred dollars, with interest, from date, payable quarterly, at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, until paid, and attorney's fees of 10 per cent. on the amount then unpaid, and twenty dollars if suit be commenced or other proceedings taken to enforce the payment of this note. Should the interest be not paid when due, it shall be compounded every ninety days thereafter and bear the same rate of interest as the principal. Principal and interest payable in gold coin of the United States of America of the present standard. The makers and indorsers of this note hereby waive demand, diligence, protest and notice. Frank D. Hevener."

This action was brought on December 10, 1919, to recover the principal and accrued interest and the attorney's fees provided for by the foregoing writing. The trial court gave a judgment that plaintiff take nothing, and that defendant recover his costs. From that judgment plaintiff appeals.

[1] The paper in controversy is not made payable either to order or to bearer. "The instrument to be negotiable must be made payable to order or to bearer." Civ. Code, § 3082, subd. 4, as amended by St. 1917, p. 1532. Under the construction that has uniformly been placed upon this section of the Negotiable Instrument Law, the paper in question is nonnegotiable. Johnson v. Lasiter, 155 N. C. 47, 71 S. E. 23; Gilley v. Harrell, 118 Tenn. 115, 101 S. W. 424.

In many respects the facts of this case are similar to those presented in Rottman v. Hevener, No. 3386, 202 Pac. 329, this day decided. The defenses interposed by defendant's answer and found by the court in his favor are: (1) Contemporaneously with its execution, plaintiff orally represented to defendant that before the note should become due or payable demand for payment would be made, but no presentment or demand was made before the action was brought; (2) at all times since he made the note defendant has been able, ready, and willing to pay it, upon its being presented to him for payment; and (3) on December 12, 1919, upon learning that the action had been commenced, defendant deposited with the International Bank of Calexico, to plaintiff's credit, an amount equal to the principal and accrued interest of the note, and caused notice thereof to be given plaintiff.

[2] It seems proper, in dealing with this controversy, first to consider the effect of the writing irrespective of the alleged oral agreement. By the express terms of the instrument it is payable "on demand, after date, without grace." Moreover, the writing expressly declares that "demand" is waived. The words "on demand," when used with reference to the time for payment under an ordinary obligation to pay money, have a plain, distinct, clearly defined, legal, and popular signification, well known to the courts and to the people. When an obligation for the payment of money under a contract such as we have here contains a provision that it is payable "on demand," or "on call" (which is the same thing), the debt is payable presently, that is, it is due immediately; and if not immediately paid the debtor breaches his contract to pay, and the statute of limitations at once begins running in his favor. Omohundro's Ex'r v. Omohundro, 21 Grat. (Va.) 626; Bowman v. McChesney, 22 Grat. (Va.) 609; Bacon v. Bacon, 94 Va. 687, 27 S. E. 576; Cotton v. Reavill, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 99. "On demand after date," particularly when, as here, the interest is payable "from date," has been defined as equivalent to "on demand," rendering a note so payable due immediately after its delivery. Hitchings v. Edmands, 132 Mass. 338, 339; O'Neill v. Magner, 81 Cal. 631, 22 Pac. 876, 15 Am. St. Rep. 88. It follows, therefore, that if we look only to the terms of defendant's written contract, it must be held that his debt to plaintiff became due and payable immediately upon the delivery of the instrument.

[3] If defendant's contract be that which is evidenced by his written promise, no previous presentment or demand was necessary. It is well settled that in an action by the payee against the maker of a negotiable promissory note, payable on demand, no actual demand or presentment is necessary before bringing suit. Cousins v. Partridge, 79 Cal. 224, 21 Pac. 745; O'Neill v. Magner, supra; Jones v. Nicholl, 82 Cal. 32, 22 Pac. 878; Negotiable Instruments Law, Civ. Code, § 3151, as amended in 1917, p. 1543. The same rule obtains where the paper is nonnegotiable. That is, under the well-settled principle that an obligation for the payment of money on demand is due immediately, no actual demand is necessary, irrespective of whether the obligation to pay is evidenced by a negotiable or a nonnegotiable instrument. Cotton v. Reavill, supra; Board of County Com. v. Sloan, 5 Colo. 38; Knight v. Braswell, 70 N. C. 709. Moreover, defendant's written contract expressly declares that—

"The makers and indorsers of this note hereby waive demand, diligence, protest and notice."

This express waiver is equivalent to a contract that the debt shall be payable without any previous demand.

[4] There seems to be authority for the proposition that because attorney's fees, when provided for in a promissory note, are "special damages," they are payable only in case of default, and that, therefore, to warrant a recovery of such "special damages," a previous demand for payment of the principal and accrued interest must be made, even though the note be a demand note. See Prescott v. Grady, 91 Cal. 518, 27 Pac. 755. Without questioning the correctness of this proposition, we are of the opinion that it is not applicable to the facts of this case. Here the maker of the note expressly waived demand. This waiver applied to every sum that defendant promised to pay—to attorney's fees as well as to the principal and interest of the note. The liability to pay attorney's fees arose, therefore, coincidentally with the right to bring action on the note, which was at any time after its execution; and a prior demand or notice was no more essential with respect to counsel fees than it was with respect to the collection of the principal. See Wienke v. Smith, 179 Cal. 227, 176 Pac. 42.

[5] Turning now to a consideration of the oral agreement alleged to have been made at the time when the note was executed: We think it clear that defendant's obligation to pay must be measured solely by the terms of his written contract, unaffected by the contemporaneous oral agreement. The paper seems to have been prepared by the defendant himself, and to have been brought by him to plaintiff and then delivered to the latter. There is no allegation or proof that the words of the instrument, to the effect that the note is payable on demand, i. e., immediately, and that demand is waived, were inserted in the paper through fraud or mistake; there is no averment that the alleged oral agreement was omitted from the writing through fraud or mistake; the bald proposition is that defendant should be permitted to show that his contract is not that which is evidenced by the instrument that he himself worded and prepared, but one radically different. Defendant, during the course of his cross-examination, on being asked what was said by himself and plaintiff at the time when the paper was delivered, testified:

"My best recollection is that the substance of the conversation was, 'I will make this a demand note; any time you want this money, make a demand and I will pay.'"

His testimony does not disclose whether plaintiff acceded to this suggestion or not. However, assuming that plaintiff did acquiesce in defendant's suggestion that payment should be made only after a demand therefor, nevertheless, for the reasons stated in Rottman v. Hevener, No. 3386, 202 Pac. 329, this day decided, the oral agreement was ineffective to alter the legal effect of the written contract, or to excuse defendant's failure to make payment before suit brought.

[6] The lower court permitted defendant, over plaintiff's objection, to introduce evidence of a custom among bankers to demand payment on demand notes before bringing suit. This was error. Custom may be proved to interpret, but not to establish, a contract. Where the terms of the contract are clear and unambiguous, they cannot be varied or contradicted by evidence of custom or usage. Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 12; Withers v. Moore, 140 Cal. 591, 597, 74 Pac. 159. Custom may be of aid in many instances where it is apparent that something needs explanation, but custom cannot be invoked to the point of permitting evidence of it to vary the express terms of a written contract. Here the writing is certain in all its terms. It contains an express waiver of demand. There is no room for interpretation or construction. The instrument speaks for itself in no uncertain voice.

[7] The court found that at all times since the execution of the note "defendant has been able, ready, and willing to pay said note and any and all accrued interest, upon the said presentment or exhibit or demand for the payment thereof." This is tantamount to a finding that only upon presentment or demand was defendant willing to pay the note. But, as neither presentment nor demand was necessary, an ability and willingness to pay, conditioned upon such unnecessary acts, cannot be deemed the equivalent of a tender, even if we should assume that mere ability, readiness, and willingness, without more, may be tantamount to a tender. If, before the commencement of the action, defendant had actually tendered to plaintiff the full amount of principal and accrued interest, and if, availing himself of the privilege afforded by section 1030 of the Code of Civil Procedure, he had alleged in his answer the making of such tender, and had deposited in court for plaintiff the amount so tendered, he would have defeated plaintiff's right to recover costs. But none of these acts did he do.

[8] Had the deposit in the bank to plaintiff's credit been made, and notice thereof given, before plaintiff had commenced his action, such deposit and notice could have been pleaded as payment and an extinguishment of defendant's obligation. Civ. Code, § 1500. But the deposit in bank of the principal and accrued interest after suit brought was neither available as a defense nor operative to deprive plaintiff of his right to costs. When plaintiff commenced his suit he had a good cause of action, and therefore was entitled to recover attorney's fees and costs, as well as the principal and interest due on the note. The deposit in the bank and notice thereof could not defeat his right to such recovery. See Fell v. Frierson, 171 Cal. 351, 153 Pac. 229. Had defendant, before the trial or judgment, served upon plaintiff an offer to allow judgment to be taken against him for the principal and interest of the note, attorney's fees, and the costs incurred by plaintiff to the date of such offer, he might have defeated plaintiff's right to recover costs, and have been entitled to his own costs from the date of such offer. Section 997, Code Civ. Proc. But this defendant did not do; and his deposit in the bank after suit commenced was ineffective for any purpose.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: WORKS, J.; CRAIG, J.

54 Cal. App. 540

SECURITY INV. CO. OF SAN BERNARDINO v. BARTRAM et ux. (Civ. 3388.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 14, 1921.)

1. Vendor and purchaser ⇨301—Vendor may sue for installments of purchase price as they become due.

A vendor of land has a right to sue for each unpaid installment of the purchase price as it becomes due, and is not limited to a suit for specific performance or an action for damages, under Civ. Code, § 3307.

2. Vendor and purchaser ⇨301—Vendor suing for unpaid installments need not allege damages.

A vendor's action for unpaid installments on the purchase price of land is not ex delicto, but ex contractu, and hence damages need not be alleged.

3. Trial ⇨163—Motion for nonsuit for failure of proof held insufficient.

A motion for a nonsuit on the ground "that plaintiff has wholly failed to prove his case" is insufficient, as it does not call attention to the particular matters relied on.

4. Appeal and error ⇨1078(5)—Findings accepted as supported by evidence when specifications as to insufficiency had been abandoned.

Where appellants had abandoned the specifications of insufficiency of the evidence contained in the bill of exceptions by failing to present any supporting argument in the opening brief, the findings must be accepted as supported by the evidence.

5. Vendor and purchaser ⇨39—Contract not void because referring to unrecorded map.

A contract for the sale of land was not void because referring to an unrecorded map where the land was described by lot, tract, etc., and the only purpose in mentioning the map was to make provision that it should be on record not later than the date when the purchaser should be entitled to a conveyance.

6. Evidence ⇨460(4) — Parol evidence held admissible to identify lot on the ground.

Where both the vendor and the vendee of land identified the property on the ground, and understood that the description in contract by lot, tract, etc., was a description of the land thus identified, parol evidence was admissible to apply the description in the contract to the land identified on the ground.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Rex B. Goodcell, Judge.

Action by the Security Investment Company of San Bernardino against George R. Bartram and wife. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Allison & Dickson, of San Bernardino, for appellants.

Ralph E. Swing, of San Bernardino, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. The plaintiff, a corporation, brought this action to secure a judgment for installments alleged to be due and unpaid upon a contract for the purchase of land. The complaint was attacked by a general demurrer, which was overruled. While a partial transcript of the testimony is before us, the points presented for decision are upon the judgment roll alone.

[1, 2] 1. It is the contention of the appellant that plaintiff's only remedy is for damages as provided in section 3307, Civil Code, or for the specific performance of the contract. In this he is mistaken. The plaintiff has the right to sue to collect each unpaid installment as it becomes due. Boone v. Templeman, 158 Cal. 290, 110 Pac. 947, 139 Am. St. Rep. 126; Glock v. Howard & Wilson Co., 123 Cal. 1, 55 Pac. 713, 43 L. R. A. 199, 69 Am. St. Rep. 17. The action is not ex delicto, but ex contractu, and therefore damages need not be alleged.

[3] 2. Respondent insists that the alleged error of the trial court in denying the motion for nonsuit cannot be considered on this appeal, because the ground of the motion is not stated. The only ground mentioned is "that plaintiff has wholly failed to prove his case." This statement in no way attracts the attention of counsel and the court to the particular matters relied upon, and is insufficient. Miller v. Luco, 80 Cal. 257, 22 Pac. 195, and Millar v. Millar, 175 Cal. 797, 167 Pac. 394, L. R. A. 1918B, 415, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 184; Durfee v. Seale, 139 Cal. 603, 73 Pac. 435.

[4] 3. Appellants have seen fit to abandon the specifications of insufficiency of the evidence contained in its bill of exceptions by failing to present any argument to support them in the opening brief. The findings, therefore, must be accepted as supported by the evidence.

[5] 4. If we understand appellants' contention, it is further argued that, assuming the facts found by the court to be true, the contract is void because it refers to an unrecorded map. The contract is sufficient even if the map be entirely omitted from consideration. The finding in this regard is:

"That at the time of the entering into said contract for the sale of said lot 5, there was no map of said block C of Polytechnic Square subdivision of record in the office of the county recorder of San Bernardino county, but defendants well knew such fact, at the time of so entering into said contract, and said defendants agreed to purchase said lot and entered into said contract with the full understanding that said map had not then been so recorded. That on the 19th day of August, 1919, said map of said block C of said Polytechnic Square subdivision was recorded in the office of the county recorder of San Bernardino county, and is now of record therein."

From this it is clear that the only purpose of the parties in mentioning a map in the contract was to make provision for one to be on record not later than at the date when the purchasers should be entitled to a conveyance. It was not intended that the map should be relied upon for a description of the lot. Indeed this was unnecessary. The parties located the property purchased on the ground, and the contract described it by lot, tract, etc. Upon trial, it only remained to establish by parol that this description was of the parcel thus identified upon the ground. It is urged that such evidence was inadmissible.

[6] Of the cases cited by appellants in support of this contention, the one most nearly in point is Craig v. Zelian, 137 Cal. 105, 69 Pac. 853. But this action is clearly distinguishable from the one now before us for decision. In the former case, the opinion states that the land was not "in any mode designated on the ground." The only means of identifying the particular land attempted to be sold was by map. The court said:

"Parol evidence may be resorted to for the purpose of identifying the description contained in the writing with its location upon the ground."

Such evidence was introduced and relied upon by the court in the instant case, with the result that, after first finding that the land described as lot 5 is the same as that shown upon the map agreed to be later recorded, and which was recorded, the court further found:

"The same lot, piece, and parcel of land agreed to be sold by plaintiff to defendants in and by said contract hereinbefore referred to is the identical lot and piece of property which said defendants understood they were buying and agreed to buy in and by said contract."

This finding must be accepted as true. On the face of the written agreement there is no uncertainty in the description of the land. Both the vendor and the vendee identified the property on the ground, and the evidence shows that they both understood that the description in the contract was of the piece of land thus identified. Evidence may always be used to apply the description given in the contract or deed to the subject-matter. Carr v. Howell, 154 Cal. 372, 97 Pac. 885; Towle v. Carmelo Land & Coal Co., 99 Cal. 397, 33 Pac. 1126; Preble v. Abrahams, 88 Cal. 245, 26 Pac. 99, 22 Am. St. Rep. 301; Marriner v. Dennison, 78 Cal. 202, 20 Pac. 386. And if the contract, read in the light of such extrinsic evidence, clearly designates what land the parties intended, the description is sufficiently certain. Towle v. Carmelo Land & Coal Co., supra. Other authorities cited by appellants upon this point are Hines v. Copeland, 23 Cal. App. 36, 136 Pac. 728; Willmon v. Peck, 5 Cal. App. 665, 91 Pac. 164. In the latter case a complete description was contained in the contract, and the court merely held that parol evidence could not be admitted to change it and show that the contract was intended to describe a different parcel. In Hines v. Copeland, supra, the contract made no attempt at describing the property. Neither of these are in point.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; WORKS, J.

CULVER v. MILLER et al. 54 Cal. App. 545 (Civ. 3549.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 14, 1921.)

1. Pleading $\S$ 205(5) — Omissions held to merely result in uncertainties not ground for general demurrer.

In a lessee's action for the lessor's breach of his agreement to furnish stock in a water company for irrigation purposes, the failure of the complaint to allege of what stock such company consisted, the quantity of water to which plaintiff would be entitled to use, how many acres it would have irrigated, how many acres plaintiff prepared for irrigation, and the source of the company's water supply, merely resulted in uncertainties which could not be taken advantage of by general demurrer.

2. Landlord and tenant $\S$ 124(1)—Agreement to furnish stock in water company for irrigation held not uncertain as to time for delivery.

A lessor's agreement to furnish stock in a water company for irrigation of the land during the term meant that the stock was to be placed in the hands of the lessee at the beginning of the term and remain in his hands during its entire period and was not uncertain as to the time for delivery.

3. Landlord and tenant $\S$ 48(1) — Complaint for failure to furnish irrigation stock held sufficient to show demand.

In a lessee's action for the lessor's breach of his agreement to furnish stock in a water company, an allegation that defendant had failed and refused to furnish the stock or any part thereof sufficiently showed a demand for the stock.

4. Landlord and tenant $\S$ 48(1)—Complaint for failure to furnish irrigation stock not defective for failure to allege land susceptible to irrigation, etc.

In a lessee's action for the lessor's breach of an agreement to furnish stock in a water company for irrigation, the failure of the complaint to allege that the land was susceptible of irrigation and would be worthless without irrigation did not render it subject to general demurrer, as such matters could only be considered on the question of damage.

5. Pleading $\S$ 205(1)—Essentials of complaint as against general demurrer stated.

The complaint is sufficient against general demurrer if it states facts which show the jurisdiction of the court, that defendant was under a certain duty to plaintiff and the facts from which the duty arose, that there was a breach thereof, and that as a result of the breach plaintiff was damaged, and it need not negative defenses that may be anticipated.

6. Landlord and tenant — 48(1) — Complaint for failure to furnish irrigation stock not defective because not alleging company had water.

In a lessee's action for the lessor's breach of an agreement to furnish water in a water corporation for irrigation, the failure of the complaint to allege that the water company had water and could have supplied plaintiff therewith did not render it defective.

7. Landlord and tenant — 48(1) — Finding as to lessor's breach of agreement and lessee's damage held sufficient.

In a lessee's action for the lessor's breach of an agreement to furnish stock in a water company for irrigation, where the court found the ultimate facts as to defendant's breach of the contract and the resulting damage to plaintiff, the findings were not insufficient, though there was no finding on the allegations that the land was good agricultural land and in good condition to be farmed, etc.; these being only probative facts.

8. Appeal and error — 1071(6) — Judgment not reversed because conclusions of law did not direct judgment as to costs.

Where the court's conclusions of law were that plaintiff was entitled to have judgment against defendants for $600 as damages and that defendants were not entitled to recover anything on the cross-complaint, the judgment will not be reversed because of the failure of the conclusions of law to direct a judgment for costs; plaintiff being clearly entitled to costs.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by F. L. Culver against Oren N. Miller and another. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Hill & Lee, of El Centro, for appellants.

Conkling & Brown, of El Centro, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. This is an action for damages for the breach of a written contract by which plaintiff alleged that he leased 170 acres of land from the defendants; that by the lease it was agreed that plaintiff should receive from defendants 312 shares of capital stock of the Imperial Water Company No. 1; that they furnished only a part of said stock; and that the plaintiff was thereby damaged in the sum of $2,000. Defendants interposed a general demurrer which was overruled. They thereupon filed an answer and counterclaim for $3,000 damages. After trial, the court rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff for $600. Defendant moved for a new trial and the motion was overruled. This appeal is from the order overruling the motion for a new trial and judgment for $600.

[1] The first ground urged for a reversal is that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. In this behalf it is said that the complaint should have stated of what the capital stock of the Imperial Water Company No. 1 consists and the quantity of water in inches and feet that plaintiff would be entitled to as the possessor of 312 shares; how many acres it would have irrigated; how many acres plaintiff prepared for irrigation; the source of the water supply of the water company. These omissions and several others which appellant claims should have been contained in the complaint, if subject to any criticism, merely result in uncertainties which cannot be taken advantage of by a general demurrer.

[2] It is said that the complaint should have alleged a demand for the stock on the part of the plaintiff, and in this connection it is claimed that the lease did not specify any definite time when the shares of stock were to be furnished. The language of the lease is "will furnish for irrigation of said land during said term, 312 shares, etc." We think this provision clearly means that the water stock was intended to be placed in the hands of the lessee at the beginning of the term and to remain in his hands during its entire period. If this is so, it cannot be said that the time for delivery is uncertain.

[3] However, the complaint alleged that the defendants "failed and refused to furnish said water stock or any part thereof." This is sufficient, since, unless a request was made, no refusal could have taken place. Ferguson v. Hull, 136 Ind. 339, 36 N. E. 254; Worth v. Wharton, 122 N. C. 376, 29 S. E. 370; Brossard v. Williams, 114 Wis. 89, 89 N. W. 832.

[4, 5] It is insisted that the complaint is defective in that it fails to state that the land was susceptible of irrigation and that without irrigation it would be valueless; that is a matter which could properly be considered by the trial court only as affecting the amount of damage. If the land was not susceptible of irrigation, this fact might be of value to the defendant; but the complaint is sufficient against a general demurrer if it states facts which show jurisdiction of the court, that the defendant was under a certain duty to the plaintiff and the facts from which the duty arose, that there was a breach thereof, and that as a result of the breach the plaintiff was damaged. North Augusta Electric & Improvement Co. v. Martin, 118 Ga. 622, 45 S. E. 455. The complaint in the case at bar contains these allegations.

It is not required to negative defenses that may be anticipated. Nickel v. State, 179 Cal. 126, 175 Pac. 641; Canfield v. Tobias, 21 Cal. 349.

[6] It is next asserted that the complaint is defective in that it fails to state that the Imperial Water Company No. 1 had the water and could have supplied the plaintiff with the same had he received the stock from the defendants. Merrill v. Southside Irrigation Co., 112 Cal. 431, 44 Pac. 720, is relied upon by appellants to sustain this proposition. This was a mandamus suit and is clearly distinguishable from the instant case because in such a proceeding, if the court were to give judgment for the plaintiff, the order would be for the delivery of a specific quantity of water, and courts do not make useless orders and those which are impossible of performance.

[7] Another ground relied upon by appellants is that the findings are insufficient to support the judgment. It is said that there is no finding upon the following allegation contained in the complaint:

"That all of the said lands was at all times herein mentioned, and is, good agricultural land and was at all times herein mentioned in good condition to be farmed to a crop of corn and that by reason of the failure and neglect of the defendant to furnish any water stock for said lots 2 in sec. 3, and lots 1-4 and 5, and the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of sec. 14, of said township, and range, plaintiff was damaged in the sum of two thousand dollars."

There can be no doubt that the law requires that findings be made upon all material issues presented by the pleadings. We have examined the cases cited by appellant in this behalf beginning with Harlan v. Ely, 55 Cal. 344, and find nothing in them that does more than announce this well-recognized rule. It is unnecessary that findings be made upon any other than ultimate facts. If findings are made upon probative facts, even though they may be inconsistent with the general findings upon the ultimate fact in question, no new trial will result unless an examination of the evidence shows that it does not sustain the general findings. Perry v. Quackenbush, 105 Cal. 299, 38 Pac. 740. In the instant case, the appellants have not seen fit to present the evidence for this court's examination. The trial court found the ultimate facts, which, upon this phase of the case, were the breach of the contract by the defendant, and resulting damage to the plaintiff. It was not necessary to make a finding upon the probative facts upon which these general findings are based. Whether or not the land was good agricultural land and in good condition to produce a crop of corn, etc., would be probative facts.

[8] Another ground relied upon for reversal is that the conclusions of law are erroneous. The court's conclusions of law were as follows:

"That the plaintiff is entitled to have judgment against the defendants in the sum of $600 as damages, and that the defendants are not entitled to recover anything from the plaintiff on their said cross-complaint."

This conclusion is substantially the same as one which was upheld as sufficient in Butler v. Beech, 55 Cal. 28. In Swift v. Occidental Mining Co., 141 Cal. 166, 74 Pac. 700, cited by appellant, the criticism was that the court had not found upon material issues, and not that the conclusions of law were erroneous.

It is true that the conclusions of law did not direct a judgment for costs; however, the plaintiff was clearly entitled to his costs, and a judgment which is lawful will not be reversed because of the fact that the conclusions of law were incomplete.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; WORKS, J.

54 Cal. App. 516

KANE et al. v. WEDELL, City Marshal, et al.
(Civ. 3923.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Oct. 13, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 12, 1921.)

1. Municipal corporations $\S$ 271 — City of sixth class empowered under Public Utilities Act of 1913 to purchase established water supply system.

Under the Municipal Incorporation Act, $\S$ 862, subd. 3, as amended by St. 1901, p. 19, permitting cities of the sixth class to acquire and construct water supply systems, and notwithstanding subdivision 9, as amended by St. 1917, p. 1529, prohibiting levying and collecting of property tax in excess of one dollar on each hundred without the assent of two-thirds of the electors, and section 865, prohibiting trustees from accruing a liability in excess of the available money in the treasury legally apportioned and appropriated therefor, a city of the sixth class could purchase and establish a water supply system under the Public Utilities Act of 1913, and levy an assessment upon the property of property owners within city to procure purchase money.

2. Municipal corporations $\S$ 450(2) — City authorized to create assessment district could make district coterminous with boundaries of city itself.

Under Public Utilities Act of 1913, empowering board of trustees of a city to create an assessment district for the purpose of proposed improvement, a city, for purpose of levying assessment, could create assessment district coterminous with the boundaries of the city itself if proposed improvement was for the benefit of all its inhabitants.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; George H. Buck, Judge.

Action by Patrick Kane and others against William Wedell, City Marshal, and ex officio Tax Collector of the City of San Bruno, and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

A. P. Black, of San Francisco, for appellants.

John F. Davis, of South San Francisco, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the defendants, who are the governing officials of the city of San Bruno, in an action brought by the plaintiffs as citizens, residents, and taxpayers of said city, to restrain said defendants as such officials from proceeding with the levy and collection of certain assessments upon the property of said plaintiffs and other property owners within said city for the purpose of procuring money with which to consummate the purchase and acquisition of "the San Bruno water system" from its owners and its operation thereafter as a municipal water system. The trial court refused to grant such injunction, and from its judgment to that effect this appeal has been taken.

The facts of the case are practically undisputed. The city of San Bruno is a municipal corporation of the sixth class, organized and existing under the general municipal incorporations act. For some years prior to the 26th day of May, 1920, there had been installed and in operation within said city a privately owned and so-called "San Bruno water system," with proper mains and other facilities for supplying its inhabitants with water. On May 26, 1920, the board of trustees of the city of San Bruno, acting through a majority of their number, undertook to pass and adopt a resolution of intention to acquire said San Bruno water system for the purpose of its operation thereafter as a municipal water system, for the purchase price of $37,500, and thereafter, and on September 8, 1920, proceeded to establish an assessment district coterminous with the corporate limits of said municipality, and to levy an assessment upon the property of its taxpayers within said assessment district for the purpose of consummating the purchase of said water system. The foregoing proceedings were undertaken under and pursuant to the provisions of the so-called Public Utilities Act of the state Legislature approved June 6, 1913 (St. 1913, p. 421), and subsequent acts of said board of trustees looking toward the collection of said assessment have been done under and in accordance with the provisions of said act. The plaintiffs and appellants upon this appeal assail the validity of these proceedings on the part of the officials of said city upon several grounds.

[1] The appellants' first contention is that, under the provisions of the Municipal Incorporation Act (St. 1883, p. 93), under which the city of San Bruno was organized and is operating as a city of the sixth class, the trustees of said city have no power to create any indebtedness or liability in excess of the available money in the treasury to meet the same, or to levy or collect any property tax in excess of $1 on each $100 of taxable property, without the assent of two-thirds of the qualified electors of said city expressed in and at a special election. The particular sections of said Municipal Incorporation Act upon which the appellants rely in making this contention are the following:

Section 862, subdivision 3, as amended by St. 1901, p. 19, reading as follows:

"3. To contract for supplying the city or town with water for municipal purposes, or to acquire, construct, repair, and manage pumps, aqueducts, reservoirs, or other works necessary or proper for supplying water for the use of such city or the inhabitants, or for irrigating purposes therein."

Section 865, reading in part as follows:

"The board of trustees shall not create, audit, allow or permit to accrue any debt or liability in excess of the available money in the treasury that may be legally apportioned and appropriated for such purposes. * * *"

Subdivision 9 of section 862 of said act, as amended in 1917 (St. 1917, p. 1529), reading as follows:

"9. To levy and collect annually a property tax, which shall not, without the assent of two-thirds of the qualified electors of such city or town voting at an election to be held for that purpose exceed one dollar on each one hundred. * * *"

It is appellants' contention that the foregoing sections and subdivisions of the Municipal Incorporation Act furnish the only procedure by which the property of the citizens of the city of San Bruno can be assessed for the purpose of the acquisition of a municipal water system. In making this contention, however, counsel for the appellants concedes that, for the purpose of making such local improvements as opening and paving streets, putting in sidewalks, sewers, and the like, the statute of 1913 does furnish a mode of procedure applicable to cities of the sixth class, notwithstanding the inhibitions of the act under which they were created with relation to the limits and conditions of general property taxation. The distinction was in fact early recognized in this state between general property taxes for the current expenses and ordinary outlays of municipalities, and special assessments for particular forms of civic improvement (Emery v. San Francisco Gas Co., 28 Cal. 367; Taylor v.

Palmer, 31 Cal. 241; Chambers v. Satterlee, 40 Cal. 514). While conceding that the effect of these early decisions was to set municipalities free from the limitations of their charters as to property taxation in so far as the carrying forward of public improvements upon the assessment plan was concerned, the appellants herein undertake to argue that the purchase of an already established water system is not such a public improvement as to take the case out of the limitations expressed in the above-quoted sections of the Municipal Incorporations Act and bring it within the provisions of the Public Utilities Act. We are unable to follow the appellants in this course of reasoning. The Municipal Incorporations Act relating to cities of the sixth class, in section 862, subdivision 3, thereof, permits such cities to acquire, construct, repair, and manage pumps, aqueducts, reservoirs, or other works necessary and proper for supplying water for the use of such cities and the inhabitants thereof, or for irrigating purposes therein. Clearly the original construction of the reservoirs, aqueducts, mains, and other works and appliances requisite to the creation of a municipal water system would be such a public improvement as to come within the terms of the Public Utilities Act of 1913; and there can be no real distinction between the original construction of such a system by a municipality and its acquisition after its construction by private parties in so far as the nature of the work as a public improvement is concerned, since the same effect is accomplished in either case, namely, that of providing the municipality with a publicly owned improvement which they did not possess before. The title to the Public Utilities Act would seem to indicate that no such distinction as appellants contend for was recognized by the Legislature, since it purports to be:

"An act to provide for the acquisition, installation, construction, reconstruction, extension, repair and maintenance by municipalities of waterworks," etc. Stats. 1913, p. 421.

We are therefore of the opinion that the city of San Bruno was not limited by the terms of the act under which it was incorporated from adopting the procedure prescribed by the Public Utilities Act for the acquisition of the so-called San Bruno water system, and that the contention of the appellants in that regard is without merit.

The case of Hopping v. City of Richmond, 170 Cal. 605, 150 Pac. 977, upon which the appellants rely to support their above contention, arose under the particular provisions of the charter of that city with respect to the right of referendum over the legislative acts of the council of that city, and has no application to the facts of the case at bar.

[2] The appellants' next contention is that the power of the board of trustees of the city of San Bruno to create an assessment district for the purpose of the proposed improvement, conceding them to have possessed such power, was exceeded when they created such a district coterminous with the boundaries of the city itself.

The argument in support of this contention turns upon a too narrow interpretation of the term "district" as contemplating a smaller area within the larger boundaries of the municipality. But this narrow meaning has not been given to the word "district" by our lawmakers. In the Street Opening Act of 1889 (St. 1889, p. 70), it was expressly provided that the boundaries of a district created for the purposes of street improvement might include the whole city. It is true that the Public Utilities Act of 1913 does not contain this express provision as to the size of the district to be created under its terms; but, since it contemplates public improvements such as the creation of water and lighting works and systems, which are usually intended for the use and convenience of all the inhabitants of a municipality, it would seem entirely irrational to give to the term "district" as employed in said act the narrow meaning for which the appellants contend. This is the view that has been taken as to the meaning of this term in other jurisdictions where improvement statutes have been subjected to judicial interpretation. In the case of Minnesota Land Co. v. Billings, 111 Fed. 972, 50 C. C. A. 70, the Circuit Court of Appeals, in passing upon the provision of a district improvement act of the state of Montana, said:

"This provision should be construed with reference to the object which was intended to be accomplished. It is contended by the appellant that because the word 'districts' is used in the plural, and authority is given to create special improvement districts 'within the city,' and to designate the same by number, the statute can only be complied with by creating at least two districts, and that the inclusion of the whole city in a single district is absolutely without authority of law. We think the statute should not be thus narrowed in its construction. It was intended to confer the broad power of creating special improvement districts, commensurate with the improvement which was required to be made therein. The word 'special' qualifies the improvement, not the district. The improvement in this instance affected the whole city. If it had affected but three-fourths of the city, it is not disputed that all the area so affected might have been included in an improvement district. It is but to pursue the same course of reasoning to reach the conclusion that by leaving out one block all the remainder of the city might be included in one improvement district. The statute undoubtedly was intended to authorize the city council to make whatever special improvement, * * * might be deemed necessary for the welfare of the city, or any part thereof. It was to be a continuous power, to be exercised as occasion might arise, and to be adequate to the necessities of the case—a power to include the whole city in one district, if necessary for an improvement which affected the whole, or to divide the city into smaller districts for other special improvements which might affect only the particular sections so included.”

We think the foregoing correctly expresses the more liberal construction to be given to the Public Utilities Act as applicable to the case at bar. The board of trustees of the city of San Bruno, having power, as we have decided, under the said act to acquire by either construction or purchase a municipal water system, had also power to create an assessment district coterminous with the boundaries of said city if the proposed public improvement was to be for the benefit of all of its inhabitants.

The foregoing discussion covers, we think, all of the points urged by the appellants upon this appeal.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

54 Cal. App. 587

SUGRU v. SUGRU. (Civ. 2365.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 17, 1921.)

Pleading  192(2)—Complaint held demurrable for uncertainty.

Complaint alleging that plaintiff was the owner, on a certain date, of a horse, harness, and a cow, that defendant was at that time in the wrongful possession of such property, and refused plaintiff's demand therefor, that plaintiff was awarded the right of possession when sued in the justice court, that defendant willfully, maliciously, and intentionally, by an appeal to the superior court, forced upon plaintiff great expenditure of money, loss of valuable time, and annoyance, that superior court gave judgment for plaintiff for return of the property, or for value thereof in a specified sum, that defendant failed to comply with the judgment, and turned horse out to wander away, that the horse, when found by the plaintiff, had suffered for want of food and water, and because of exposure, to the extent that it was only worth $10, and that plaintiff could only find a part of the balance of the property, without alleging damages or amount thereof, held subject to demurrer, as uncertain, ambiguous, and unintelligible.

Appeal from Superior Court, Lassen County; H. D. Burroughs, Judge.

Action by Susie Sorahan Sugru against James Sugru. Judgment of dismissal, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

William Henion, of Susanville, and Fred J. Harris, of Sacramento, for appellant.

N. J. Barry, of Susanville, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. The defendant's demurrer to the complaint was sustained, and, on plaintiff's failure to amend, the action was dismissed. From the judgment of dismissal, the plaintiff appeals.

The complaint alleges:

That the plaintiff was the owner, on a certain date, of a horse, harness, bridle, halter, buggy robe, whip, and a cow; that the defendant was at that time in the wrongful possession of said property; that plaintiff demanded the return thereof, but that defendant refused; that plaintiff then sued the defendant in the justice's court, and was "awarded the right of possession"; that defendant took an appeal to the superior court, and thus "willfully and maliciously and intentionally forced upon the plaintiff a great expenditure of money, loss of valuable time, annoyance, and distress of mind"; that the superior court gave judgment in favor of plaintiff for the return of the property, or the value thereof, in the sum of $224; that the defendant failed to comply with the judgment, "but, on the contrary, turned the dark brown saddle horse out to wander away, starve, and die of thirst among the hills. * * * The dark brown saddle horse being a pet of the plaintiff, for which she had that affection for incident to most humanity, she, in person, and at great expense, at last located the same, which when so found was poor, and had so suffered for want of food and water and its exposure to the elements that it was only of the value of $10 and could only find a part of the balance of the personal property aforesaid, which she took into her possession, the value of which is five dollars. Wherefore the plaintiff demands judgment against the defendant for the sum of ten thousand dollars."

The defendant demurred on the grounds of insufficient facts, and that the complaint is uncertain, ambiguous, and unintelligible. The demurrer is well taken on all the grounds stated. There is no allegation of damages or the amount thereof. That the complaint is subject to demurrer for uncertainty is so apparent that citation of authorities seems unnecessary. However, the following are in point: Mallory v. Thomas, 98 Cal. 644, 33 Pac. 757; Lamb v. Harbaugh, 105 Cal. 680, 39 Pac. 56; Foerst v. Kelso, 131 Cal. 376, 63 Pac. 681; Lapique v. Ruef, 30 Cal. App. 391, 158 Pac. 339.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: PREWETT, Justice pro tem.; BURNETT, J.

54 Cal. App. 531

PEOPLE v. COLLINS et al. (Cr. 566.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 13, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 12, 1921.)

1. Intoxicating liquors §132—Wylie Act not rendered inoperative by the National Prohibition Act.

The Wylie Act, prohibiting sale of intoxicating liquor in no-license territory, was not superseded and rendered inoperative by the National Prohibition Act.

2. Criminal law §564(1)—Evidence held sufficient to show venue in prosecution for unlawful sale.

In prosecution for selling alcoholic liquor in no-license territory in violation of the Wylie Act, evidence held sufficient to show the venue.

3. Criminal law §829(1)—Refusal of instructions covered by given instructions not error.

Refusal of instructions entirely covered by those given held not error.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tehama County; John F. Ellison, Judge.

Brad Collins and others were convicted of selling alcoholic liquor in no-license territory and from judgment of conviction and order denying new trial they appeal. Affirmed.

Chas. H. Braynard, of Redding, and Jas. T. Matlock, of Red Bluff, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

BURNETT, J. [1] Appellant Collins was convicted of selling alcoholic liquor in no-license territory in supervisorial district No. 5, county of Tehama, and he appeals from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial. His prosecution was under what is known as the Wylie Act (Stats. 1911, p. 599), and one of his main contentions is that this statute was superseded and rendered inoperative by the National Prohibition Act known as the Volstead Act (Act Cong. Oct. 28, 1919, c. 85, 41 Stat. 305), and therefore the conviction was void. In answer to this claim it is sufficient to refer to In re Volpi, 199 Pac. 1090, and Ex parte Crookshank, (D. C.) 269 Fed. 980.

[2] There is no merit in the claim that the venue was not shown. Mr. Walker testified that the liquor was obtained of the defendant at his place of business in Gerber, and appellant testified that Gerber is in Tehama county. Mr. Ballard, the sheriff, testified that Gerber is in the Fifth supervisorial district of said county. In fact, there is no doubt upon this point, and we understand that no serious contention is made that the evidence fails to support the verdict.

[3] Appellant complains that the court erred in refusing to give certain instructions proposed by him. We have examined them, and we find that, as far as they were exact and relevant, they were entirely covered by instructions which were given by the court.

As we view it there is nothing in the case to require extended consideration.

We find no error in the record, and the judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PREWETT, Justice pro tem.

54 Cal. App. 606

RICCOMINI v. PIERUCCI. (Civ. 3399.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 18, 1921.)

1. Arbitration and award §1, 82(1) — Held common-law and not statutory; general award not impeached on ground of honest mistake of judgment by evidence aliunde.

Where parties to an action for an accounting entered into a stipulation when the case was called for trial whereby it was agreed that each should appoint an arbitrator, that a third should be chosen by the two so appointed, or in the event of inability to agree, by the court, and that the court should enter its judgment upon the award of any two of the arbitrators, the arbitration was a common-law arbitration and not the statutory arbitration provided for by Code Civ. Proc. § 1281 et seq., and a general award, with no mistake of law or of fact appearing on its face, could not be impeached on the ground of honest mistake of judgment by evidence aliunde.

2. Appeal and error §1022(1)—Decision of trial court overruling exceptions to award not reviewable as to matters of fact.

The decision of the trial court overruling exceptions to an award of arbitrators is not subject to review by appellate court as to matters of fact.

3. Arbitration and award §27—Third arbitrator not disqualified because client of attorney for one of the parties in another matter.

A third arbitrator was not disqualified as matter of law merely because the attorney for one of the parties was the attorney of such arbitrator in another matter, in the absence of any evidence of partiality.

4. Arbitration and award §82(2) — General award not set aside in absence of partiality or corruption.

To justify setting aside a general award of arbitrators, there must be partiality or corruption on their part.

5. Arbitration and award §31 — Award not vitiated by momentary presence of attorney at hearing of evidence.

The momentary presence of the counsel for one of the parties in the room where the arbitrators were hearing the evidence held not to vitiate the award.

6. Arbitration and award ⚖️84—Court rendering judgment on award not required to make findings upon issues.

Where the parties to an action agreed to submit the controversy to arbitrators by stipulation expressly providing that the court should enter its judgment on the award, the court, in rendering judgment on the award, was not required to make express findings on the issues presented by the complaint and the answer, the award, and not findings, constituting the basis for the judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; T. N. Harvey, Judge.

Action by P. Riccomini against P. Pierucci. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

E. J. Emmons, Glenn D. Aldrich, and Franklin Heck, all of Bakersfield, for appellant.

E. A. Klein, of Bakersfield, for respondent.

FINLAYSON, P. J. Defendant appeals from a judgment entered upon the award of three arbitrators appointed by the parties pursuant to a stipulation made by them in open court.

Following the dissolution, by mutual consent, of a copartnership that had existed between plaintiff and defendant, this action was brought for an accounting. Plaintiff and defendant had married sisters. For the purpose of avoiding such additional intensification of family discord as might be engendered by a continuation of their litigation in court, the parties, when the case was called for trial, entered into a stipulation whereby they agreed that each should appoint an arbitrator; that the two arbitrators so chosen should appoint a third; that, in the event that the two to be selected by the parties should not be able to agree upon the third arbitrator, he should be appointed by the court; that any two of the arbitrators might make the award; and that, when the award should be made, the court should enter its judgment thereon. Pursuant to this stipulation, plaintiff selected an arbitrator, defendant selected one, and these two appointed the third, E. Toschi. Thereafter the three arbitrators met, informed the parties of the time and place of meeting, listened to the respective contentions and explanations of the parties, examined the partnership books of account, and, after deliberating for some time unanimously decided that plaintiff was entitled to recover of the defendant the sum of $1,328.06, together with his costs of action, and make their award accordingly. Thereupon the award was filed in the office of the county clerk. Thereafter defendant filed exceptions to the award, and moved that it be vacated. The grounds of exception, though somewhat numerous, may be grouped under three heads; namely, errors of judgment, bias, and fraud. The court heard the evidence of the respective parties upon defendant's exceptions to the award, and, after due deliberation thereon, overruled the exceptions, and entered judgment in accordance with the award, adjudging that plaintiff recover of defendant said sum of $1,328.06 and costs of suit.

[1] This is a case of a common-law arbitration, and not the statutory arbitration provided for by sections 1281 et seq. of our Code of Civil Procedure. The award is general, not special. No mistake of law or of fact appears upon its face. Such being the case, the court may not inquire into mere mistake or errors of judgment. A general award may not be impeached on the ground of honest mistake of judgment by evidence aliunde. Such errors are among the contingencies which the parties assume when they select such tribunals. Tyson v. Wells, 2 Cal. 122.

[2-5] It is claimed that Toschi, the third arbitrator, was disqualified because, although defendant did not know it until after the award, the attorney for plaintiff in this action was likewise acting as attorney for Toschi in another matter—a matter having no connection whatever with any of the issues of law or of fact presented by this litigation. It is not contended that this fact was intentionally concealed from defendant or his counsel. The decision of the trial court overruling the exceptions to the award is not subject to review by this court as to matters of fact. And, in the absence of any evidence of partiality, we may not hold, as a matter of law, that an arbitrator is disqualified simply because the attorney for one of the parties is likewise his attorney in another matter. It is a well-settled rule that, to justify setting aside a general award of arbitrators, there must be partiality or corruption upon their part. The relation of attorney and client is not such that it is conclusive evidence of partiality when the client acts as arbitrator in a matter in which his attorney happens to appear as counsel for one of the parties. On this point the reasoning in the following cases is applicable: Cheney v. Martin, 127 Mass. 304; Goodrich v. Hulbert, 123 Mass. 190, 25 Am. Rep. 60; Wallis v. Carpenter, 13 Allen (Mass.) 19; Fisher v. Towner, 14 Conn. 26. Equally destitute of merit is the claim that the momentary presence of plaintiff's counsel in the room where the arbitrators were hearing the evidence vitiates the award. Blodgett v. Prince, 109 Mass. 44.

By overruling the exceptions to the award the court impliedly found against all charges of corruption. This implied finding is amply supported by the evidence, and may not be reviewed here.

[6] It was not necessary that the court should make express findings upon the issues presented by the complaint and answer. The stipulation of the parties for the submission of the controversy to arbitrators expressly provided that the court should enter its judgment upon the award as made. In the absence of fraud or other sufficient ground for setting aside the decision of the arbitrators, it was the duty of the court, pursuing the procedure stipulated for by the parties, to enter a judgment upon the award. Under the stipulation, the award, and not findings, constituted the basis for the judgment.

There are no other points that require special mention. We are satisfied that the judgment should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: WORKS, J.; CRAIG, J.

54 Cal. App. 533

YOKOHAMA SPECIE BANK, Limited, v. TRANS-OCEANIC CO. (Civ. 3945.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Oct. 14, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 12, 1921.)

1. Appeal and error ⇨1001(1)—Jury's finding conclusive when supported by uncontroverted evidence.

Where there was ample testimony on the part of plaintiff to support its position and defendant offered no evidence in rebuttal, the jury's finding for plaintiff is conclusive.

2. Appeal and error ⇨1003 — Probability or possibility of facts claimed to exist was for jury.

The probability or possibility of the situation claimed by plaintiff to exist were matters addressed to the consideration of the jurors, and the appellate court is not called upon to pass thereon.

3. Pledges ⇨25—Form of note held without significance on question whether pledgee consented to delivery to carrier.

Where a bank advanced money to a trading company with which to pay for steel rails and received the bills of lading therefor and later the warehouse receipts as collateral security, the fact that the final collateral note recited that it was secured by rails covered by defendant's receipts was without significance on the question whether plaintiff consented to the withdrawal of the rails from the warehouse and their delivery to defendant, a carrier.

4. Replevin ⇨8(5)—Delivery of bills of lading and warehouse receipts as collateral security held sufficient delivery to support replevin.

Where plaintiff, a bank, had advanced large sums of money to a trading company, the delivery by the company to the bank of bills of lading and nonnegotiable warehouse receipts covering steel rails as evidence of security for the loans was a sufficient delivery to constitute a valid and binding pledge and vest plaintiff with a special property enabling it to maintain replevin.

5. Pledges ⇨25—Rights not destroyed after symbolic delivery by surreptitious taking by third person.

Where a trading company which had borrowed large sums of money from a bank delivered bills of lading and nonnegotiable warehouse receipts covering steel rails as security for the loans, the bank's rights were not destroyed by the surreptitious taking of the rails from the warehouse and their delivery to a carrier by a third person.

6. Carriers ⇨197(6)—Lien waived when not asserted when pledgee demanded property and brought replevin.

A carrier waived its lien, if it ever had any, on rails delivered to it, where, on demand for the rails by a pledgee, it failed to set up any lien, and when sued in replevin set up no claim of a lien.

7. Pleading ⇨122—Denial of foreign corporation's right to do business on information and belief, insufficient.

Defendant's denial on information and belief that plaintiff, a foreign corporation, was authorized to do business in California, was insufficient to raise any issue, as the fact could be ascertained from an examination of the public records.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by the Yokohama Specie Bank, Limited, against the Trans-Oceanic Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Nathan H. Frank and Irving H. Frank, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Earl H. Webb, Bert Schlesinger, and S. C. Wright, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. Plaintiff and respondent brought this action to recover from the defendant and appellant possession of 920 tons of steel rails and accessories, or $75,000, the value thereof. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant for possession of the property, and for costs. From the judgment entered thereon the defendant has appealed.

The quantity of steel rails in question was pledged by the Sakura Trading Company, a partnership, its owner, to the respondent as security for loans aggregating $100,000, evidenced by a note for that amount. The money was advanced to enable the partnership to pay for the rails, which were manufactured in Chicago for shipment to Japan. Bills of lading covering the rails were presented to the bank, and drafts representing the purchase price were paid by it. When the rails arrived in San Francisco, these bills of lading were delivered by respondent to the Sakura Trading Company to enable it to obtain delivery. The Sakura Trading Company delivered the bills of lading to W. J. Ahern, operating as the Independent Trading Company, who obtained the rails from the carrier and stored them in a warehouse. Nonnegotiable warehouse receipts were issued in the name of the Independent Trading Company. Ahern indorsed and delivered these receipts to the Sakura Trading Company, which, in turn, delivered them to the bank. The receipts were then returned by the bank to the Sakura Trading Company in order that they might be changed to negotiable receipts, to be redelivered to the bank. Ahern withdrew the rails from the warehouse and delivered them to appellant's wharf, taking from the appellant four receipts, which appear to have been returned to the respondent. Contending that the action of Ahern in withdrawing the property from the warehouse and delivering it to the appellant was without its knowledge or consent, the bank notified the defendant that it was entitled to possession of the steel rails; that neither the shipper nor the bank had consented to the shipment of the property to Japan by the defendant. Defendant refused to surrender the property. The present action in replevin was then brought by the bank. The rails were taken from the possession of the defendant by preliminary statutory proceedings and the giving of a bond.

[1-3] It was the contention of the appellant that the warehouse receipts were delivered by the respondent to Ahern for the purpose of enabling the rails to be withdrawn from storage and delivered to it, to be transported to Japan, pursuant to arrangements theretofore made by Ahern on behalf of the Sakura Trading Company. The position taken by the respondent was that the withdrawal of the rails from the warehouse by Ahern and their delivery to the appellant was surreptitious, without its knowledge, and in fraud of its rights. On the issue thus presented there was ample testimony on the part of the respondent to support its position. The appellant offered no evidence in rebuttal. Consequently the finding of the jury is conclusive of the controversy on that point. The probability, or the possibility, of the situation claimed by the respondent to exist, were matters addressed to the consideration of the jurors in the court below. This court is not called upon to pass upon those questions on appeal. The fact that the final collateral note, the one for $100,000, given to the bank by R. Sadanaga for the Sakura Trading Company, by its terms recited that it was secured by "26,860 pieces of steel rails, covered Trans-Oceanic Company's receipts (No. 11, No. 18, No. 33 and No. 40)," is without significance in view of the real nature of the entire transaction.

[4, 5] The respondent had advanced large sums of money to the Sakura Trading Company. The delivery by that company to the bank of the various bills of lading and the nonnegotiable warehouse receipts, as evidence of security for the loans, was a sufficient delivery to constitute a valid and binding pledge, and was a symbolical delivery of the rails which vested a special property in the respondent sufficient to enable it to maintain replevin against the appellant. Callahan v. Marshall, 163 Cal. 552, 558, 126 Pac. 358; 21 R. C. L. 644. In addition, there were the various promissory notes (several were executed as the shipments arrived from the east), each carrying an express pledge of the rails by apt words and description, as security for the specified advances. The surreptitious taking by Ahern, and the delivery of the rails to the appellant, did not operate to destroy respondent's rights in the premises.

[6] For another reason the judgment should be affirmed. Appellant in its answer to the replevin suit admitted the possession of the rails, and its refusal after demand to deliver the same. No claim is asserted in the answer that the appellant is a creditor of the Sakura Trading Company, the real owner of the property, nor was there any claim that the appellant has any interest in the property in controversy, nor any lien in good faith for value, or otherwise. Appellant therefore waived a lien, if it ever had any, by its failure to set it up upon demand being made for the delivery of the property. Williams v. Ashe, 111 Cal. 180, 184, 43 Pac. 595; Lee v. De la Motte et al., 189 Pac. 1034.

[7] The respondent, which is a corporation organized under the laws of the empire of Japan, alleged that it was authorized to do business in the state of California. The appellant denied the allegation on information and belief, which was insufficient to raise an issue as to the fact, which could be ascertained from an examination of the public records of the state. Mullally v. Townsend, 119 Cal. 47, 54, 50 Pac. 1066; Mulcahy v. Buckley, 100 Cal. 484, 489, 35 Pac. 144. Notwithstanding the impotency of the denial, appellant now contends that the parties tried the case upon the theory that the answer raised an issue in the court below, and that the proof was insufficient to sustain the allegation. Appellant is mistaken. Both the trial court and the respondent took the view that no issue was raised by the answer, and the trial proceeded on that theory.

Certain errors, alleged to have been committed by the trial court as to rulings on evidence, and in the matter of instructions to the jury, are called to our attention. From our examination of the record we are satisfied there is no merit in the points thus made.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; KERRIGAN, J.

54 Cal. App. 469

PEOPLE v. MORRISON. (Cr. 800.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 7, 1921.)

1. Criminal law — § 1159(5) — Verdict against defense of alibi not reviewable.

A verdict, showing that the jury did not believe the testimony offered by defendant as to his alibi, held not reviewable; there being a conflict in the evidence.

2. Indictment and information — § 176—Instruction as to date of offense not erroneous.

In prosecution, under Pen. Code, § 270, for failure to provide for minor child, an instruction that it was wholly immaterial on what day or night the offense charged in the information was committed, provided it was committed within three years prior to the filing of the information, was proper, under section 800; the crime referred to by the instruction being the failure to provide, not the illicit intercourse resulting in birth of the child, although it was necessary for the people to prove the child's paternity.

3. Indictment and information — § 176 — When variance in proof of date of offense is fatal, stated.

Where evidence of the commission by accused of more than one offense similar in nature to the one charged has been submitted to the jury, and the date of the commission of the offense proved is different from that alleged in the information, although within the period of three years prior to the information, the variance is fatal, if a verdict of guilty might be rendered although only a part of the jury believe the defendant guilty of each separate offense, or if the jurors might not believe the accused guilty of any single offense but find him guilty because of the general evidence of continuous crime, or if accused could not know as to what particular offense, out of many that were testified to, he was placed on trial.

4. Parent and child — § 17(6)—Evidence held to show deserted child dependent on charity.

In prosecution, under Pen. Code, § 270, for failure to provide for minor child, evidence held to show that accused's child was dependent upon charity for its food, clothing, and shelter.

5. Parent and child — § 17(6)—Evidence held to show accused's ability to support child.

In prosecution, under Pen. Code, § 270, for failure to provide for minor child, evidence that, during the period of alleged failure to provide, accused was able-bodied and in the government employment as chief machinist's mate, was sufficient to raise the inference of accused's ability to maintain his offspring.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; E. A. Luce, Judge.

Joseph Daniel Morrison was convicted of failing to provide for his minor child, and from the judgment and sentence thereafter pronounced he appeals. Affirmed.

F. F. Grant, of San Diego, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Arthur Keetch, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CRAIG, J. In this case the defendant is charged with having failed to provide for his minor child under section 270 of the Penal Code of California. He was found guilty, and from the judgment and sentence thereafter pronounced he appeals.

The first ground relied upon for reversal is alibi and certain alleged erroneous instructions given by the court concerning the date upon which appellant maintains the prosecution must prove that the child was conceived.

[1] The prosecutrix, Marie L. Mooney, testified that she had sexual intercourse with the defendant in San Diego on the 20th day of January, 1920, between the hours of 2 and 3 in the morning; that conception took place as a result of which the child was born. The defendant testified that at the time mentioned he was on the high seas and not in San Diego. Evidence both oral and documentary was introduced which corroborated the defendant in this regard. It must be clear that the record thus presents a direct and irreconcilable conflict in the evidence. Apparently the jury did not believe the testimony offered in support of the defendant's alibi. They had the right to accept the statements of the prosecutrix as true. Their verdict shows that they did this, and an appellate court cannot review their decision upon the credit to be given the witnesses or the weight of the testimony. People v. Hoosier, 24 Cal. App. 752, 142 Pac. 514; People v. Vukojevich, 25 Cal. App. 460, 143 Pac. 1058; People v. Sears, 119 Cal. 267, 51 Pac. 325.

[2, 3] Appellant insists that the jury would not have rendered a verdict of guilty had it not been for certain alleged erroneous instructions given it by the court. We will consider these instructions, the first of which is as follows:

"The court instructs you that it is wholly immaterial on what day or night the offense charged in the information was committed, provided you believe from the evidence it was committed and that the same was committed within three years prior to the filing of the information in this case."

This is but a statement of the law as provided in section 800 of our Penal Code. In People v. Williams, 133 Cal. 165, 65 Pac. 323, our Supreme Court said concerning this provision of the Code:

"But, it is said, time is not material, further than it must appear that the crime was committed before the indictment was found, and within the period of limitations. The statement is not strictly accurate. The proof of an offense on a different date is a variance, but, in general, not a fatal variance."

In this case and in People v. Elgar, 36 Cal. App. 114, 171 Pac. 697, as well as others in which the variance was held fatal because the date of the commission of the offense proved was different from that alleged in the information but within the period of three years prior to the filing of the information, evidence of the commission by the defendant of more than one offense similar in nature to the one charged had been submitted to the jury. Where the state is allowed such exceptional latitude in making its proof and avails itself of this privilege, a verdict of guilty might be rendered although only a part of the jury believe the defendant guilty of each separate offense, or under such circumstances the jurors might not believe the defendant guilty of any single offense but find him guilty because of the general evidence of continuous crime; also, in such a case, the defendant could not know as to what particular offense, out of many that were testified to, he was placed upon trial. When one of these conditions exist the variance is fatal. People v. Williams, supra. These reasons do not apply to the instant case. The instruction criticized is a correct statement of the law, but appellant has misconstrued its application. The offense charged and of which the defendant was convicted is failure to provide for his minor child, etc. It is true that the paternity of the child must be established, but he is not accused of any crime because of having had sexual intercourse with the prosecutrix. The cases relied upon by appellant all involve a fatal variance between the information or indictment and the proof. In this case the date of conception is not mentioned, nor should it be in the information. In the inquiry as to the paternity of the child, Miss Mooney testified that the intercourse which resulted in its conception occurred on the 20th day of January, 1920. However, the jury, in the exercise of its undoubted function to weigh the testimony, may have concluded, in view of all of the evidence, including that of the date of the child's birth, that the act resulting in its conception occurred upon another date than that stated by her.

But it is said that the court gave another instruction on the same subject which informed the jury that the date of the act of sexual intercourse need not be proved to have been even within the period of three years before filing of the information. Assuming that the instruction could be so construed, it would be a correct statement of the law. In cases where the child for whose criminal neglect the parent is being prosecuted is more than three years old, for example ten years, of course, sexual relation must have occurred more than three years prior to the filing of the information.

[4] 2. Appellant next contends that it is only when a child becomes dependent upon the charity of strangers or is likely to be a public charge that the parent's neglect is criminal under 270, Penal Code. People v. Clark, 201 Pac. 465, is cited to sustain this proposition and further to the effect that unless the state is shown to have been compelled to intervene and furnish food and clothing and shelter to the child, the father is immune from prosecution. The evidence in the instant case shows that the child of the defendant was dependent upon charity for its food, clothing, and shelter. The mother and child were inmates of the Door of Hope Home for Girls, a charitable institution, financed in part by the city of San Diego, in part by private contributions and in part by the state of California. It is true that the prosecutrix secured $15 a month as a loan from a Mrs. Dick which she paid to the home, but by uncontradicted evidence it was fully established that this was a very small part of the actual expense of the mother and child's maintenance, and that this sum was applied to the mother's support also, which in itself cost the institution $45 a month. Hence, even People v. Clark, supra, does not assist appellant's claim in this regard.

[5] 3. Finally, it is insisted that no evidence was introduced sufficient to prove that the defendant had the ability to provide for his child. The evidence of the defendant himself, as well as of the people showed that during the period in question defendant was able-bodied and in the employ of the United States government in the capacity of chief machinist's mate. This evidence was sufficient from which the jury might properly draw the inference that the defendant possessed the ability to maintain his offspring. Upon such an affirmative showing and a total absence of evidence to meet it, this court cannot say that the verdict was not supported by the evidence in so far as this element of the offense charged is concerned. People v. Turner, 29 Cal. App. 195, 156 Pac. 381. In the case of People v. Smith, 38 Cal. App. 175, 175 Pac. 696, cited by appellant, the fact appeared affirmatively and without contradiction that the defendant was financially unable to support his minor child. The same is true of the case of People v. Forester, 29 Cal. App. 460, 155 Pac. 1022.

In the case at bar, the jury's verdict is sufficiently supported upon every material element of the charge. We find no error in the court's instructions.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; WORKS, J.

54 Cal. App. 550

STEINHOFFER et al. v. GEORGESON.
(Civ. 2325.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California, Oct. 15, 1921.)

1. Executors and administrators ⇨221(5) — Evidence held to support finding that services were not covered by agreement for board and lodgings and to justify amount recovered.

In an action to recover for board, lodging, and services in caring for defendant's intestate, evidence held sufficient to warrant findings that an agreement for board and lodgings did not include plaintiff's services as a nurse, that the decedent's agent promised to pay additional compensation therefor, and that $1,920 was the reasonable value of such services for almost 21 months.

2. Executors and administrators ⇨221(5) — Proof of service sufficient to warrant recovery.

In an action for the reasonable value of services, proof of the services was sufficient to entitle plaintiff to recover any balance due her; the burden of proving payment being on defendant.

3. Executors and administrators ⇨221(3) — Evidence that there was no agreement for care when agreement for board and lodgings made not incompetent and irrelevant.

In an action to recover for board, lodging, and services in caring for defendant's intestate, in which defendant claimed that there was an agreement to pay $25 a month for all of such items, while plaintiff claimed that the agreement covered only board and lodgings, evidence that in the conversations between plaintiff and decedent's agent there was no agreement made about care was not inadmissible as incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial.

4. Executors and administrators ⇨221(3) — Testimony that decedent's agent promised to pay for services held admissible.

In an action for board, lodging, and services in caring for defendant's intestate involving a dispute as to whether an agreement for board and lodgings also covered care, testimony that the decedent's agent repeatedly stated that he desired plaintiff to care for decedent, and that she would be paid therefor was competent.

5. Appeal and error ⇨1051(1) — Admission of conclusion harmless where there was sufficient competent testimony to same effect.

In an action to recover for board, lodging, and services in caring for defendant's intestate, testimony that in conversations relative to board and lodging there was no agreement about care, if a conclusion, was harmless, where there was sufficient competent testimony that there was no agreement fixing the compensation for the care.

6. Evidence ⇨471(28) — Testimony that there was no stipulated compensation for services not a conclusion.

In an action for board, lodging and services in caring for defendant's intestate, testimony that in conversations concerning board and lodging there was no agreement made about care, if meaning that no stipulated compensation was agreed upon for plaintiff's services as a nurse, involved merely the statement of a fact and was properly admitted.

7. Witnesses ⇨255(2) — Can only use writing to refresh recollection about fact of which witness had knowledge.

Code Civ. Proc. § 2047, allowing a witness to refresh his memory respecting a fact by anything written by himself, etc., refers to a fact of which the witness derived knowledge through his own perceptions, and could therefore testify to under section 1845, and not a fact coming to his knowledge through the statement or declaration of another, unless such statement is itself the fact to be proved.

8. Witnesses ⇨255(2) — Testimony held to show that information of witness making memorandum was obtained from another.

The testimony of a witness refreshing her recollection by reference to a memorandum made by her of purchases of goods by her mother for defendant's intestate held to show that, with the exception of a few articles, she obtained her information respecting the purchases from her mother, and hence could not testify thereto.

9. Witnesses ⇨167 — Cannot testify to facts occurring before decedent's death, where information derived from incompetent witness.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1880, making parties to actions against executors or administrators incompetent as to any matter occurring before the decedent's death, plaintiff's daughter cannot testify concerning the purchase of goods for the decedent by plaintiff of which she kept a memorandum, where her information concerning the purchases was obtained from her mother.

10. Witnesses ⇨183½, New, vol. 9 Key-No. Series — Where testimony did not separate items about which witness knew from others, it would not support recovery.

Where a witness testifying concerning the purchase of goods by plaintiff for defendant's intestate obtained her information as to some of the purchases from plaintiff, and did not point out the particular articles or the number thereof which she personally procured, and it was reasonably inferable that those procured by herself were very few, her testimony would not support a recovery in any amount.

Appeal from Superior Court, Humboldt County; Denver Sevier, Judge.

Action by Bertha Steinhoffer and husband against F. W. Georgeson as executor of Alice M. Carroll, sometimes called Alice M. Perry, deceased. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed on condition that plaintiffs remit part of the amount recovered.

L. F. Puter, of Eureka, for appellant.
W. Ernest Dickson, of Eureka, for respondents.

HART, J. The action is to recover the sum of $2,059.43, alleged to be a balance due the plaintiffs for personal services rendered and moneys expended for the appellant's testate during her lifetime.

The plaintiff, Bertha Steinhofner, is the real or actual plaintiff in the case, her husband, Herman M. Steinhofner being but a nominal party plaintiff, he having been joined with his wife as plaintiff because the moneys alleged to be due her from the defendant constitute community property.

The cause was tried before a jury, and a verdict returned in favor of the plaintiffs for the sum of $2,024.43. Thereupon judgment was entered for the plaintiffs in said sum. Thereafter a motion for a new trial was made by the defendant and denied by the court.

The defendant prosecutes this appeal from the judgment.

The complaint is in four counts. In the first it is alleged that the deceased, in her lifetime, became indebted to the plaintiff Bertha Steinhofner in the sum of $525 for board and room furnished deceased by said plaintiff for 21 months, at the agreed price of $25 per month. The second count is upon a quantum meruit and a quantum valebat, and therein it is alleged that the deceased became indebted to plaintiff for services rendered and goods furnished by plaintiffs for deceased for her use and benefit and at her special instance and request, "as shown by items 2, 3, 4, and 5 of Exhibit A, which is hereby referred to and made a part hereof," the said exhibit being an itemized account of the services and goods alleged to have been so furnished. It is alleged that the services so rendered and the goods so furnished were and are reasonably worth the sum of $1,920. In the third count it is alleged that the plaintiffs advanced money for goods had and received by deceased during her lifetime and for her use and benefit and at her special instance and request, amounting to the sum of $69.43, as shown by the itemized list above referred to. The fourth count is upon a quantum meruit for work and labor performed for deceased at her special instance and request by one Otto Steinhofner, son of the plaintiffs; it being alleged that said services were and are reasonably worth the sum of $35, and that the claim therefor was prior to the institution of this action and for a valuable consideration assigned and transferred to the plaintiffs. As to this last count or cause for action, it may be stated that the same was dismissed during the progress of the trial upon motion of counsel for the plaintiffs.

It is alleged in each count of the amended complaint that the several claims therein set up were duly presented to the defendant as executor of the last will of the deceased, and that the same were rejected by said executor. The answer of the defendant specifically denies each and every material allegation of the complaint.

The principal question presented here for decision is founded upon the assignment that the evidence was insufficient to justify the verdict. It is also claimed that the court erred to the prejudice of the defendant in certain rulings upon the evidence.

[1] As to the question of the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict, the specific contention of the defendant is that an express agreement was entered into between Mr. L. M. Puter, the attorney and agent of the deceased, and Mrs. Bertha Steinhofner, by the terms of which the latter was to furnish board and lodging to the deceased and to take care of her at the rate of $25 per month. On the other hand, it is contended by the plaintiffs that the original agreement between Mr. Puter and Mrs. Steinhofner was that she was merely to furnish board and lodging to the deceased for the sum of $25 per month, and that there was no agreement then entered into between them as to taking care of the deceased, who, it appears from the evidence was a woman of some 70 years of age, feeble in health, and who needed constant attention. The plaintiff Mrs. Bertha Steinhofner was, under the terms of section 1880 of the Code of Civil Procedure, precluded from testifying as to the agreement or the terms thereof, and therefore it was necessary for the plaintiffs to establish their case by the testimony of other witnesses. The record, which is brought here under the alternative method, is voluminous so far as the testimony is concerned, but it will not be necessary to enter herein into a detailed or minute review of the testimony for the purpose of showing, as we are persuaded, after an examination of said testimony, is true, that there is a conflict in the evidence upon the character and scope of the agreement between Mr. Puter and the plaintiff Bertha Steinhofner. It will suffice to state the facts as they were established by the evidence in a general way. The agreement between Mr. Puter and Mrs. Steinhofner was not reduced to writing, and consequently the terms thereof must be determined, as they were required to be determined by the jury, upon parol testimony.

Contrary to the usual custom in dealing with the questions of fact in an opinion, we will first advert to the testimony of Mr. Puter, who was a witness for the defendant, for the purpose of showing the circumstances under which the deceased went to the home of the plaintiffs to reside. First it should be explained that the deceased was, at the time she was brought to the home of the plaintiffs, the owner of a ranch situated some distance from the city of Eureka, in Humboldt county, and that she had practically been living alone on said ranch. It also appears that the deceased was approximately of the age of 70 years and in feeble health, due jointly to her physical ailments and venerable years. The evidence shows without conflict—indeed, it was admitted by Mr. Puter—that Mrs. Carroll was addicted to the excessive use of morphine, cigarettes, and intoxicating liquors, and it is thus reasonable to infer that her enfeebled condition was due to some extent to the use of these stimulants. At any rate, it was conceived that the state of her physical health was such as to make it necessary to surround her by conditions more conducive to her comfort and welfare than those existing on her ranch. In pursuance of this plan, Mr. L. M. Puter, who was her legal adviser and looked after her business interests, acting for her as her agent, made arrangements with the plaintiff Mrs. Bertha Steinhofner whereby the deceased should be taken into the home of the latter and there remain until such time as she might regain her health or until she should pass out of this life. Accordingly the deceased was taken to the home of the plaintiff in the month of December, 1915, and remained there, under the care of Mrs. Bertha Steinhofner, until the time of her death, which occurred on August 23, 1917, a period of 21 months. Mr. Puter positively testified that the understanding or agreement between him and Mrs. Bertha Steinhofner was that the latter should take the deceased into her home and there furnish her with board and lodging and otherwise look after her for the sum of $25 per month. He likewise declared that this agreement distinctly included whatever attention the deceased might require and also the washing of her clothes. He further testified that he said to Mrs. Steinhofner that she (Mrs. Steinhofner) could purchase at certain stores with which he (Puter) had made arrangements for that purpose such articles as might be required or necessary for the needs and comfort of the deceased. This, he repeatedly asseverated, was the full scope of the agreement between him and Mrs. Steinhofner. Counsel for the defendant insist here that there was no contradiction of the testimony of Mr. Puter with regard to the terms and scope of the agreement as so explained. We are, however, as before stated, not prepared to accept that view.

The daughter of Mrs. Steinhofner, Mrs. Laura Sievert, testified that a short time after the deceased was taken to her mother's home she overheard a conversation between her mother and Mr. Puter in which her mother said to Mr. Puter that she had found that the deceased, was practically helpless, was unable to take care of herself, and required constant attention, and that she therefore could not afford to keep her at her home, furnish her with board, and lodging and give her the care and attention which she required for the sum of $25 per month; that Mr. Puter replied that he desired Mrs. Steinhofner to board and lodge and take care of the deceased in a proper way, and that he would pay her well for her services. In fact, this witness testified that she heard similar conversations between Puter and her mother on several different occasions, and that Puter always substantially promised to pay Mrs. Steinhofner additional compensation for her services as a nurse. She further testified that she heard the deceased, Mrs. Carroll, say to her mother on divers occasions that she (Mrs. Carroll) knew that she was "a great care" and required a great amount of attention, and that she desired and intended to compensate Mrs. Steinhofner well for her services. In fact, the witness proceeded, Mrs. Carroll had at several different times drawn her own check for a certain sum on the bank in favor of Mrs. Steinhofner, as in payment for the latter's services and accommodations, but it appeared that all her money was deposited in the bank in the name of Mr. Puter, and that consequently her checks were returned marked, "No funds."

That the physical condition of the deceased was such as to imperatively require the services of a nurse during the period of time that she was at Mrs. Steinhofner's is shown by the testimony of Mrs. Sievert, who positively declared that the deceased had to be helped to the table when meals were served, had to be assisted to her room, and required almost the constant attention of her mother every day, and during the last three months of her illness her mother had to be with and attend the deceased almost every hour of the day and night. She further testified that the deceased was, on account of her not being able to control her intestinal and urinary organs, filthy, and thus her mother was required to change the bedding of the deceased several times a day; that the deceased was an incessant smoker of cigarettes, indulged in beer and whisky every day, and was a user of morphine or some other narcotic; that she had the habit of constantly expectorating; and that after her death the room which had been occupied by her was in a very unsanitary condition, and that the bedding was left in such condition as to necessitate its destruction by fire. The witness testified that her mother was and had been for many years a practical nurse in Eureka, and that during the period of time that the deceased was at her home her mother was unable to take any outside cases. She stated that she was familiar with the compensation ordinarily paid nurses in Eureka, and that such compensation amounted to $2.50 per day or $5 per day where the nurse's services were given both day and night. In a word, this witness went into great detail as to the services rendered by her mother for the deceased and gave a vivid description of the deleterious hygienic conditions which were brought about at the home of her mother by reason of the filthy personal condition of the deceased which followed from the peculiar ailments from which she suffered during the time that she was under the care of the plaintiff.

Mrs. Sievert's testimony was corroborated in many vital particulars by other members of the Steinhofers family, and in a measure by neighbors of the Steinhofers. We see no necessity for presenting herein a résumé of the testimony of these witnesses. We think that the testimony was sufficient, if believed by the jury, as evidently it was, to warrant the conclusion that the agreement between Mr. Puter and Mrs. Bertha Steinhofers, as originally made, did not include services as a nurse and the constant attention which, it was developed after the deceased had been in the home of the Steinhofers for a short period, was absolutely necessary to make her as comfortable as she could be made under the circumstances, and that Mr. Puter, subsequently to the making of the original agreement, promised to pay Mrs. Steinhofers additional compensation for her services as a nurse. Indeed, it is not probable that Mrs. Steinhofers would have agreed to furnish the deceased with board and lodging and give her entire time and attention in nursing her, as the description of her physical condition would show was required, for the sum of $25 per month. In fact, it can be declared as a matter of common knowledge that $25 per month, even at the time at which Mrs. Carroll was taken to the home of Mrs. Steinhofers, involved a sum for such accommodation rather below the price at which such accommodations could ordinarily then be obtained. Certainly at the present time no such accommodation could be obtained at that price. These considerations, it seems to us, support the testimony of Mrs. Sievert tending to show that an amended agreement was made between Puter and Mrs. Steinhofers covering the compensation she should receive for services additional to that stipulated in the original agreement whereby she was merely to furnish board and lodging to the deceased.

In addition to the testimony above adverted to, it also appeared that deceased, during her residence at Mrs. Steinhofers's, was attended by three different physicians. One of these, Dr. Walsh, testified that the deceased was afflicted with lung and heart trouble; that she was, on the several occasions he attended her, in a very feeble condition. Dr. Walsh also testified that he was familiar with the compensation ordinarily paid practical nurses in the city of Eureka, and that $2.50 per day and board constituted the amount usually paid where the services were performed during the daytime, and double that amount where the nurse was required to attend the patient both day and night.

It is very clear from the testimony that the amount claimed by Mrs. Steinhofers and allowed by the jury for the services she rendered as a nurse to the deceased, when measured by the face value of the testimony describing the physical condition and personal habits of the deceased while she was under the charge of Mrs. Steinhofers, involved only a fair and reasonable return for such services.

[2] It was admitted that $490 had been paid Mrs. Steinhofers on account, which Puter claimed was paid under the agreement as it was originally made. There is no direct testimony that any other sum was paid by Puter to Mrs. Steinhofers. The proof of the services rendered was, however, sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to recover any balance that might be due her; the burden of proving the payment of the account being upon the defendant. Stuart v. Lord, 138 Cal. 672, 72 Pac. 142.

We now come to the consideration of the rulings respecting certain evidence of which the defendant complains.

[3-6] The witness Mrs. Sievert, in explaining the purport of the several conversations she overheard between her mother and Puter relative to the providing by Mrs. Steinhofers of board and lodging to the deceased, stated that in said conversations "there was no agreement made about her care." To that statement counsel for defendant objected, and moved that it be stricken out and so expunged from the record. The court overruled the objection and denied the motion. The grounds of the objection and the motion were that the testimony was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial. If it was objectionable at all, it was on the ground first stated—that is to say, that the statement appears to be the conclusion of the witness. But, from her previous testimony, we conclude that what she thus intended to say was that no stipulated sum, in addition to the sum at which Mrs. Steinhofers agreed to provide the deceased with board and lodging, had been agreed upon between Puter and Mrs. Steinhofers for any services as a nurse which the latter might perform for deceased. The witness repeatedly declared that, in the several conversations between Puter and her mother relative to deceased and to which she was a listener, Puter invariably stated in effect that he desired Mrs. Steinhofers to give the deceased such care as the exigencies of her physical condition might from time to time or at any time require and that "I will pay you well; * * * I will do well by you." This was competent testimony for the purpose of showing that no agreement was made between Puter and Mrs. Steinhofers whereby the latter was to receive for her services as a nurse certain specified compensation; in other words, it tended to show that no agreement as to the amount to be paid to her for her services was agreed upon. Therefore, if it is to be conceded that the statement complained of involved incompetent testimony, it is, nevertheless, clear that there was sufficient competent testimony to overcome or so neutralize the effect thereof as to justify the conclusion that said statement could not have produced in the trial of the case a baleful influence against the just rights of the defendant. Indeed, if the meaning of the statement referred to is what we assume it to have been intended to be by the witness, to wit, that no stipulated compensation had been agreed upon between Puter and Mrs. Steinhofer for the latter's services as a nurse, then the testimony involved merely the statement of a fact and was perfectly proper.

[7] The next assignment involves a ruling which was obviously erroneous, and, while affecting one only of the counts set out in the complaint, was plainly damaging to the rights of the defendant commensurately with the scope of its application to the issues. The ruling to which we now refer arose under the following circumstances: Mrs. Sievert, addressing her testimony to the third cause of action of the complaint, in which it is alleged that Mrs. Steinhofer advanced and expended the total sum of $69.43 for goods had and received by the deceased during the latter's lifetime and while she was at the home of Mrs. Steinhofer, stated that she (the witness) kept a written itemized account of the moneys so advanced by her mother, having first put the items down on loose paper and thereafter and on the same occasion transferred all said items to a book. This book was not introduced in evidence as a book account, but the witness Mrs. Sievert, in testifying to the asserted correctness of the items making up the purported account, was permitted to use said book for the purpose of refreshing her memory as to said items. Code Civ. Proc. § 2047. But we are of the opinion that the book was not only incompetent as evidence of the correctness of the alleged account, but also that it did not constitute a proper memorandum from which the witness was authorized to refresh her memory, except in so far as there might be articles itemized in the book as having been procured for the deceased which were procured and purchased by the witness herself. Section 2047 of the Code of Civil Procedure, supra, provides in part:

"A witness is allowed to refresh his memory respecting a fact, by anything written by himself, or under his direction, at the time when the fact occurred, or immediately thereafter, or at any other time when the fact was fresh in his memory, and he knew that the same was correctly stated in the writing."

Manifestly said section refers to a fact of the existence or occurrence of which the witness himself has personal knowledge. In other words, the fact as to which he may refresh his memory must be one which he has derived knowledge of from or through his own perceptions (Code Civ. Proc. § 1845), and not a fact which has come to his knowledge only through the statement or declaration of some other person, unless such statement or declaration is itself the fact in dispute or to be proved.

[8] The testimony of Mrs. Sievert as to her knowledge of the purchase by her mother of the various articles contained in the account book is in part as follows:

"Q. I will ask you if that is the book in which you kept the accounts (handing witness book)? A. Yes, sir. Q. And those accounts were furnished you by your mother? Mr. Puter: I desire to see this book and desire to object to it as incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial. Court: Present it to defendant's counsel please. Counsel for Plaintiff: Q. I will ask you if these items were all in your handwriting? A. Yes, sir. * * * Q. Now, Mrs. Sievert, you say she [Mrs. Carroll] was there for a period of 21 months? A. Yes, sir. Q. And you kept the items of book account? A. Yes, sir. Q. During that time? A. Yes, sir. Q. And you also entered in the book items of articles that were furnished by your mother to Mrs. Carroll? A. Yes, sir. Q. I will ask you if these are the items (shows witness)? Mr. Puter: We object until he asks the question; may it please the court we desire to ask the question when these items were made, before he goes into details. Court: Very well. Mr. Puter: I want to ask the witness, this is the book is it that I hold in my hand that you put down the record of the account your mother had with Mrs. Carroll? A. Yes, sir. Q. That is the charge? A. The record I kept track of it all the time; every time she got something I put it down in this book. Q. Every day? A. Yes, sir. Q. In other words, this was your account book when she was first there in 1915 and along, and from that time on every day or two you came there your mother would give you the different items which you wrote down in this book? A. Just what there was. * * * By Counsel for Plaintiff: Q. Now, I wish you to examine this account book and say whether or not you know that these items were furnished, actually furnished, and paid for by your mother and furnished to Mrs. Carroll at Mrs. Carroll's request? Q. Yes, sir. Q. These items you have here? A. Yes, sir. Q. Now, these are the items of account that were furnished you by your mother? A. Yes, sir. Q. The items were furnished you and you entered them in the book day by day? A. Yes, sir. Q. And these were the items that were furnished you at the time? A. Yes, sir. * * * The Court (after objection to the above examination of the witness): Take the first item and ask her if she knows of her own knowledge that her mother got it; it will be all right; but, if she took her mother's word for it, it will be hearsay. The witness: I got some of the things myself. Q. (by counsel for plaintiff): Some of these items you have put down here you bought yourself? A. Yes, sir. Q. And you know Mrs. Carroll got them? A. Yes, sir. Q. As to these items, they were practically all items of whisky and tobacco? A. Yes, sir. Q. Did you during all the period that she was there know of her having whisky and tobacco furnished her in the house? A. Yes, sir. Q. Now, could you at this time swear to the correctness of each one of the items? A. Yes, sir. Q. Of your own knowledge? A. Yes. I know they were gotten. I know my brother got some, my father got some of the things. I know he had to go down at night at 11 o'clock to get some for her, when she did not have enough whisky at nights. Q. I understand that these things were written from your own knowledge and put down there yourself? A. Yes, sir; I would always write down. If I happened not to be over for a couple of days she [witness' mother] would mark it down. Court: What she knew herself would be all right, not what her mother told her and then wrote down; that would be hearsay. Witness: I know she got the things. Court: You saw the things then? A. Yes, I saw the articles; that is the reason I know. Q. By counsel: You know that the things were furnished and for her in the house? A. Yes, sir. Q. And you know that of your own knowledge? A. Yes, sir."

It is not a far-fetched conclusion from the above testimony that, with the exception of a few articles which she claims to have personally purchased or procured herself, Mrs. Sievert obtained whatever knowledge she possessed of the purchase of the articles enumerated in the book kept by her from information received by her from her mother. Indeed, it will be observed from the above excerpts from her testimony that the witness directly admitted that she inserted the several items of purchase in the book as they were given to her by her mother. She further stated, it will be noted, that when it happened that she did not visit her mother's home for a day or two, she would take the items from a memorandum kept by her mother on those days and transfer them to the book. It is perfectly clear, when considering in its entirety her testimony relative to the alleged book account, that Mrs. Sievert had no personal knowledge of the fact of the purchase of many, if not most, of the articles put down in said book, but, as above stated, obtained such knowledge as she had of such purchases from Mrs. Steinhof. It is true that she asserted, in a positive manner, it seems, that she personally knew that the items in the book were correct, and that the total of the advancements made by her mother as so evidenced was correct. But it is plainly manifest, from her own testimony, that, if she meant thus to say that she personally knew that the articles enumerated in the book, except such of them as she might herself have procured, were actually purchased by her mother, her statement in that respect was wholly incredible. She could have truthfully said that the entries in the book as she inserted them therein were correct, that is to say, that she correctly entered the items as they were furnished by her mother; but, upon the face of her testimony, it is clear that she could not truthfully state that she knew of her own knowledge or otherwise than from the information received from her mother that the latter actually purchased the same.

[9] The testimony of the witness, with the exception of that part thereof to the effect that she herself had purchased some of the articles, was manifestly incompetent, not alone because it was hearsay (San Francisco Teaming Co. v. Gray, 11 Cal. App. 314, 104 Pac. 999), but also for the reason that its effect, if it were allowed to stand, would necessarily be to permit an evasion of section 1880 of the Code of Civil Procedure, that is to say, the effect of the testimony would be to permit to be done indirectly what said section positively declares cannot be done directly, viz. admitting as in proof of the claim against the estate of a deceased person the testimony of the claimant. It follows that said testimony was wholly insufficient to justify the implied finding of the jury that the third cause of action of the complaint was sustained.

[10] Indeed, we think, that, as to said cause of action, had a motion to that end been submitted, the court below could justly have adopted no other course than to grant a motion for a nonsuit; and this, too, in the face of the fact that Mrs. Sievert testified that she herself procured for her mother certain of the articles set down in the book. While she was, of course, competent to testify as to the articles that she purchased herself, her testimony in that particular was so indefinite and uncertain and unsatisfactory that a definite finding could hardly with justice have been made or deduced therefrom. She failed to point out the particular articles or the number thereof which she personally procured, and thus the difficulty of determining how much the plaintiff would be entitled to for the advancements made by her through the purchases made by Mrs. Sievert is plainly apparent. It is reasonably inferable from her testimony that the witness herself personally procured very few of the articles charged in the book against the deceased. Under all these circumstances, we think that the entire testimony of Mrs. Sievert addressed to the third cause of action should have been disregarded by the jury, and we therefore conclude that it is the duty of this court to make an order in its judgment herein in accordance with this view.

Accordingly the following order or judgment is hereby rendered: That if the plaintiffs, within 30 days from the filing of this opinion, remit in due and proper form the sum of $69.43 of the amount awarded them by the verdict and judgment in this case, the said judgment shall stand as affirmed, but, if the plaintiffs fail or refuse within said time to remit said sum ($69.43) from said judgment, then the judgment appealed from will stand as reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

54 Cal. App. 571

WILLIAMS v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO.
(Civ. 2302.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 17, 1921. On Petition for Modification, Nov. 16, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 15, 1921.)

1. Judgment ⚡638—Judgment first rendered in suits in courts of concurrent jurisdiction is res adjudicata.

Where suits over the same subject-matter and with the same parties are pending in courts having concurrent jurisdiction, it is not the final judgment in the first suit, but the first final judgment rendered in either suit, that renders the issues res adjudicata in the other court.

2. Master and servant ⚡416—Compensation award no bar to action under federal Employers' Liability Act by different parties.

An award in a workmen's compensation proceeding instituted by the wife of a deceased employee in her individual capacity is not a bar to the whole cause of action in an action under the federal Employers' Liability Act, brought by her as administratrix for the benefit of herself and an adult daughter; the plaintiffs in the two proceedings not being the same.

3. Master and servant ⚡416—Finding of employment in intrastate commerce conclusive on parties to compensation award.

An award in a workmen's compensation proceeding, based on a finding of the Industrial Commission that the deceased employee was employed in intrastate commerce, is conclusive of such fact as between the same parties or their privies, so long as the judgment remains unmodified.

4. Judgment ⚡670—Conclusive against person appearing individually in one case and in representative capacity in another.

As a general rule, where one appears in a representative capacity in one action, and in an individual capacity in another action involving the same subject-matter, without any change in his relation to the subject-matter, the judgment in the one case is conclusive of his rights in the other.

5. Courts ⚡92—Where appellate court sustains both grounds of decision, neither ruling is obiter.

Where there are two grounds, upon either of which the judgment of the trial court can be rested, and the appellate court sustains both, the ruling on neither is obiter, but each is the judgment of the court, and of equal validity with the other.

6. Master and servant ⚡416—Compensation award conclusive of claimant's individual rights when suing as administratrix.

Where the wife of a deceased employee instituted a compensation proceeding in her individual capacity, and sued as administratrix under the federal Employers' Liability Act (U. S. Comp. St. §§ 8657-8665), an award in the compensation proceeding, based on a finding that the employee was employed in intrastate commerce, was conclusive in the action under the federal act as against the administratrix, so far as she represented herself as one of the beneficiaries.

7. Death ⚡18(3)—Adult married daughter held to have no right of action for father's death.

An adult married daughter of a deceased employee, who had received no assistance from her father after her marriage, but was supported by her husband, and, during the time he was in the navy, by a government allowance, held to have no reasonable expectation of any pecuniary benefit from a continuation of the father's life, and hence there could be no recovery for her benefit under the federal Employers' Liability Act (U. S. Comp. St. §§ 8657-8665).

8. Courts ⚡97(5)—Decisions of federal Supreme Court controlling on right of recovery under federal law.

The question as to the right of recovery under the federal Employers' Liability Act (U. S. Comp. St. §§ 8657-8665) for the benefit of an adult married daughter is a federal question as to which decisions of the United States Supreme Court are controlling.

9. Trial ⚡252(11)—Instruction as to duty of support held inapplicable where child not dependent.

In an action for death of employee, an instruction that it was the duty of the father and mother of any poor person unable to maintain himself by work to maintain such person to the extent of their ability, though correct as an abstract statement of law, was inapplicable so far as recovery was sought for the benefit of an adult daughter who was not dependent.

10. Master and servant ⚡284(1)—Engagement in interstate commerce question of fact.

In an action under the federal Employers' Liability Act (U. S. Comp. St. §§ 8657-8665), the question whether the deceased employee was employed in interstate commerce at the time of his death is one of fact for the determination of the jury.

On Petition for Modification.

11. Judgment ⚡17(1)—Person not generally bound unless he had notice and right to appear and assert interest.

As a general proposition, no one is bound by a judgment unless he had legal notice (though not necessarily actual notice) of the proceeding in which it was rendered, and was entitled to appear and assert his interest in the subject-matter.

12. Master and servant ☞416—Compensation award not conclusive as judgment in rem.

A workmen's compensation award, based on a finding that the deceased employee was employed in intrastate commerce, is not conclusive as against the whole world as a judgment in rem under Code Civ. Proc. § 1908, providing that a judgment or order in respect to the personal, political, or legal condition or relation of a particular person is conclusive on the condition or relation of the person.

13. Master and servant ☞416—Compensation award not binding on one not dependent.

A workmen's compensation award based on a finding that the deceased employee was employed in intrastate commerce is not conclusive on an adult daughter who was not dependent on deceased, and not entitled to participate in the award, but for whose benefit recovery is sought under the federal Employers' Liability Act (U. S. Comp. St. §§ 8657-8665).

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Charles Busick, Judge.

Action by Ruth Williams, as administratrix of Harry Williams, deceased, against the Southern Pacific Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Devlin & Devlin, of Sacramento, for appellant.

Theodore A. Bell, of San Francisco, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. Plaintiff was given judgment for damages under the federal Employers' Liability Act (U. S. Comp. St. §§ 8657-8665), for the death of her husband, Harry Williams, alleged to have been caused by the negligence of the defendant while the deceased was in the discharge of his duties as brakeman on an interstate train of the defendant company.

Appellant does not contest the implied finding of negligence, but earnestly contends that the deceased was not employed in interstate commerce at the time of the injury resulting in his death. This contention is based on two propositions advanced by the defendant: First, that the evidence conclusively establishes that the train on which the deceased was employed was not an interstate train; secondly, that in a proceeding instituted by the plaintiff, in her individual capacity, against the defendant before the Industrial Accident Commission, it was adjudged that at the time of his death the deceased was employed in intrastate commerce, and that such determination is res adjudicata between the parties to this action.

The injury and resulting death of Harry Williams occurred November 25, 1917. The original complaint in this action was filed January 9, 1918. On April 12, 1918, the defendant filed its answer, denying that the deceased was employed in interstate commerce at the time of his death. To avoid the bar of the statute of limitations to a recovery before the Industrial Accident Commission in the event of a decision by the superior court that the deceased was not employed in interstate commerce, the plaintiff, Ruth Williams, in her individual capacity, just prior to the expiration of one year from the time of her husband's death, made application to the Commission for adjustment of her claim for damages, alleging the pendency of the action in the superior court, and that the defendant therein had "answered alleging that deceased was engaged in intrastate commerce at the time of his death," and praying that the proceeding before the Commission "be held in abeyance, after service upon the defendant, until final determination of the said civil action." On December 19, 1918, counsel for Mrs. Williams appeared before the Commission and moved that the proceeding be held in abeyance during the pendency of the action in the superior court. The motion was opposed by counsel for the defendant, and was denied by the Commission. Thereupon counsel for Mrs. Williams applied to the Supreme Court for a writ of prohibition restraining the Commission from proceeding in the matter pending the court's action. The application was denied. The defendant admitted all the facts stated in the application before the Commission, and did not resist the award prayed for. The Commission thereupon awarded Mrs. Williams the sum of $5,000 as damages, and a certified copy of its findings and award was filed by the defendant in the superior court of Sacramento county, and judgment thereon was duly entered.

The respondent contends that the doctrine of res adjudicata has no application to the findings and award of the Industrial Accident Commission; that, since the superior court first acquired jurisdiction, its determination of any issue before it is conclusive, notwithstanding a prior inconsistent determination of the same issue by the Commission; and that the parties to the two proceedings are not identical, in that the plaintiff sued as an individual in the one and as administratrix in the other.

In Western Metal Supply Co. v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 411, 156 Pac. 491, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 390, it is said:

"Where compensation is sought the proceedings are in substance those of a court in an action at law. * * * After hearing by the Commission, it makes and files its findings of fact and its 'award which shall state its determination as to the rights of the parties.' * * * The findings thus made are 'conclusive and final' * * * and the award itself is not reviewable except by a writ of certiorari under which the review is restricted in scope.

* * * Any party in interest may file a certified copy of the findings and award with the clerk of the superior court, and judgment must be entered by the clerk in conformity therewith. * * * We shall not take the time to review in detail the cases just cited, but content ourselves with saying that we think there is nothing in them which would support the claim that the powers exercised by the Industrial Accident Commission of this state in making awards of compensation are not strictly judicial."

See, also, Carstens v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 576, 158 Pac. 218; Pacific Coast Casualty Co. v. Pillsbury, 171 Cal. 319, 153 Pac. 24; Gouanillou v. Industrial Accident Commission (Sup.) 193 Pac. 937; Massachusetts, etc., Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 176 Cal. 491, 168 Pac. 1050.

The findings of the Industrial Accident Commission are res adjudicata. In re Hunnewell, 220 Mass. 351, 107 N. E. 934; Centralia Coal Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 297 Ill. 513, 130 N. E. 727.

[1] It is not claimed that either the action in the superior court or the proceeding before the Commission could have been successfully pleaded in abatement of the prosecution of the other, but respondent cites 15 Corpus Juris, 1161, to the effect that—

"Where two tribunals have concurrent jurisdiction over the same parties and subject-matter, 'the tribunal where jurisdiction first attaches retains it exclusively, and will be left to determine the controversy and to fully perform and exhaust its jurisdiction and to decide every issue or question properly arising in the case.'"

At page 1165 of the same volume, however, it is stated that—

"The rule is limited to actions which deal either actually or potentially with specific property or objects, and where a suit is strictly in personam, nothing more than a personal judgment being sought, there is no objection to a subsequent action in another jurisdiction."

There is some confusion in the decisions because of failure to recognize the limitation just stated. In strictly personal actions the great weight of authority sustains the rule as stated in the case of Boatmen's Bank v. Fritzlen, 135 Fed. 667, 68 C. C. A. 288, that—

"It is not the final judgment in the first suit, but the first final judgment, although it may be in the second suit, that renders the issues in such a case res adjudicata in the other court."

For further authorities to the same effect, see Insurance Co. v. Harris, 97 U. S. 331, 24 L. Ed. 959; Schuler v. Isreal, 120 U. S. 506, 7 Sup. Ct. 648, 30 L. Ed. 707; 1 Freeman on Judgments (4th Ed.) § 320; Jones v. Jones, 108 N. Y. 415, 15 N. E. 707, 2 Am. St. Rep. 447; Lancashire Ins. Co. v. Corbetts, 165 Ill. 592, 46 N. E. 631, 36 L. R. A. 640, 56 Am. St. Rep. 280; Davis v. Bedsole, 69 Ala. 362;

Bourgeois v. Jackobs, 45 La. Ann. 1310, 14 South. 68; Oxford v. Paris, 33 Me. 179; Bank of U. S. v. Merchants' Bank, 7 Gill (Md.) 415; Marble v. Keyes, 9 Gray (Mass.) 221; Allis v. Davidson, 23 Minn. 442; Nave v. Adams, 107 Mo. 414, 17 S. W. 958, 28 Am. St. Rep. 421; Casebeer v. Mowry, 55 Pa. 419, 93 Am. Dec. 766.

[2] The plaintiffs in the two proceedings are not the same, and therefore the award of the Commission is not a bar to the whole cause of action in the superior court. Troxell v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 227 U. S. 434, 33 Sup. Ct. 274, 57 L. Ed. 586.

"A judgment obtained by one or more of several joint owners or creditors, having claims against a common debtor, is not a bar to a subsequent action by the other claimants, or separate suits by each of them, for the recovery of their claims, although it is res adjudicata as to the claims of those who brought the former suit." 15 Standard Encyc. of Proc. 514; Suisun L. Co. v. Fairfield School District, 19 Cal. App. 594, 127 Pac. 349; Harris v. Alcock, 10 Gill & J. (Md.) 226, 32 Am. Dec. 158.

[3] A material issue in both proceedings was the character of Williams' employment; if intrastate, the Commission had exclusive jurisdiction to award compensation; if interstate, then the jurisdiction was in the superior court. The Commission determined that the employment was in intrastate commerce, and the fact—

"so determined must, as between the same parties or their privies, be taken as conclusively established so long as the judgment in the first suit remains unmodified. This general rule is demanded by the very object for which civil courts have been established, which is to secure the peace and repose of society by the settlement of matters capable of judicial determination. Its enforcement is essential to the maintenance of social order; for the aid of judicial tribunals would not be invoked for the vindication of rights of persons and property if, as between parties and their privies, conclusiveness did not attend the judgments of such tribunals in respect of all matters properly put in issue and actually determined by them." Southern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 168 U. S. 1, 18 Sup. Ct. 18, 42 L. Ed. 335; 2 Black on Judgments (2d Ed.) § 506.

In Spokane & Inland Empire R. Co. v. Whitley, 237 U. S. 487, 35 Sup. Ct. 655, 59 L. Ed. 1060, L. R. A. 1915F, 736, in construing a statute of Idaho similar to the federal Employers' Liability Act, the court said:

"The recovery authorized is not for the benefit of the 'estate' of the decedent; the proceeds of the recovery are not assets of the estate. Where the personal representative is entitled to sue, it is only as trustee for described persons, the 'heirs' of the decedent. * * * They are the sole beneficiaries. * * * It may also be premised that, when suit is duly brought by the trustee under such a statutory trust, it is a necessary and conclusive presumption that the trust will be executed and the rights of the beneficiaries as fixed by the statute which created the obligation will be recognized by all courts before whom the question of distribution may come."

In Ruiz v. Santa Barbara Gas, etc., Co., 164 Cal. 191, 128 Pac. 332, it is said:

"It is settled by the decisions that an action of the character authorized by section 377 of the Code of Civil Procedure is one solely for the benefit of the heirs, * * * that the money recovered in such an action does not belong to the estate but to the heirs only, and that an administrator has the right to bring the action only because the statute authorizes him to do so, and that he is simply made a statutory trustee to recover damages for the benefit of the heirs."

In Corcoran v. Chesapeake & O. Canal Co., 94 U. S. 741, 24 L. Ed. 190, the plaintiff brought the suit upon certain bonds and the defendant pleaded a prior judgment as a bar. The court, in sustaining the plea, said:

"It is also argued that in that suit Corcoran was only a party in his representative capacity of trustee, and he here sues in his individual character as owner of the bonds, * * * and in this latter capacity is not bound by that decree. But why is he not bound? It was his duty as trustee to represent and protect the holders of these bonds; and for that reason he was made a party, and he faithfully discharged that duty. It would be a new and very dangerous doctrine in the equity practice to hold that the cestui que trust is not bound by the decree against his trustee in the very matter of the trust for which he was appointed. If Corcoran owned any of these bonds and coupons then, he is bound, because he was representing himself. If he has bought them since, he is bound as a privy to the person who was represented."

In Estate of Bell, 153 Cal. 331, 95 Pac. 372, the court arrived at a similar conclusion where the administratrix had proceeded in her representative capacity in one case and in her individual capacity in the other. The court said:

"In both proceedings she was the real party in interest, asserting individual and not representative rights, and is bound by the judgment."

See, also, In re Parks' Estate, 166 Iowa, 403, 147 N. W. 850; Chandler v. White Oak Creek Lumber Co., 131 Tenn. 47, 173 S. W. 449.

In 2 Black on Judgments (2d Ed.) § 536, it is said:

"If one sues as trustee, and afterwards in his individual capacity, in respect of the same subject-matter, he is bound by the decree in the former suit. For if, at that time, he owned the subject of the trust, he was representing himself."

[4] Without multiplying authorities, it may be stated as a general rule that, where one appears in a representative capacity in one action and in his individual capacity in another action, involving the same subject-matter, without any change in his relation to that subject-matter, a judgment in the one case is conclusive of his rights in the other.

Counsel for respondent contends that the rule as thus stated is in conflict with that laid down in the case of Troxell v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 227 U. S. 434, 33 Sup. Ct. 274, 57 L. Ed. 586. The judgment pleaded as a bar in that case was given in an action by Mrs. Troxell as surviving widow in behalf of herself and children for the death of her husband. The court in that action held that it was brought under the state law.

"In such an action there could be no recovery because of the negligence of the fellow workman of Troxell." "The jury was confined to the question of responsibility for failing to provide proper safety appliances."

The plaintiff was given judgment, which was reversed on appeal. The second action was then brought by Mrs. Troxell, as administratrix, under the federal act, under which there might be a recovery for the negligence of fellow workmen. In the second action the trial court held that—

"The former case had adjudicated matters as to defects in cars, engines, and rails, [and] submitted to the jury only the question of the negligence of fellow servants."

Judgment was again rendered in favor of the plaintiff, and the Circuit Court of Appeals "reversed the judgment, holding that the first proceeding and judgment was a bar to a recovery in the second action." In overruling the decision of the Circuit Court of appeals, the Supreme Court held that—

"Where the second suit is upon a different claim or demand, the prior judgment operates as an estoppel only as to matters in issue or points controverted and actually determined in the original suit. * * * And the plaintiff's right to recover because of the injury occasioned by the negligence of the fellow servants was not involved in or concluded by the first suit."

The court further held that—

"There was not that identity of parties in the former action by the widow and the present case, properly brought by the administratrix under the Employers' Liability Act, which renders the former suit and judgment a bar to the present action."

[5] Appellant urges that this latter statement by the court is mere dictum, but—

"Where there are two grounds, upon either of which the judgment of the trial court can be rested, and the appellate court sustains both, the ruling on neither is obiter, but each is the judgment of the court, and of equal validity with the other." Union P. R. Co. v. Mason City & Ft. D. R. Co., 199 U. S. 160, 26 Sup. Ct. 19, 50 L. Ed. 134.

The decision goes no further than to hold that, because there was not identity of parties plaintiff in the two actions, the second was not wholly barred by the judgment in the first. The question whether an issue actually determined in the first was conclusive on the same issue in the second as against a recovery for the benefit of Mrs. Troxell was not before the court. The trial court held that the judgment in the first action was a bar as to all issues actually determined in that suit. The correctness of this holding was not in controversy before the higher court, and was not considered by it. The opinion in the Troxell Case does not warrant the conclusion that the court intended thereby to overrule its prior decision in the Corcoran Case, supra, and similar decisions by the highest courts of many of the states.

[6] In the proceeding before the Commission of Mrs. Williams, she appeared in her individual capacity, and in the action in the superior court she represented herself as one of the beneficiaries, and had control of the prosecution of the case.

"Parties, in the larger legal sense, are all persons having a right to control the proceedings, to make defense, to adduce and cross-examine witnesses, and to appeal from the decision, if an appeal lies." Green v. Bogue, 158 U. S. 478, 15 Sup. Ct. 975, 39 L. Ed. 1070.

Having recovered judgment for compensation in the proceeding before the commission by establishing the fact that the deceased was employed in intrastate commerce, and that judgment having become final, she could not recover in the action in the superior court by disproving the same fact on which the first judgment was necessarily based.

Not knowing what the determination of the trial court would be as to the character of employment of the deceased, and naturally desirous of avoiding an entire failure of compensation, the plaintiff felt the necessity of making the application to the Commission, even though recovery in that tribunal is limited in amount. In states which provide but one tribunal for the trial of such actions, that tribunal determines in the one action whether the employment was interstate or intrastate, and renders judgment accordingly under the federal act or the state law as the case may warrant, and the predicament in which the plaintiff herein found herself cannot arise.

The judgment was for $25,000, of which $5,000 was apportioned to Vivian Peabody, an adult married daughter of the deceased. The complaint alleges that she was not dependent upon the deceased. Not being dependent, she was not entitled to compensation under the state law, and she was not a party to the proceeding before the Commission. It is clear that the award of the Commission is not a bar to a recovery in her behalf under the federal act, nor is any fact found by the Commission res adjudicata as to her.

[7] The complaint alleges that Mrs. Peabody was not dependent upon the deceased. There was no allegation that she had any ground for expecting any pecuniary benefit from a continuance of his life. The evidence shows that Mrs. Peabody is the only child of deceased, and was 21 years old at the time of his death; that she was married in 1915, and her husband was about 32 years old at the time of the trial in February, 1919; that he is a machinist, and in 1918 enlisted in the navy, and went into training as an airplane mechanic, and at the time of the trial was expecting to be discharged at any time; that the only source of income of Mrs. Peabody while her husband was in the service was a government allowance of $30 a month for herself and $7.50 for their child, neither she nor her husband having any property. There was no evidence that Mrs. Peabody had received any assistance from her father after her marriage. She lived with and was supported by her parents prior to her marriage. The deceased and his wife were both of the age of 39 years, and had a life expectancy of 28.9 years. The deceased was an experienced brakeman, and was in line for promotion. His last monthly pay check was $148, though that was somewhat above the average. He and his wife were in good physical health. They had not accumulated any property.

Appellant contends that under the facts shown the case of Gulf, C. & St. F. R. Co. v. McGinnis, 228 U. S. 173, 33 Sup. Ct. 426, 57 L. Ed. 785, is conclusive against a recovery in behalf of Mrs. Peabody. In that case the administratrix sued under the federal act for the benefit of herself and four children, one of whom was an adult married daughter. Judgment was given for the sum of $15,000, one-half of which was apportioned equally to the four children. The Court of Civil Appeals affirmed the judgment. 147 S. W. 1188. The Supreme Court of the United States reversed the judgment on the sole ground that, under the pleadings and proofs, the married daughter was not entitled to recover. The court said:

"There was neither allegation nor evidence that Mrs. Saunders was in any way dependent upon the decedent, nor that she had any reasonable expectation of any pecuniary benefit as a result of a continuation of his life. * * * In a series of cases lately decided by this court, the act in this aspect has been construed as intended only to compensate the surviving relatives of such a deceased employee for the actual pecuniary loss resulting to the particular person or persons for whose benefit an action is given."

See, also, Garrett v. Louisville, etc., R. R. Co., 235 U. S. 312, 35 Sup. Ct. 32, 59 L. Ed. 242.

[8] There is no distinction in principle between the McGinnis Case and this. In neither case was there any evidence from which to infer that pecuniary benefits would have been received except the bare fact of the relationship of father and daughter. In the McGinnis Case it was held that the issue raised was a federal question and that case is controlling here where the identical question is presented.

[9] The court gave the following instruction:

"It is the duty of the father, the mother, and the children of any poor person who is unable to maintain himself by work, to maintain such person to the extent of their ability."

While the instruction is correct as an abstract statement of the law, it applies only in cases of dependency, and, as stated, the complaint herein alleges that Mrs. Peabody was not dependent.

[10] Appellant contends that the evidence is not sufficient to support the implied finding that the deceased was employed in interstate commerce at the time of his death. The question is one of fact for the determination of the jury. The trial court correctly instructed the jury as to the law applicable to the question. On a retrial a different state of facts may be shown, and a discussion here of the evidence would serve no useful purpose.

The judgment appealed from is reversed.

We concur: BURNETT, J.; HART, J.

On Petition for Modification.

PER CURIAM. Appellant has filed a petition for the modification of the decision herein by this court, concluding as follows:

"The appellant therefore asks that the opinion heretofore rendered and filed be modified so as to declare that the daughter, Vivian Peabody, is also bound by the finding of the Industrial Accident Commission, to the effect that the decedent was engaged in intrastate employment at the time of his death, and that, if it be necessary for a consideration of this point, a rehearing be granted, limited, however, solely to the one point, namely, the effect of the award of the Industrial Accident Commission as to the right of the administratrix to recover on behalf of the daughter."

In appellant's opening brief the contention is stated as follows:

"The finding of the commission fixing the status of the employment is an adjudication in rem and binds the world."

[11, 12] The proceeding before the Commission has none of the characteristics of an action in rem. It may be stated as a general proposition that no one is bound by a judgment rendered in a proceeding of which he had no legal notice, though actual notice is not necessary. Freeman on Judgments (4th Ed.) § 606. If the world is to be bound, the world must have notice. Freeman v. Alderson, 119 U. S. 185, 7 Sup. Ct. 165, 30 L. Ed. 372. Only those who are entitled to appear and assert their interest in the subject-matter of the suit are bound by the judgment. Freeman on Judgments (4th Ed.) § 617; Gridley v. Boggs, 62 Cal. 202. Appellant relies on the provisions of section 1908 of the Code of Civil Procedure as follows:

"In case of a judgment or order against a specific thing, or in respect to the probate of a will, or the administration of the estate of a decedent, or in respect to the personal, political, or legal condition or relation of a particular person, the judgment or order is conclusive upon the title to the thing, the will, or administration, or the condition or relation of the person."

This section was construed in the case of Gridley v. Boggs, supra, which was commenced by George W. Gridley in his lifetime, and the prosecution thereof was continued by his administratrix after his death to obtain a decree setting aside a deed made by him at a time when it was alleged he was incompetent. The deceased had made a will a few months prior to the execution of the deed in question. The will was offered for probate, and rejected by the court on the ground that the deceased was of unsound mind at the date of the execution thereof. In the trial of the case of Gridley v. Boggs the findings and decree in the probate proceeding were offered in evidence, and objection thereto was sustained by the court. It was claimed on appeal that the judgment denying probate of the will was conclusive as to Gridley's mental condition, under the provisions of section 1908 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The court said:

"Certainly all those who might be affected by a judgment that Gridley was insane when the will was executed did not have the right to appear and assert their rights in the proceeding for the probate of the will. The legal notice of that proceeding ran only to those interested in Gridley's estate. And, as to 'the more general ground,' public policy only requires, at most, that a judgment as to the status of a particular person, which shall be conclusive as against those not parties to it, shall be a judgment which simply determines such status in a proceeding whose sole end and aim is to determine it. The judgment of the superior court determined that a certain instrument, purporting to be the last will and testament of George W. Gridley, was not his last will and testament. The proceeding was not a special inquiry to determine his status as to sanity or insanity. The finding of insanity was of a probative fact upon which the court held the will to be invalid, as it might have held it to be invalid upon proof of duress or undue influence."

Appellant relies on the case of Northwestern Redwood Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission (Sup.) 194 Pac. 33, in which it is said that "the proceeding may be characterized as one quasi in rem." It is apparent from the context that this statement had no reference to the ordinary proceeding before the Commission, but was limited to the particular matter under discussion, the right of the wife to subject community property within the jurisdiction of the court to her demands against her husband who was beyond such jurisdiction. The court said:

"It is sufficient to say that the purpose of this proceeding is to enforce the rights of the wife in community property located in this state, and that constructive notice to the husband is therefore sufficient to give jurisdiction to pass upon the questions so involved. The proceeding may be characterized as one quasi in rem. In such proceeding notice by publication is a sufficient compliance with the federal Constitution."

This discussion has proceeded upon the assumption that the terms "condition or relation of a particular person," as used in section 1908 of the Code of Civil Procedure, are broad enough to include the status of one's employment as to its intrastate or interstate character. Such assumption, however, appears to be unwarranted. The right of a mechanic to a lien for his wages may depend upon the character of the work in which he is engaged, yet it would hardly be contended that a judgment establishing the character of such work is in rem, binding upon the whole world. There is no distinction in principle between the two cases. Other similar illustrations may readily be suggested. Appellant's contention finds no support in reason or authority.

[13] For the purposes of the argument, at least, it may be conceded that all persons entitled to share in the award of the Commission are bound by the adjudication of the Commission, not because the award is a judgment in rem, but because they were represented in the proceeding by Mrs. Williams, but Mrs. Peabody, not being dependent upon the deceased, was not entitled to participate in the award, and cannot be said to have been so represented. Having no right to appear in the proceeding or to assert any rights therein, she is not bound by the award. Under the federal law her right of recovery is not based on dependency, but upon her reasonable expectation, if any, of pecuniary benefit from a continuance of her father's life.

The petition is denied.

(54 Cal. App. 592)

DE COE et al. v. JOHNSON et al.
(Civ. 2342.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 18, 1921.)

1. Partnership ⚡244—Surviving partner entitled to exclusive possession of partnership and its affairs until business is completely settled.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1585, entitling the surviving partner to continue in the possession of and to settle the partnership business, a surviving partner has the right to continue in the exclusive possession of the partnership and its affairs until the business thereof is completely settled.

2. Executors and administrators ⚡44—Interests of deceased partner not assets of his estate pending settlement of partnership affairs by surviving partner.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1585, giving surviving partner exclusive possession of the partnership business for purpose of settlement, the interests of the deceased partner in the partnership business are not assets of his estate until the partner's business is settled or until such times as assets from the partnership business may come into the hands of the surviving partner, and the administrator of his estate or the executor of his last will has no right to interfere in the settlement of the partnership business and affairs.

3. Interpleader ⚡37 — Debtor may deposit amount of debt into court and interplead deceased partner's administratrix.

A debtor of a partnership may, when sued by a surviving partner, on demand of deceased partner's administratrix for deceased partner's share of amount due partnership, pay amount of debt into court and cause administratrix to be substituted as defendant.

4. Executors and administrators ⚡439 — Administratrix of estate of deceased partner could intervene in surviving partner's action against debtor.

In action by alleged surviving partner against alleged partnership debtor, administratrix of estate of alleged deceased partner, who denied existence of partnership and who did not agree with plaintiff as to the portion in which they were to share in amount to be recovered, had the right to intervene in such action.

5. Interpleader ⚡1—Theory of bill stated.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 386, the theory of a bill of interpleader is that neither the parties against whom the action is brought nor the complainant has title to the subject-matter of the suit, but that title is in the claimants, and the bill must so allege, and must allege that the party against whom action is brought is indifferent between the claimants as to the subject-matter, since he cannot seek relief in the premises against either.

6. Judgment ⚡297 — Under control of court until entered.

A judgment, although filed, is under the control of the court rendering it until it is entered, and the court may alter or change it or substitute another judgment therefor.

7. Judgment $\S$ 305—May be changed so as to conform to judgment announced notwithstanding erroneous minute order.

Where the judgment, although entered, does not conform to the minute order of the judgment, no finding being necessary or proper and therefore not filed, the court may modify or alter or even set aside the judgment as entered and order a judgment in conformity to the judgment it had announced and of which the erroneous minute order purported to be the evidence, in the absence of a proceeding under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 473, since courts of record have the inherent power to correct at any time their record so that they will conform to the facts and speak the truth of the case.

8. Appeal and error $\S$ 662(2)—Statement in order setting aside judgment that minute order was erroneous conclusive on appellate court.

Statement, in order setting aside judgment as not conforming to that actually rendered, that minute order was erroneous, is conclusive on appeal from such order.

Appeal from Superior Court, Butte County; H. D. Gregory, Judge.

Action by Addie De Coe and husband against Anna Johnson, as administratrix of the estate of Edward T. Johnson, deceased, and another. Judgment for defendants, and from order setting aside and vacating the judgment the plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

A. H. Hewitt, of Yuba City, for appellants.
Davids & Snyder, of Chico, and Bacigalupi & Elkus, of San Francisco, for respondents.

HART, J. This is an appeal from an order setting aside and vacating a judgment entered upon the pleadings in this action and requiring the plaintiff Addie De Coe "to render an accounting of the partnership affairs, or the business interests of said plaintiff and defendant in the growing of rice during the year 1919, with said Edward T. Johnson, deceased."

The complaint alleges that the plaintiff Addie De Coe, who was a married woman and the wife of the plaintiff C. A. De Coe, was the owner in her separate right and as her separate property of an undivided one-half interest of a certain tract of land situated in Butte county, Cal., which is specifically described in the complaint; that during the year 1918 and also the year 1919 the plaintiff Addie De Coe and one Edward T. Johnson were copartners and were engaged in farming the real property referred to above under a contract of copartnership entered into between said parties; that said copartnership continued to exist until the 26th day of September, 1919, when the said Johnson died, and that the plaintiff Addie De Coe, "has been and still is the sole survivor of said partnership"; that in the year 1919 a crop of rice was produced on the land described in the complaint and farmed by said copartnership and that on the 8th day of December, 1919, said crop having been harvested by the plaintiff Addie De Coe, said plaintiff, as the survivor of said partnership, sold and delivered to the defendant Rosenberg Bros. & Co., at the town of Biggs, in said county of Butte, 2,513 sacks of rice, weighing 246,628 pounds at an agreed total price of $16,030.82, at the date of said sale said rice being on storage at the warehouse of the Farmers' Co-operative Union of Butte County, located at said town of Biggs and was represented by warehouse receipt No. 71, issued by said Co-operative Union to said plaintiff, Addie De Coe, on or about the 12th day of November, 1919, and which said warehouse receipt was indorsed by said plaintiff, Addie De Coe, and transferred and delivered to defendant on the date of the sale of said rice; that the defendant has paid to said plaintiff, Addie De Coe, on account of the purchase price of said rice, the sum of $2,500 only, "and there is now due, owing and unpaid to said plaintiff, Addie De Coe, from said defendant, the remaining portion of said purchase price or the sum of $13,530.82; that said contract of sale was made and was to be performed at the town of Biggs, county of Butte, state of California." The complaint further alleges that by reason of the refusal and neglect of the defendant Rosenberg Bros. & Co. to pay to the plaintiff the balance of the purchase price of said rice, namely, the sum of $13,530.82, at the time of the sale thereof as above specified, the plaintiff Addie De Coe has been deprived of the use of said money from the date of said sale to her damage in the sum of $5,000. The prayer is for judgment for the alleged balance due on the purchase price of the rice, together with the sum of $5,000 damages and also with interest on said sum at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from the 8th day of December, 1919, and for costs of suit, etc.

To the complaint the defendant interposed a demurrer which was overruled by the court and the defendant granted 30 days within which to answer. A few days prior to the expiration of the time thus allowed for answering, the defendant applied for and was granted an additional 30 days within which to reply to the complaint.

On the 17th day of May, 1920, the defendant corporation filed and served a notice upon the plaintiff, stating that it would, on the 24th day of May, 1920, make an application to the court for an order substituting Anna Johnson administratrix of the estate of Edward T. Johnson, deceased, as defendant in said action in place of said corporation, upon paying into court the sum of $13,530.82, the principal of the amount claimed in the complaint herein, less storage charges of $143. This notice was supported by an affidavit of Abraham Rosenberg, president of the defendant corporation, in which it is recited that after said defendant purchased the rice from the said plaintiff, Addie De Coe, said defendant was notified that said sale was of rice that was jointly owned by said Addie De Coe and Anna Johnson, as administratrix of the estate of Edward T. Johnson, deceased, and that said Addie De Coe and said Edward T. Johnson "were joint adventurers in the production of the rice covered by the contract annexed hereto and are jointly interested in the same and that said Anna Johnson, as the administratrix of the estate of Edward T. Johnson, deceased, claimed a half interest in said rice and demanded from Rosenberg Bros. & Co., the payment thereof; that Rosenberg Bros. & Co. have at all times been ready, willing, and able to make payment of the total amount due for said rice and have offered to make payment thereof to said Addie De Coe and said Anna Johnson, as administratrix of the estate of Edward T. Johnson, deceased, in any manner that may be mutually satisfactory to them, or to make payment of half of said amount to each of said parties; that said Addie De Coe and Anna Johnson * * * have been unable to arrive at a satisfactory agreement under which Rosenberg Bros. & Co. could make payment to them and so release itself from its obligation to both of said parties; that said Addie De Coe insists that there are certain expenses due to her from her handling of said rice and the operation of growing the same and that said Anna Johnson, * * * admits that certain amounts are due and owing for said work but no accounting has been had between said parties, and Addie De Coe has refused to make any such accounting until payment to her of the whole amount to be paid by Rosenberg Bros. & Co. under said contract, and that Anna Johnson * * * has notified Rosenberg Bros. & Co. not to make any such payment without her approval and that she will hold Rosenberg Bros. & Co. liable if they do so." The affidavit proceeds to state that Rosenberg Bros. & Co., long before the institution of this action, made known its position as above set forth to said Addie De Coe and of its desire and intention to make payment to the full extent of its obligation and its willingness to do so upon an agreement by and between said Addie De Coe and Anna Johnson, as to the manner of making said payment; that said Addie De Coe refused to consider said proposition or to make any attempt at arriving at any arrangements by which Rosenberg Bros. & Co. could make its payment and avoid litigation; that thereafter the said plaintiff commenced this action. It is further stated in the affidavit that it is apparent that the respective rights of the plaintiff, Addie De Coe, and Anna Johnson can only be determined by an accounting between them; that the defendant corporation is in no way interested in the respective rights of the parties or the extent of their interest in the amount to be paid by it, nor is it interested in any way in the controversy between them; that said defendant corporation desires to make its payment of the amount due under its contract for the purchase of said rice, "but desires to do so without peril to itself and without involving itself in litigation." In said affidavit it is further declared: That there is or was no collusion in this matter or in the action taken in the motion for an interpleader herein of Anna Johnson with the defendant corporation in any way, and that "this action is taken by it (defendant corporation) independently and without collusion with any one and that the demand made upon it by said Anna Johnson hereinabove referred to was likewise made upon it without any collusion between it and said Anna Johnson or without any collusion by it with any one." The defendant concludes its affidavit by offering to deposit in court the full amount due upon said contract alleged in said amended complaint and which said sum amounts to the sum of $13,530.82, less $143 paid for storage of said rice, and that said defendant "asks that the court make its order joining Anna Johnson as administratrix of the estate of Edward T. Johnson, deceased, and dismiss Rosenberg Bros. & Co. therefrom so that it may be released from the litigation in which it is not interested and that the parties interested may have an accounting and settle their rights without involving Rosenberg Bros. & Co." The above motion came on for hearing and was heard on the 24th day of May, 1920, and upon the conclusion of the hearing the court ordered that, upon payment into court by the defendant corporation of the sum of $13,830.21, said sum being the balance due on the purchase price of said rice and accrued interest, amounting to $432.39, and costs in the sum of $10, Anna Johnson, as administratrix of the estate of Edward T. Johnson, deceased, be substituted as defendant in the place of said corporation. On June 3, 1920, said sum of $13,830.21 was paid into court by said Rosenberg Bros. & Co., said act being accompanied by a petition addressed to the court in which it was stated:

"Said Rosenberg Bros. & Co. further respectfully submit that said deposit in court was and is as to the sum of $442.39, alleged costs and alleged interest, made under protest, since said defendant believes and alleges that said interest and costs constitute no proper claim against said defendant and were not properly included as a part of the payment to be made under said order of interpleader."

The corporation in said petition, besides asking for the substitution of Anna Johnson as defendant in its place, declared that it reserves to itself the right to appear in said action at any subsequent hearings or trials to show cause why said sum of $442.39 alleged interest and alleged costs should be repaid and refunded by the clerk of the court to said defendant corporation. Thereupon the defendant corporation was retired from the case.

On September 3, 1920, said substituted defendant appeared in the action by her attorneys and demurred to the complaint. The demurrer was, on the 7th day of said month, overruled, and she was granted ten days within which to answer the complaint. On the 17th day of September said defendant filed her answer to the complaint, in which, after specifically denying each and every averment of that pleading, she, for a second answer thereto, proceeds to recite the several steps taken in the action down to the date of the filing of her answer, as those steps are above explained, including a reference to the allegations of plaintiffs' complaint as to the partnership existing between said plaintiff Addie De Coe and her intestate, Edward T. Johnson, and the sale of the rice by said plaintiff to Rosenberg Bros. & Co., then alleges:

"That a part of said sum of $13,830.21, now on deposit with the clerk of this court, is the property of this defendant's intestate, said Edward T. Johnson, deceased, but this defendant has no exact knowledge of the exact proportion of said money properly belonging to her said intestate; that defendant has, through her attorneys, on frequent occasions, endeavored to obtain from plaintiff Addie De Coe an exact statement of the business dealings had between her and this defendant's intestate, and to obtain from said Addie De Coe an accounting and settlement of the moneys due this defendant's intestate from said business affairs, but plaintiff Addie De Coe has at all times refused to account to defendant for moneys due defendant's intestate."

The prayer of the answer is for an order directing plaintiff Addie De Coe to make a full accounting of her business dealings with the defendant's intestate, that the court appoint a commissioner to examine the said account, and make a report thereon to the court, and that thereupon an order be made directing the said plaintiff, Addie De Coe, to pay the defendant out of the sum deposited with the clerk of the court by the defendant corporation under the order of interpleader of such part or portion of such money as is properly and justly due the defendant's intestate.

On September 25th the plaintiff noticed a motion for the 4th day of October to strike from the answer of the defendant Anna Johnson all that portion thereof constituting the second answer of said defendant to the complaint, on the ground that the averments involved sham, irrelevant, and redundant matter, and also that she would at the same time ask the court to render judgment in favor of plaintiff upon the pleadings. These motions were heard on the 24th day of October, 1920, plaintiff in open court stating that she waived all claim to damages in the sum of $5,000 mentioned in her complaint. The decision on said motions was rendered on the 1st day of November, 1920. In the meantime, however, and on the 4th day of October, 1920, the date when the last above-mentioned motions were heard, the original defendant, Rosenberg Bros. & Co. made application to the court to intervene. Permission was thereupon granted to said defendant to appear in said cause, and on the 13th day of October it filed its answer to the complaint. After reciting a history of the litigation and the origin thereof as the same is hereinabove given, including the fact of the deposit in court by said defendant of the sum of money heretofore mentioned, the said defendant sets up the claim that it is entitled to a refund out of the sum so deposited in the sum of $442.39, representing the amount claimed by plaintiff Addie De Coe as interest and costs, etc., alleging that said sum was deposited in court by it under protest based upon the alleged claim that said plaintiff, Addie De Coe, was not entitled to said sum as interest and costs or at all. The prayer of said answer was for an order directing the payment to the said defendant corporation out of the moneys deposited under the order of interpleader of the sum of $442.39, and interest thereon from May 24, 1920, the date of the deposit.

On November 1, 1920, the defendant administratrix filed a petition for an order directing the plaintiff Addie De Coe to render an account of her alleged partnership affairs with Edward T. Johnson deceased. On that day, after said application had been made, the court made an order granting the application of the plaintiff for judgment in her favor upon the pleadings. The motion therefor, as seen, was made on October 4, 1920, and the clerk thereupon made the following minutes of the court proceedings:

"The motion of the defendant Anna Johnson, as administratrix of the estate of Edward T. Johnson, deceased, for an order directing the plaintiff Addie De Coe to render an account of the partnership transaction between her and said Edward T. Johnson, deceased, was denied.

"The order of October 18, 1920, setting a date for the time (sic—trial?) of said cause was vacated and set aside.

"The motion of plaintiff Addie De Coe for judgment on the pleadings, said plaintiff in open court waiving all claims to damages in the sum of five thousand dollars mentioned in the complaint, was granted, and judgment ordered entered accordingly."

The court thereafter filed a written judgment: First, denying the motion of the defendant Anna Johnson, administratrix, etc., for an order directing the plaintiff Addie De Coe to render an account of the alleged partnership affairs of said Edward T. Johnson, deceased; second, vacating and setting aside the order, made on the 18th day of October, 1920, fixing the 14th day of January, 1921, as the time for the trial of said cause and for the hearing of the motion of plaintiffs for judgment on the pleadings; third, granting the motion of the plaintiffs asking that all the portion of the answer of the said defendant, Anna Johnson, constituting her second answer to the complaint, be stricken out; fourth, granting the motion of the plaintiff Addie De Coe for judgment upon the pleadings; fifth decreeing that the plaintiff Addie De Coe do have and recover from the defendants the sum of $13,830.21, said sum being the amount deposited with the clerk of the court by the defendant Rosenberg Bros. & Co.; and, sixth, ordering the clerk of the court forthwith to pay to the plaintiff Addie De Coe the said sum of $13,830.21 and thereupon enter a satisfaction of the judgment in the proper records.

On November 13, 1920, the defendant administratrix filed a notice that she would on the 22d day of November, 1920, apply to the court for an order setting aside the minute order of the court made on November 1, 1920, and all subsequent proceedings, including the judgment given and entered in the action and last above referred to. Said motion came on for hearing on said 22d day of November, 1920, and the same was opposed by the plaintiff Addie De Coe, who supported the opposition by an affidavit by herself in which the history of the transaction between herself and Rosenberg Bros. & Co. and correspondence which passed between them were set forth in detail. The motion having been submitted on said day, the court on the 6th day of December, 1920, made an order in which it was recited that, of its own motion and in furtherance of justice, and because of inadvertence in the rendition of the judgment, and that the minute order upon which said judgment was predicated was erroneous, setting aside the said judgment upon the pleadings, made and entered by the court on the 1st day of November, 1920, in favor of plaintiff and against the defendants.

The appeal is from the last-mentioned order.

It is obvious that the action by plaintiffs is founded upon the theory that the plaintiff Addie De Coe was in the lifetime of Edward T. Johnson the latter's partner in the cultivation and growing of the rice in question on the land described in the complaint, and that she, in instituting the action proceeded under section 1585 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which authorizes, upon the death of a partner, the surviving partner to settle the business of the partnership. Said section reads:

"When a partnership exists between the decedent, at the time of his death, and any other person, the surviving partner has the right to continue in possession of the partnership, and to settle its business, but the interest of the decedent in the partnership must be included in the inventory, and be appraised as other property. The surviving partner must settle the affairs of the partnership without delay, and account with the executor or administrator, and pay over such balances as may from time to time be payable to him, in right of the decedent. * * *"

[1, 2] The above section, as must readily be perceived upon reading it, vests the surviving partner with the right to continue in the exclusive possession of the partnership and its affairs until the business thereof is completely settled. It is thus very clear that, until the partnership business is settled or at least until such times as assets from the partnership business may come into the hands of the surviving partner, the interests of the deceased in such business are not assets of his estate, and it is equally clear, therefore, that the administrator of his estate or the executor of his last will has no right or authority to interfere or intermeddle in the settlement of the partnership business and affairs. Tompkins v. Weeks, 26 Cal. 51, 66; Andrade v. Superior Court, 75 Cal. 459, 462, 17 Pac. 531; Raisch v. Warren, 18 Cal. App. 655, 665, 124 Pac. 95; Miller v. Lux, 100 Cal. 609, 614, 35 Pac. 345, 639.

[3-5] In this case we think, assuming that the complaint states the truth as to the partnership between said plaintiff and the deceased the orderly course (and, we may add, by far the less expensive to the litigants here) would have been to permit the plaintiff Addie De Coe to collect, by judgment, the sum sued for and thereupon pay over to the administratrix of the estate of the deceased the portion thereof to which her intestate would have been entitled. But, while all this is true, we are unable to perceive, from anything which appears upon the face of the record, any legal objection to the defendant corporation and the administratrix defendant to proceeding in the case as they did. Certainly, if the administratrix defendant notified the defendant corporation that she as such administratrix was interested in the claim declared upon by plaintiff, not stating how that interest arose, and demanded of such corporation the payment to her of such proportion of such demand as belonged to the estate, the said defendant corporation, then having no other evidence than the complaint itself of the particular character of the contractual relation between the plaintiff Addie De Coe, and the deceased, out of which said claim developed, was entitled to demand that the matter should be determined either amicably or by suit between said plaintiff and said administratrix before it should be required to pay said debt, which it admitted existed against it. And it is equally correct to say that the administratrix of the estate of the deceased had the legal right either to intervene in the case, or, having been substituted for the defendant corporation, answer the complaint and have the matter of the respective rights of the plaintiff Addie De Coe and said administratrix properly litigated. As we have seen, the defendant administratrix did answer the complaint denying that there was a partnership existing between Addie De Coe and her intestate during the latter's lifetime in the business out of which arose the indebtedness declared upon and further affirmatively alleged in her said answer that the estate of which she was administratrix was interested in the claim, not stating, however, the circumstances under which that interest attached. There was therefore a proper issue joined upon the demand sued for, and, while we do not regard it essential to the decision in this case to pass upon those questions, still we are not reluctant to say that when the court made its order striking from the answer the affirmative allegations thereof, or the second answer to the complaint, and awarding plaintiff judgment upon the pleadings, error was committed. Moreover, when the defendant corporation was again permitted to become a party defendant in the action, and thereupon interpose an answer contesting the right of the plaintiff to that portion of the moneys deposited covering interest and costs claimed by the plaintiffs, there was no longer an interpleader, but an issue tendered by the defendant corporation as to said portion of the moneys deposited in court. The whole theory of a bill of interpleader is that the party against whom the action is brought or the complainant has no title to the subject-matter of the suit, but that title thereto is in the claimants and he must so aver, and also that he is indifferent between the claimants as to the subject-matter of the action. He cannot seek relief in the premises against either. Code Civ. Proc. § 386; Killian v. Ebbinghaus, 110 U. S. 568, 4 Sup. Ct. 232, 28 L. Ed. 246. The situation here is that all the parties are claiming a portion of the moneys involved in the suit and which the defendant corporation deposited in court and, as stated, clearly this cannot, in a strict sense, be deemed an interpleader. But, however this all may be, the single question presented here is whether or not the court was authorized to set aside the judgment in favor of the plaintiff upon the pleadings.

Although the judgment which was set aside contained a number of orders disposing of the several motions which had previously been made, which orders amounted to no more than minute orders as to said motions, yet the gist of the judgment or the vital part thereof was in the granting to the plaintiffs the relief prayed for in their complaint.

It is pointed out by the appellants that there are, under the Code, but three instances in which a judgment may be vacated, and they are those provided for by section 663 of the Code of Civil Procedure, where there are incorrect or erroneous conclusions of law not consistent with or not supported by the findings, or where the judgment or decree is not consistent with or supported by the special verdict, and by section 473 of the same Code, where a judgment has been taken against a party or his legal representative through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect. It is contended that the case here does not come within any of the provisions of the Code thus referred to, and that the court was therefore without legal authority to vacate and set aside the judgment herein rendered.

[6, 7] While counsel on both sides, in their briefs, refer to the judgment as having been entered, the record shows that it was merely filed and the trial court, in the order appealed from, also refers to the judgment as having been filed and not as entered. A judgment, although filed, is under the control of the court rendering it until it is entered, and, until entered, may by the court be altered or changed or another judgment substituted therefor. No citation of authorities is necessary to verify this proposition. If therefore the judgment here was merely filed and not entered at the time the order vacating it was made, no legal objection could be made to said order. But, while the rule is different where the judgment has been entered, particularly where findings have been filed, yet it cannot be doubted that where the judgment, although entered, does not conform to the minute order of the judgment, no findings being necessary or proper, and therefore not filed, the court may modify or alter or even set aside the judgment as entered and order a judgment in conformity to the judgment it had announced and of which the erroneous minute order purported to be the evidence. The court, where the situation is the same as that presented here, may do this in the absence of a proceeding looking to that end inaugurated under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure; for all courts of record have the inherent power to correct at any time their records so that they will conform to the facts and speak the truth of the case. Crim v. Kessing, 89 Cal. 478, 486, 26 Pac. 1074, 23 Am. St. Rep. 491; Toy v. Haskell, 128 Cal. 558, 561, 61 Pac. 89, 79 Am. St. Rep. 70; Warner v. F. Thomas Parisian, etc., Works, 105 Cal. 409, 412, 38 Pac. 960; People v. Southern, 118 Cal. 359, 50 Pac. 545.

In this case, therefore, in view of the recitals of the order vacating the judgment, it is a matter of no consequence whether the judgment was or was not entered. The order complained of states that—

"Said judgment is based upon an incorrect and erroneous purported minute order; * * * that the said minute order was not the minute order rendered by the judge of the superior court; * * * that the court upon its own motion and in the furtherance of justice sets aside the alleged minute order of judgment in the said above-entitled cause, whereby judgment was given in favor of plaintiffs and against the defendants named herein, for the reason that said minute order was not the minute order of the above entitled court but was, in fact, a document drawn up and filed by counsel for plaintiffs herein and designated by said counsel as 'the minute order of said court.' "

The minute order purporting to record the decision of the court as it was announced from the bench is presented in full herein-above.

[8] There is nothing in the record showing that the statement in the order appealed from that the above minute order was erroneous and does not set forth the judgment or decision actually rendered by the court is not true. That said statement in said order is, therefore, conclusive upon us, there can be no manner of doubt. Surely, the court itself knew better than any one else what was in its mind and what it intended its judgment should be and what it actually was as it announced the same from the bench, and if the clerk of the court, as appears conclusively from this record to be true, misunderstood or misapprehended the decision actually rendered and so made an incorrect minute order thereof in conformity to such misunderstanding or misapprehension, then it was within the province and, indeed, the duty of the court not only to correct the order, but to alter or modify the written judgment following said order or to substitute the judgment actually announced for the erroneous one originally filed and entered if, indeed, it was entered.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

187 Cal. 420

SECRET VALLEY LAND CO. v. PERRY et al.
(Sac. 3024.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 17, 1921.)

1. Taxation ⚡5—Sale for taxes by state of lieu lands while title was still in United States void.

Sale for taxes levied by the state on lieu lands while the title was still in the United States, the land not having then been listed to the state, and the person to whom a certificate of purchase had been issued from the state land office not even being in possession, was void; the land not being subject to taxation by the state.

2. Adverse possession ⚡88—Taxation ⚡805 (1)—Claim of defendant held not barred by laches or statute where taxes paid by plaintiff without taking possession.

Where plaintiff's claim was based on a certificate of sale issued to it by the state after a void tax sale, subsequent to the issuance by the state of certificate of sale to defendant's intestate, and neither party had at any time been in possession or made any claim or demand on the other prior to plaintiff's action to quiet title, and plaintiff had merely paid the taxes for the 9 years between the issuance of the certificate to it and its action, defendant's claim, based on the certificate to his intestate, was not barred by laches or by Code Civ. Proc. § 343, providing a 4-years limitation for actions "not hereinbefore provided for"; there being no necessity of defendant's acting until plaintiff took adverse possession.

3. Equity ⚡75—Not laches to omit to attack claim not of character to ripen into legal title.

A defendant holding the legal title, or a paramount claim to the legal title, is not called upon to take action against a hostile claim which is not of a nature to ripen into a valid adverse title.

4. Quieting title ⚡29—Delay in suing adverse claimant not in possession is not laches.

An outstanding adverse claim, which amounts only to a cloud upon title, is a continuing cause of action, and so long as it lies dormant and inactive the owner of the superior title is not chargeable with laches if he allows it to stand indefinitely, as each day's assertion of such adverse claim gives a renewed cause of action to quiet title until such action is brought.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Lassen County; H. D. Burroughs, Judge.

Action by the Secret Valley Land Company against William F. Perry and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant Mary J. Thompson, administratrix of Frank Robert Thompson, deceased, appeals. Reversed.

Harrison S. Robinson and Harry L. Price, both of Oakland (James S. Moore, Jr., of San Francisco, and R. W. Macdonald, of Oakland, of counsel), for appellant.

R. M. Rankin, of Orland, for respondent.

SLOANE, J. This appeal involves the question of priority of right between the plaintiff and the defendant Thompson, under conflicting certificates of purchase of land from the state of California. The appellant's certificate is prior in time, and, unless avoided or forfeited, establishes an interest superior to that claimed by respondent. The action was brought to quiet title, and the judgment was for plaintiff. The findings of the trial court upon which this judgment rests are to the effect:

"That the right, title, and interest of said defendant and her predecessors in interest is barred by her laches and unreasonable delay in asserting their claim to the property affected by this action," and "that the claim of this defendant is barred by section 343 of the Code of Civil Procedure of the State of California."

If, as contended by appellant, these findings are unsupported by the evidence, judgment should have been for the defendant. The facts affecting the title to this land, accepting the summarized statement in respondent's brief, are as follows:

"On September 18, 1895, said land was vacant government land of the United States, and on said date Frank Robert Thompson filed in the office of the surveyor general of the state of California an application to purchase said land from the state. March 17, 1896, the surveyor general approved said application of Frank Robert Thompson to purchase the land. May 18, 1896, certificate of purchase No. 13625 issued from the register of the state land office to said applicant. February 21, 1898, the land in question was clear listed to the state of California by the United States government, and included in clear list No. 8, Susanville land district. For the fiscal year 1897, and for five years subsequent thereto, said land was assessed for taxation as the property of Frank Robert Thompson by the County of Lassen. On June 27, 1898, as provided by statute, the land was sold for nonpayment of taxes levied in 1897, and a certificate of sale therefor issued to the state. On June 28, 1903, a tax deed was made by the tax collector of said county to the state as provided by law, and a certified copy thereof filed in the office of said surveyor general of said state. On April 26, 1909, Jessie R. McKay, pursuant to the provisions of section 3788 of the Political Code, redeemed said land from such tax sale, and filed a certificate of redemption thereof, together with her application to purchase the same, in the office of the surveyor general on May 7, 1909. Her application was thereafter approved, and on December 15, 1909, certificate of purchase No. 17,076 issued to her.

"Prior to the commencement of this action all the principal due the state of California for the purchase of said land under said certificate had been paid, and all the interest thereon, except the sum of $30.88, which was paid on the 29th day of June, 1918, prior to the trial of this action. Each year after the date of said certificate of purchase No. 17076 said lands were assessed to the owner and holder of said certificate, and the taxes thereon paid as they fell due by said Jessie R. McKay or her grantees. This action was commenced July 12, 1917, by the plaintiff, who was then the owner of the said certificate issued to Jessie R. McKay. Appellant's answer and cross-complaint was filed December 6, 1918.

"Neither Frank Robert Thompson nor his heirs or representatives made any claim to said land or to said certificate of purchase issued to said Thompson prior to 1918, nor did they make any payment to the state of California on account of the principal or interest after the issuance of said certificate of purchase to said Thompson, prior to the 31st day of December, 1918.

"Frank Robert Thompson died March 12, 1913, and on January 11, 1918, Mary J. Thompson was appointed administratrix of his estate. Prior to her appointment as such administratrix she gave notice to the Surveyor General required by chapter 602 of the Statutes of 1917, and on December 31, 1918, she paid the balance of the purchase money, interest, and penalties accrued on the said Thompson certificate of purchase during the period of 22 years."

It is not seriously disputed that the clear listing of this property to the state of California as lieu land subsequent to Thompson's application to purchase, and the issuance to him of a certificate of purchase May 18, 1896, by the register of the state land office, validated and established a preferential right to this property which entitled him to a patent from the state upon his meeting the subsequent payments according to law.

[1] The subsequent tax sale for taxes levied upon the land in 1897, while title was still in the government of the United States, was void; the land not being subject to taxation by the state. Slade v. County of Butte, 14 Cal. App. 453, 112 Pac. 485; Roberts v. Gebhart, 104 Cal. 67, 37 Pac. 782; Allen v. Pedro, 136 Cal. 1, 68 Pac. 99. The land had not at that time been listed to the state, and Thompson was not even in possession.

The state in due time took a tax deed from the tax collector under this void sale, and thereafter in 1898 respondent's predecessor in interest redeeming the land under this sale, applied for and received a certificate of purchase from the state. If the tax sale had been effective in annulling Thompson's prior certificate of purchase, it may be conceded that respondent's claim of title would be established. But the proceedings under such tax sale were void, and were entirely ineffectual to foreclose the rights of Thompson or to reinvest the state with any power to further dispose of the land.

Neither Thompson nor his personal representative after his death took any further steps to complete title under his certificate of purchase until the year 1918. Neither was any action taken by the state to foreclose his rights for failure to make interest or other payments required by law. In December, 1918, however, in compliance with the requirements of chapter 602 of the statutes of 1917, Mary J. Thompson, the appellant, as administratrix, paid the balance due on the purchase money, interest, and penalties accrued under such original certificate of purchase. In the meantime the respondent and its predecessors in interest paid taxes on the property and made interest and installment payments under their certificate of purchase, and at the time this suit was commenced had paid all the purchase money, interest, etc., excepting the sum of $30.88 which was paid before the trial. It is to be noted that neither of the claimants was at any time in possession of the land, and prior to the bringing of this suit to quiet title neither had made any claim or demand upon the other.

[2] Under this state of the case it is the finding of the trial court and the contention of the respondent that the Thompson claim represented by appellant is barred by laches and under the provisions of section 343 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is not shown, and is not even claimed that there has been any forfeiture of the Thompson rights as against the state of California by the delay in making payments of the interest, penalties, and balance of the purchase price under his certificate of purchase. Long as the period of delinquency was, it worked no forfeiture under the law in the absence of a foreclosure until after the enactment of chapter 602 of the Statutes of 1917; and the final payments above referred to were made in compliance with that statute.

The laches and lapse of time complained of is in failing to protest or take action against the claim to the property evidenced under respondent's certificate of purchase, and in permitting the payment of taxes and other expenditure of money by the respondent and its predecessors. We are unable to see where any duty rested upon the defendant in this matter. No attack was made upon the Thompson title until this action was begun. There was no adverse possession. There was not even a notice of hostile claim other than might arise from constructive notice of the issuance of the second certificate of purchase, if the facts show such constructive notice. Karns v. Olney, 80 Cal. 90, 22 Pac. 57, 13 Am. St. Rep. 101; Crouse-Prouty v. Rogers, 33 Cal. App. 250, 164 Pac. 101. The Thompsons had a right to rest on the sufficiency of their own claim. If it was good, the other was a nullity, in the absence of an adverse possession. In any event, there seems to have been no substantial difference in the time during which defendants slept on their rights than characterized the acts of the plaintiff. Neither made any move until this suit to quiet title was filed by plaintiff, and it was met by the answer of defendants. Defendants' claim was first in time. Plaintiff was logically the attacking party, and so long as it took no steps to jeopardize defendants' legal rights, there was no need for defendants to act. This is not a case where one party stands secretly by and allows another to expend money upon the other's land with knowledge that it is being done under a mistake of facts. Plaintiff had the same knowledge of the state of this title that defendants had. It should have made investigation or taken legal action earlier, if it wanted assurance against loss. The parties were at arm's length holding hostile claims of title upon the same land.

The rule as to laches applicable to this case is well stated in Kypadel Coal & Lumber Co. v. Millard, 165 Ky. 432, 177 S. W. 270, cited in appellant's opening brief, where it is said:

"Both parties are claiming under a record title from a common source, and the only question is superiority. Limitation or lapse of time does not perfect a defective record title in the absence of possession. If the situation of these parties had continued 10, 15, or 20 years longer, and the question should then arise, as now, as to which title of record is superior, a plea of limitation would not avail for either party against the other. Appellants show that they have regularly paid the taxes on the land. * * * One cannot acquire title to the land of another by paying the taxes on it, nor will a claim of title under a void deed, although recorded, ripen into a fee by lapse of time, nor will limitations run against the owner of record in favor of a claimant not in possession, nor is it incumbent upon the owner to sue for cancellation of a void deed, or to take steps to remove a cloud upon his title. * * * If he desires to have the cloud removed the law affords a remedy, but he is not compelled to go to that expense, and his failure to do so cannot be considered laches, nor will it operate as an estoppel against him. A mere claim of title, even of record, unaccompanied by adverse holding, will not start the statute." Liebrand v. Otto, 56 Cal. 248; Sanborn v. South Florida Naval Stores Co., 75 Fla. 145, 78 So. 428.

[3] A defendant holding the legal title, or a paramount claim to the legal title, is not called upon to take action against a hostile claim which is not of a nature to ripen into a valid adverse title. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. Denver, L. & G. R. Co., 126 Fed. 46, 60 C. C. A. 588; Hays v. Marsh, 123 Iowa, 81, 98 N. W. 604.

It would be strange application of the doctrine of laches to hold in this instance that the plaintiff could maintain its attack upon the validity of defendants' claim of title, but that the defendants might not defend by showing the invalidity of plaintiff's claim. Defendants' right of action is no more stale than that of plaintiff. Both arose at the same time. When plaintiff redeemed from the tax sale and obtained a certificate of purchase from the state, a right of action arose in favor of each claimant against the other, where neither had a right of action before.

The same argument applies to the plea of the statute of limitations. Plaintiff commences this action 9 years after its right of action accrued, and interposes the plea of the statute of limitations against an affirmative defense which arose at the same time.

[4] In any event, this is not a case where the statute of limitations has run against either of the parties. An outstanding adverse claim, which amounts only to a cloud upon the title, is a continuing cause of action, and is not barred by lapse of time, until the hostile claim is asserted in some manner to jeopardize the superior title. So long as the adverse claim lies dormant and inactive the owner of the superior title may not be incommoded by it, and has the privilege of allowing it to stand indefinitely. Each day's assertion of such adverse claim gives a renewed cause of action to quiet title until such action is brought. People v. Center, 66 Cal. 551, 565, 5 Pac. 263; 6 Pac. 481; Hyde v. Redding, 74 Cal. 493, 16 Pac. 380; Kypadel Coal & Lumber Co. v. Millard, supra.

If respondent's contention could be maintained, the plaintiff here would be permitted to establish title to this land by reliance upon a 4-years' statute of limitations under mere color of title and payment of taxes, whereas, it requires 5 years under such a claim, with actual, open, and continuous adverse possession to obtain title by prescription.

The decisions in Hynes v. M. J. and M. M. Consolidated Co., 168 Cal. 651, 144 Pac. 144, and Aikins v. Kingsbury, 170 Cal. 675, 151 Pac. 145, relied upon to sustain the plea of laches, do not apply to the facts of this case.

In both of the cases cited the application of the doctrine was sought against the plaintiffs for their delay in bringing suit. In the Hynes Case the defendants were in actual possession of the premises, and had, with the knowledge of plaintiff, expended a large sum of money in the successful development of oil wells on the property. In the case of Aikins v. Kingsbury the proceeding was by mandamus to compel the issuance by the state of a patent to school lands under a certificate of purchase to one Brackett. There had been a judgment of foreclosure against the defendant for default in his payments, and an alleged termination of his rights under an act of the Legislature declaring such rights forfeited. As is stated in the opinion:

"For more than 38 years no attention was paid to the obligation to pay interest in advance each year to the state. Meanwhile the state had at least attempted foreclosure proceedings, and in 1889 had constructively notified all persons interested in the matter of the intention to disregard any asserted rights to the land arising under the Brackett purchase unless the arrears should be paid, yet nothing was done by the holder of the certificate which had been issued to Brackett until after the completion of the sale to Phillips."

The above was an action to compel specific performance, and in such cases it is incumbent upon the plaintiff to have acted with all the diligence the nature of the case will permit. Henderson v. Hicks, 58 Cal. 364; Hicks v. Lovell, 64 Cal. 14, 27 Pac. 942, 49 Am. Rep. 679; Fowler v. Sutherland, 68 Cal. 418, 9 Pac. 674.

The findings of the trial court barring the defense in this action for laches and under the statute of limitations are not supported by the evidence.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: SHAW, C. J.; LENNON, J.; WILBUR, J.; LAWLOR, J.; SHURTLIFF, J.

54 Cal. App. 656

JENSEN v. CARLENZOLI et al. (Civ. 3901.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Oct. 25, 1921.)

1. Interpleader — 28 — Defendants placed against each other in determining nature of action.

Where purchaser of a dairy business paid part of the price to agent of sellers, and agent, on repudiation of contract by purchaser, sued in intervention to determine right to deposit, payment to agent will be considered payment to sellers, and cause would proceed as an action by purchaser against the sellers to recover the deposit.

2. Sales — 391(9) — Sellers of dairy business held entitled to stand on contract and retain deposit.

Where purchaser of a dairy business paid down part of price, and was to pay balance when consent to assignment of lease had been obtained, and purchaser went into possession, and the consent was obtained and lease assigned to purchaser, but he thereafter repudiated the transaction, because he could not procure a loan to pay the balance, sellers were entitled to stand on their contract and retain the deposit, and were not relegated to an action for damages for the breach of the contract.

3. Sales — 65 — Where passing of title and payment are concurrent, neither party can put other in default, except by tendering performance.

The obligations of the parties to an agreement for the sale and purchase of property are mutual; and where the passing of title and payment for the property are intended to be concurrent, neither party can put the other in default, except by tendering performance on his part, unless the other party waives the tender or by his conduct renders it unnecessary.

Appeal from Superior Court, Marin County; Edward I. Butler, Judge.

Suit in intervention by Jorgen Jensen against Joe Carlenzoli and others. From the judgment rendered, Pete Matteri appeals. Affirmed.

G. P. Hall, of Petaluma (E. J. Dole, of Petaluma, of counsel), for appellant.

Jos. K. Hawkins, of San Rafael, for respondent intervenor.

F. A. Meyer and Frank J. Burke, both of Petaluma, for other respondents.

KERRIGAN, J. This was a suit in intervention, brought by the plaintiff against the defendants, to compel them to interplead and litigate their several claims to the sum of $1,250, which had been deposited by defendant and appellant Pete Matteri with the plaintiff as a payment on account of the purchase price of certain personal property sold to him by defendants and respondents Joe Carlenzoli and Frank Cavallero. Answers and cross-complaints were filed by the respective claimants, and the cause went to trial, and resulted in judgment that the amount of said deposit be paid over to the above-named respondents. Pete Matteri appeals from said judgment.

On or about the 28th day of July, 1920, Pete Matteri agreed to buy from Carlenzoli and Cavallero their dairy business, located in Marin county, together with the unexpired term of their lease on the ranch upon which the business was conducted, for the price of $12,500. Of that amount $1,250 was paid to the plaintiff, as the agent of the respondents, on account of the agreed price, of which the balance was to be paid when the lessor or the said premises should consent to the assignment of its unexpired term from the respondents to the appellant. On August 1st Matteri, with the permission of the respondents, took possession of the personal property and premises. On the following day the respondents, having obtained their lessor's consent, duly assigned said lease to Matteri, who thereupon applied to a bank for a loan, the purpose of which was to enable him to complete the purchase of said property. The bank declined to make the requested loan, unless Matteri should secure a five years' extension of said lease. Accordingly Matteri negotiated for and secured such extension upon what he concluded were satisfactory terms, although at a slight increase in rental therefor. Subsequently, and about a week after Matteri had taken possession of the dairy, he repudiated the transaction, abandoned the premises, and demanded the return of the $1,250. For the purpose of protecting and preserving the property, the respondents took possession of the dairy, and claim that since that time they have conducted it for and on account of Matteri. At all times since the making of their agreement with Matteri they have been and are now ready and willing to make and deliver to him a good and sufficient bill of sale of said personal property.

In the trial court the appellant's main, if not sole, contention was that one of the conditions of the sale was that the lessor would consent to accept him as a tenant for an extension of the lease for five years at the same rental as paid by the respondents. The preponderance of the evidence, however, was to the contrary, and the court so found. This is practically all there is to the case.

[1] The $1,250 having been paid to the plaintiff as the agent of the respondents, it was, of course, in effect paid to them. The case, then, should be considered as an action by the appellant against the respondents to recover the amount of his first payment on the contract. The findings—which are supported by the evidence—disclose that respondents agreed to sell the dairy for the sum of $12,500, accepting $1,250 on account of such purchase price; that they were to obtain the consent of the lessor to an assignment to appellant of the unexpired term of the lease, which they did; that appellant went into possession of the property and was duly tendered a bill of sale for the same.

[2, 3] Under these circumstances, the respondents were entitled to regard the title to the property as having vested in the appellant (Cuthill v. Peabody, 19 Cal. App. 305, 125 Pac. 926; Bement v. Smith, 15 Wend. [N. Y.] 493, and were not, therefore, required to resort for relief to an action for damages for breach of the contract, but could, as they did, stand upon the contract and retain the amount paid on account of the purchase price. The respondents having performed all the conditions of the contract undertaken by them, and the defendant Matteri having defaulted in the performance of his obligations thereunder, the latter may not recover his deposit. The obligations of the parties to an agreement for the sale and purchase of property are mutual; and where the passing of title and payment for the property are intended to be concurrent, neither party can put the other in default except by tendering performance on his part, unless the other party waives the tender or by his conduct renders it unnecessary. Glock v. Howard & Wilson Colony Co., 123 Cal. 1, 55 Pac. 713, 43 L. R. A. 199, 69 Am. St. Rep. 17.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, P. J.; RICHARDS, J.

(54 Cal. App. 307)

HARRIS et al. v. BISSELL et al.
(Civ. 2245; Sac. 3152.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California, Sept. 23, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 21, 1921.)

1. Landlord and tenant ⇨136—Lease held not to permit lessee to farm lands.

A lease whereby lessees agreed to use the premises "for sheep pasture purposes only" could not be interpreted to permit farming and as forbidding only the pasturing of heavy-footed animals, or any animals except sheep.

2. Evidence ⇨441(4)—Negotiations prior to execution of lease held inadmissible.

In unlawful detainer to recover land for breach of a covenant that lessees would "use said premises for sheep pasture purposes only," court properly refused to permit defendants to introduce evidence of negotiations leading up to the execution of the lease for the purpose of showing that it was the understanding between the parties that the defendants might farm the land, not having alleged that the lease failed to express the true intention of the parties, and reformation not being asked.

3. Landlord and tenant ⇨134(2)—Court may not change terms of lease.

Owners leasing land to others may in the lease impose any restrictions upon the use to be made of the land, and it is not for the court to decide that some other use would serve the purposes of the owner equally well.

4. Landlord and tenant ⇨291(1)—Demand for performance of covenant held unnecessary before notice to quit.

Where lessees broke a covenant, to use the land for sheep pasturage only, by planting a crop, a notice to quit, given at the time the crop was matured, was not required to demand performance of the covenant; performance thereof being impossible, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1161.

5. Landlord and tenant ⇨291(14)—No recovery of both rent and damages in unlawful detainer.

In unlawful detainer to recover possession of land because lessees broke covenant, to use land for sheep pasturage purposes only, by raising a crop of grain thereon, it was error to give plaintiff judgment for both the value of the crop and the agreed cash rental, assuming that agreed rent may be recovered in such action.

6. Landlord and tenant ⇨291(14) — When agreed rent is evidence of rental value.

Ordinarily it may be said that the agreed rent is evidence of the rental value of the land in an unlawful detainer suit, but that is not true where part of the premises have been used for the benefit of the lessors in a matter not contemplated by the parties at the time of the execution of the lease.

7. Landlord and tenant ⇨291(14)—Nature of action and amount of recovery.

An unlawful detainer, founded upon breach of a covenant to use land for sheep pasturage purposes only, is not an action upon contract, but for recovery of possession, and incidentally for the damages occasioned by the unlawful detainer, and the rental value during the unlawful detainer may be greater or less than the rent provided for in the lease.

8. Landlord and tenant ⚡291(14)—Defendants not entitled to reimbursement for expenditures after notice of forfeiture.

In landlord's action of unlawful detainer, lessees are not entitled to reimbursement for expenditures incurred in the preparation and seeding of the land after notice of forfeiture for breach of a covenant.

9. Landlord and tenant ⚡112(3)—Claiming rent in unlawful detainer held not "waiver" of breach of covenant.

In unlawful detainer, recovery of possession is the main object, and recovery of rent a mere incident, and in action to recover land for a breach of a covenant, it cannot be inferred that by asking for judgment for rent due prior to the notice of forfeiture, but covering a period of time largely after notice of the breach that plaintiff intended to waive the breach; waiver being the intentional relinquishment of a known right after knowledge of the facts.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Waiver.]

10. Landlord and tenant ⚡291(14)—Damages and rent recovered only under statute.

In the absence of some statutory provision expressly authorizing it, damages and rent cannot be recovered in unlawful detainer, but damages or rent accruing prior to the forfeiture may, of course, be recovered in an independent action.

On Hearing in Supreme Court.

1. Landlord and tenant ⚡291(12)—Evidence admissible to show that planting land was usual method of preparing it for pasturage of sheep.

In unlawful detainer to recover possession of land for breach of covenant, to use land for sheep pasturage purposes only, by raising grain thereon, court should have permitted introduction of any competent evidence tending to show that planting the land or a part thereof in barley was a reasonable or usual method of preparing it for the pasturage of sheep, or that the growing of barley was intended in good faith to be used, or was used, for sheep pasture, and not to produce grain, or that the planting and growing of the barley was an appropriate method of preparing the land for the sowing of white clover thereon, and that it was done in good faith for that purpose.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Solano County; W. T. O'Donnell, Judge.

Action by Emma C. Harris and another against H. L. Bissell and others, copartners, doing business under the firm name and style of Capay Valley Stock Company, and others. Judgment for plaintiffs and defendants appeal. Reversed in the District Court of Appeal, and hearing denied in Supreme Court.

Joseph M. Raines, of Fairfield (Marcel E. Cerf, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellants.

Arthur C. Huston and Harry L. Huston, both of Woodland, for respondents.

FINCH, P. J. This is an action of unlawful detainer after breach by the defendants of a covenant of the lease under which they held certain lands. Plaintiffs were given judgment declaring the lease forfeited and awarding them damages and also the amount of rent stipulated in the lease. The defendants appeal.

[1] By the terms of the lease the defendants expressly covenanted and agreed:

"That they will use said premises for sheep pasture purposes only," and that "if default shall be made in any of the covenants herein contained, on the part or behalf of the said parties of the second part, * * * then and from thenceforth it may be lawful for the said parties of the first part * * * into and upon the said premises, and every part thereof, wholly to re-enter, and the same to have again, repossess and enjoy as in their first and former estate * * * and that on the last day of said term or other sooner determination of the estate hereby granted, the said parties of the second part * * * shall and will, peaceably and quietly leave, surrender and yield up unto said parties of the first part * * * all and singular of the said premises."

The breach of which complaint is made consisted of raising a crop of grain on half of the land. Appellants contend that their covenant to "use said premises for sheep pasture purposes only" should be interpreted to mean "that they could not pasture on the land any heavy-hoofed animals or any animals except sheep" and "that the lease permitted them to farm the land." The language of the lease, however, is too plain to admit of any other interpretation than that given it by the trial court.

[2] The defendants attempted to introduce evidence of the negotiations leading up to the execution of the lease with the evident purpose of showing that it was the understanding between the parties that the defendants might farm the land. In their answer the defendants did not allege that the lease failed to express the true intention of the parties, or ask to have it reformed, and, since the terms of the lease are clear, the proffered evidence was properly excluded.

[3] The defendants sought to prove that the land was benefited for pasturage purposes by being farmed. The plaintiffs were interested in the condition in which the land would be returned to them. It is a common belief that it is beneficial to lands to cease farming them for a time and to use them exclusively for pasturing live stock thereon.

However this may be, owners leasing lands to others may, in the lease, impose any restrictions upon the use to be made of the lands, and it is not for a court to decide that some other use would serve the purposes of the owner equally well.

It is urged that the plaintiffs consented to the farming of the land and that by their acts and acquiescence they are estopped from claiming a forfeiture. The defendants did not plead facts sufficient to constitute an estoppel. The court found, on conflicting evidence, that the plaintiffs did not consent to the farming of the land by defendants.

[4] Appellants contend that "the notice to quit did not require performance of the covenant" broken, and was therefore insufficient. At the time the notice was given the crop was matured, and, the land having been used for a purpose not authorized by the lease, something which could not be undone, performance of the covenant thereafter was impossible, and under the express provisions of section 1161 of the Code of Civil Procedure no demand for the performance of the covenant was required. Schnittger v. Rose, 139 Cal. 656, 73 Pac. 449; Zucco v. Farullo, 37 Cal. App. 562, 174 Pac. 929; Matthews v. Digges, 188 Pac. 283; Pfitzer v. Candeias, 200 Pac. 839.

The seeding of the land was completed early in February, 1918. Notice of forfeiture demanding possession of the premises was served on the defendants in June, and thereafter this action was commenced, June 25. After the action was commenced the defendants harvested the crop of barley raised on the premises and remained in possession until the time of trial. Judgment was entered August 12, 1919. By the judgment the plaintiffs were given the full value of the harvested crop, less the cost of harvesting and marketing the same, or the net sum of $4,746.09, as damages and, in addition thereto, the sum of $2,400, "as and for rental, according to the terms of said lease, being the amount of rent due as follows: $800 on May 20, 1918; $800 on November 1, 1918; and $800 on May 20, 1919." The lease was for the term of three years from the 20th day of May, 1917. Prior to suit the defendants had paid the first year's rent. The lease provided for a rental of $1,600 a year for the second and third years of the term, $800 to be paid on the 20th day of May, and $800 on the 1st day of November of each year. Prior to notice of forfeiture the defendants tendered payment of the installment of $800 due May 20, 1918, but the plaintiffs declined to accept it at that time. There is no claim that there was any default in the payment of rent. Plaintiffs' notice claiming forfeiture of the lease is dated June 6, 1918, and, as stated, suit was commenced June 25, 1918. It thus appears that the forfeiture was declared a few days after the beginning of the second year of the term.

[5-7] Appellants contend that it was error to give judgment for both the value of the crop and the agreed rent. This contention must be sustained. In Golden Valley Land & Cattle Co. v. Johnstone, 21 N. D. 101, 128 N. W. 691, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 631, where a similar question was under consideration, the court said:

"It is clear * * * that it [plaintiff] is not * * * entitled to recover both the value of the use and occupation and the crop or damages equalling its value. It is hardly necessary to call attention to the extraordinary results which would follow a holding that it might do so. The result, however, would be that the defendant would be paying the plaintiff for the privilege of furnishing the seed, all the labor, and machinery necessary to sow and harvest the crop, and at the same time giving plaintiff the entire crop raised by his industry. In other words, defendant would be paying rent to the plaintiff for the privilege of raising a crop for plaintiff."

During part of the time for which the agreed rent was allowed the defendants had the use of but half of the land, the other half being devoted to raising a crop of grain for the exclusive benefit, as it turned out of the plaintiffs. Under such circumstances, the plaintiffs were not entitled to the full rent agreed upon, even if it be conceded that rent may be recovered in this action. There was no evidence produced to show, and the court did not find, the rental value of the land. Ordinarily it might be said that the agreed rent is evidence of the rental value, but that is not true where part of the premises have been used for the benefit of the lessors in a manner not contemplated by the parties at the time of the execution of the lease. Under the plaintiffs' allegation of damages they were entitled to recover, as an element thereof, the rental value of the premises during the unlawful detainer, making due allowance for the fact that the defendants had use of but half of the land during part of the time of such unlawful holding. Since the action is not upon contract (Arnold v. Krigbaum, 169 Cal. 146, 146 Pac. 423, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 370) but for recovery of possession and, incidentally, for the damages occasioned by the unlawful detainer, such rental value may be greater or less than the rent provided for in the lease.

[8] The court allowed the defendants their cost of harvesting and marketing the crop. They claimed reimbursement also for their expenditures incurred in the preparation and seeding of the land. On service of the notice of forfeiture, it became the duty of the defendants, under their lease contract and under the law, to surrender possession of the premises to the plaintiffs. Had this been done, the plaintiffs would have taken the premises without liability for the defendants' expenditures theretofore incurred. It seems plain that by wrongfully withholding possession the defendants could not acquire a right to reimbursement for such expenditures which they would not have had if they had rightfully surrendered possession.

[9, 10] In their complaint the plaintiffs ask for judgment for $800 as rent due prior to the notice of forfeiture, but covering a period of time largely after notice of the breach of which complaint is made. The appellants argue that the plaintiffs thereby waived the breach. "But waiver always rests upon intent. Waiver is the intentional relinquishment of a known right after knowledge of the facts." Alden v. Mayfield, 164 Cal. 11, 127 Pac. 45. In unlawful detainer, recovery of possession is the main object, and recovery of rent a mere incident. It cannot be inferred that by setting up the incident it was intended to waive the primary purpose of the suit. "One who seeks the summary remedy allowed by the statute must bring himself clearly within its terms." Opera House Ass'n v. Bert, 52 Cal. 471; Iburg v. Fitch, 57 Cal. 192. The proceeding is primarily to recover possession of land. "In the absence of some statutory provision expressly authorizing it, damages cannot be recovered." 19 Cyc. 1169; 11 R. C. L. 1180. Damages accruing prior to the unlawful detention cannot be recovered in the proceeding. Chase v. Peters, 37 Cal. App. 358, 174 Pac. 116. Rents may "be recovered only because the statute so provides." Chase v. Peters, supra.

From what has been said, it logically follows that rents can be recovered only in cases where the statute so provides. The statute provides for the recovery of rent, the agreed rent, only in case of "default in the payment of rent." Damages or rent accruing prior to forfeiture may, of course be recovered in an independent action. Hicks v. Herring, 17 Cal. 566. There is some suggestion to the effect that the defendants stipulated at the beginning of the trial that judgment might be rendered against them for the rent provided for in the lease. While the stipulation does not appear in the record, the only inference to be drawn from what was said by respective counsel is that defendants offered to allow judgment to be taken against them for the amount of such rent only as a complete settlement of the case and not in addition to any judgment the court might render for damages.

The judgment appealed from is reversed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

Opinion of Supreme Court in Bank Denying Hearing.

PER CURIAM. The petition for a rehearing in the Supreme Court is denied.

The judgment of the District Court of Appeal reversing the case remands it to the superior court for a new trial. As we do not entirely approve the opinion of the District Court, it is necessary that we state the points not approved, so that the same may not become the law of the case upon such new trial.

[11] Any competent evidence tending to show that planting the land, or a part thereof, in barley was a reasonable or usual method of preparing it for the pasturage of sheep, or that the growing barley was intended in good faith to be used, or was used, for sheep pasture, and not to produce grain, or that the planting and growing of the barley was an appropriate method of preparing that land for the sowing of white clover thereon, and that it was done in good faith for that purpose, should have been admitted. We express no opinion, however, on the question whether evidence of the negotiations preceding the execution of the lease was competent evidence for such purposes.

We also withhold approval from the part of the opinion stating that the defendants did not plead facts sufficient to constitute an estoppel or to show a waiver of the forfeiture claimed by the plaintiff. If the answer is insufficient in that respect, and the defendants can truthfully amend the same, such amendment should be allowed if leave is applied for.

SHAW, C. J.; LENNON, J.; SHURTLIFF, J.; SLOANE, J.; WILBUR, J.; RICHARDS, Justice pro tem., concur.

54 Cal. App. 522

GLASCOCK v. WILDE, City Clerk. (Civ. 3534.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California, Oct. 13, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 12, 1921.)

1. Municipal corporations §120—City council's assertion as to ordinance having been repealed credited by court.

City council's assertion, in ordinance that ordinances dealing with same subject-matter had been repealed, and that there are no existing ordinances relating thereto, will be given the fullest respect and credence by the courts, unless falsity thereof is adequately demonstrated.

2. Municipal corporations §63(1)—City council's assumption that matter affects public interest conclusive upon courts.

When the Legislature, or board of supervisors, or city council engaged in the exercise of legislative functions, proceed upon the assumption that a matter concerning which the acts is one affecting the public interest, or designed to promote the general welfare, the assumption is conclusive upon the courts unless it is plainly apparent to them that the view entertained by the legislative body is without just foundation.

3. Municipal corporations $\S$ 122(1) — Denial of statement in ordinance that there are no other ordinances relating to subject-matter insufficient to impeach assertion, in absence of affirmative allegations designating particular ordinances.

Mere denial that at the time of the enactment of an ordinance there was no other ordinance relating to the same subject-matter without affirmative allegations designating particular ordinances upon the subject, held insufficient to controvert statement in ordinance that there were no other ordinances in effect relating to the subject-matter.

4. Municipal corporations $\S$ 120—Ordinance prohibiting solicitation of custom and patronage upon trains and at depots held an emergency measure.

Ordinance prohibiting solicitation of custom and patronage at depots and streets and sidewalk adjacent thereto, and upon trains, cars, boats, and vehicles, held properly declared an emergency measure by the city council under Los Angeles City Charter, $\S$ 198g, providing that an ordinance required for the immediate preservation of public peace or safety may be made effective upon publication where it contains a statement showing its urgency and is passed by three-fourths vote of the council.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Grant Jackson, Judge.

Petition for writ of mandate by M. H. Glascock against Charles L. Wilde, City Clerk of the City of Los Angeles, State of California. Judgment refusing writ, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Warren L. Williams and Seymour S. Silvertown, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Charles S. Burnell, City Atty., and Wm. P. Mealey, Asst. City Atty., both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WORKS, J. The petition in this matter demanded the issuance of a writ of mandate requiring defendant to perform certain official acts. A demurrer to the petition was sustained, whereupon an amended petition was presented. A demurrer to that pleading being likewise sustained, but without leave further to amend, judgment went for defendant, and petitioner appeals. The sole question in the case is whether the demurrer to the amended petition was properly sustained.

The charter of Los Angeles provides, in section 198g, quoting only so much of it as is pertinent to our present inquiry:

"No ordinance passed by the council shall go into effect until the expiration of thirty days from its publication, except [certain specified ordinances, and] an ordinance required for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health or safety, which shall contain a specific statement showing its urgency, and is passed by a three-fourths vote of the council."

This language is contained in the portion of the charter securing to the people of the city the power to invoke the right of referendum and prescribing a system of procedure for the exercise of that right. The postponement for 30 days of the taking effect of ordinances, generally, is intended to furnish an opportunity for the circulation and filing of referendary petitions against them during that period. Ordinances of the kinds which are excepted from the operation of the 30-day clause, including those "for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health or safety," etc., take effect upon their publication, and the right of the people to exercise the referendum against them is denied, therefore, by section 198g.

The city council of Los Angeles passed an ordinance entitled

"An ordinance prohibiting the solicitation of custom and patronage in railroad depots and upon railroad depot grounds and premises and upon certain portions of the public streets adjacent thereto; regulating the solicitation of custom and patronage upon railroad trains, cars, boats and vehicles operated as common carriers; regulating the standing of vehicles upon depot grounds and premises and upon portions of the public streets, in the city of Los Angeles, adjacent thereto; prescribing a penalty for the violation thereof, and declaring that the enactment thereof is urgently required for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health and safety."

Following sections regulatory of the matters referred to in the title it was provided in section 9 of the ordinance that—

"By reason of the fact that Ordinance No. 33,801 (New Series), entitled 'An ordinance regulating the business of soliciting custom or patronage upon the public streets, boats, railway trains and depots and providing for the issuance of permits thereof,' approved March 1, 1916, was expressly repealed by the provisions of section 2 of Ordinance No. 39386 (New Series), entitled 'An ordinance regulating the business of soliciting patronage upon public streets,' approved September 23, 1919, and by reason of the repeal of Ordinance No. 39385 (New Series), entitled 'An ordinance regulating soliciting upon railroad trains, prohibiting soliciting upon depot grounds and upon certain portions of the public streets adjacent thereto, regulating the standing of vehicles upon portions of the public streets and prescribing a penalty for the violation thereof,' approved September 23, 1919, there is now no ordinance of the city of Los Angeles in force or effect regulating the solicitation of custom and patronage in or about railroad depots and premises or upon public streets or sidewalks adjacent thereto, or regulating the solicitation of such custom and patronage upon trains, cars, boats and vehicles operated as common carriers, or regulating the standing of vehicles upon depot grounds or premises, or upon public streets adjacent thereto, and the absence of adequate prohibitory and regulatory legislation admits of, has resulted in, and will continue to result in the indiscriminate and unrestrained solicitation of custom and patronage upon such trains, cars, boats and vehicles and at and about such railroad depots and premises and upon public streets and sidewalks adjacent thereto, and the peace of the general public will be disturbed and the safety of the general public will be greatly and seriously endangered, and the general public, but especially the traveling public, and more especially unaccompanied females arriving in the city of Los Angeles by rail, and otherwise, will be greatly annoyed, inconvenienced and harassed and their comfort, safety, welfare and health endangered thereby, for which said reasons this ordinance is urgently required for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health and safety, and the city clerk shall certify to the passage of this ordinance by a three-fourths vote of the city council and cause it to be published once in the Los Angeles Daily Journal, and thereupon it shall take effect and shall thereafter be in force."

Before the expiration of 30 days after the passage of the ordinance appellant presented to respondent referendary petitions against the enactment. The petition in this matter alleges that these referendum petitions were in all respects according to law in form, and that they were presented to respondent in the manner required by law. It is also alleged that they contained the signatures of such a number of the qualified electors of the city as made it incumbent upon respondent to file and examine them and to certify and present them to the city council, these duties being required of respondent by the provisions of the city charter in proper cases. Upon due request therefor, respondent refused to perform the acts mentioned, and the filing of the petition in this matter by appellant was the outcome of the refusal.

The question of the sufficiency of the petition for a writ of mandate turns upon two points: First, are the statements of fact made in the ninth section of the ordinance to be taken as true? Second, if they are so to be taken, do they, together with the subject-matter of the ordinance, show that it presented such a case or urgency as is contemplated by the above-quoted provisions of section 198g of the city charter?

The statements of fact in section 9 which are principally of moment in treating the first question are those to the effect that, by reason of the repeal of certain designated ordinances, "there is now no ordinance of the city of Los Angeles in force or effect regulating" the matters which are the subject of the enactment sought by appellant to be set aside by the referendum. If this statement is true the assertions made immediately following it are necessarily true. To be more specific, if it be true that at the time of the passage of the ordinance now under consideration there was in force in Los Angeles no ordinance covering the same subject-matter, it necessarily follows that for lack of such legislation there must have resulted, and it is equally true that there would have followed, an "indiscriminate and unrestrained solicitation of custom and patronage" upon the means of conveyance mentioned in the ordinance and at and about the places referred to in it. It appears to us that it would follow, as well, from the absence of such regulatory legislation in a large city, that the peace of the general public would be disturbed; that the safety of the general public would be greatly and seriously endangered; that the general public, and especially the traveling portion of it, and more especially women travelers, would be greatly annoyed, inconvenienced, and harassed, and their comfort, safety, welfare and health endangered.

[1, 2] Therefore, was there, at the time of the passage of the attacked ordinance, no ordinance in force in Los Angeles upon the same subject? The assertion of the city council that there was not would ordinarily stand as conclusive. A city legislative body must always have the highest degree of knowledge as to what of its enactments have been repealed and what are still in force. When such a body, in the pursuit of its legislative duty, makes an assertion based upon that knowledge, the assertion demands the fullest respect and credence at the hands of the courts, unless its falsity be adequately demonstrated, if, indeed, the courts are not absolutely bound by it, which we need not now decide. Speaking on a somewhat similar subject and having in mind a principle which is equally applicable here, this court said in County of Los Angeles v. Dodge, 197 Pac. 403:

"When the Legislature or a board of supervisors or city council engaged in the exercise of legislative functions proceeds upon the assumption that the matter concerning which it acts is one affecting the public interest or designed to promote the general welfare, the assumption is conclusive upon the courts, unless it is plainly apparent to them that the view [entertained by the legislative body] is without just foundation."

[3] Appellant's petition for a writ of mandate does not adequately controvert the assertion made by the council, granting for the sake of argument that it might have been controverted at all. The pleading merely "denies that at the time of the enactment" of the ordinance in question here "there was no ordinance of the city of Los Angeles in force and effect, or force or effect, regulating the solicitation of custom and patronage, or custom or patronage, in or about the railroad depots or premises, or upon public streets or sidewalks adjacent thereto, or regulating the solicitation of such custom and patronage upon trains, cars, boats, and vehicles, or upon trains, or cars, or boats, or vehicles operated as common carriers, or regulating the standing of vehicles upon depot grounds or premises or upon public streets adjacent thereto. Petitioner denies that there ever was an absence of such legislation of any nature, whatsoever or at all." There was no attempt to show, by affirmative allegation in support of petitioner's contention, what ordinances were in force upon the subject in question. In short, the petition treated the assertion of the council merely as if it were contained in a pleading of a private adversary in an action at law, not as the formal statement of a fact peculiarly within its knowledge made by a public legislative body in the performance of its duty. Such a treatment does not meet the exigencies of the occasion. The assertion of the council must stand as unimpeached and conclusive.

[4] Having arrived at this determination, the remaining question is easy of solution. It is, in fact, practically settled by what we have said in discussing the first question, for we have already expressed the view that the other matters stated in section 9 naturally and inevitably follow from the assertion that there was not in force in Los Angeles, at the time of the passage of the assailed ordinance, any ordinance upon the same subject. Further, however, the ordinance now in question has already been before the first division of this court in a proceeding in which the point now before us, if not actually concluded, was in the mind of the court. It was there said:

"The legislative body, presumably upon a sufficient investigation and knowledge of the situation existing, has determined that facts existed constituting an emergency, such that the peace and safety of the community, and particularly the traveling public, required that appropriate legislation be immediately enacted. The facts recited in the ordinance are facts which reasonably might be held to constitute such emergency." Ex parte Statham, 187 Pac. 986.

The courts have made frequent declaration concerning the harassing and annoying character of the unrestrained practices which it was the object of the ordinance in question to restrain and regulate (Depot C. & B. Co. v. Kansas City T. Ry. Co. [C. C.] 190 Fed. 212; Donovan v. Pennsylvania Co., 199 U. S. 279, 26 Sup. Ct. 91, 50 L. Ed. 1921. See, also, Redline T. Agency v. Southern Pac. Co., 3 Ops. and Ords. R. R. Comm. Cal. 526). We are satisfied that the ordinance was an urgency measure within the terms of section 198g of the Los Angeles charter. The demurrer was properly sustained.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; CRAIG, J.

54 Cal. App. 614

McCORD v. MADDUX et al. (Civ. 3943.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Oct. 20, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 19, 1921.)

1. Appeal and error $\Leftrightarrow$ 1071(1)—Finding, if outside the pleading, held not to harm appellant.

In an action by special administrator to set aside a deed given by intestate in which the answer of the grantees alleged title from the date of the deed, but did not allege, as was the fact, that the deed was placed in escrow to be delivered on death of grantor, finding of the court that title presently passed by such escrow delivery was not harmful to plaintiff appellant if outside the pleading, where he was fully aware of the fact.

2. Deeds $\Leftrightarrow$ 208(5)—Conveyance placed in escrow, to be delivered, on death held to pass title.

In action by special administrator to set aside a deed given by intestate to a third person, to be delivered to grantees on her death, evidence held to show that intestate intended to presently grant the title to grantees, and not to exercise control over the deed.

3. Deeds $\Leftrightarrow$ 61—Present title may pass on delivery to third person to deliver on death of grantor.

A person may make a conveyance of property and place it in the hands of a third party, to be delivered to the grantee on the death of the grantor, and such delivery will be effectual to pass a present title if the grantor's intention is to make such delivery absolute, and place it beyond his power thereafter to revoke or control the deed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Napa County, Henry C. Gesford, Judge.

Action by James H. McCord, as special administrator of the estate of Mary McCord, against Lillie E. Maddux and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

McKannay & Hunt, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Clarence N. Riggins, of Napa, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. This appeal is from a judgment in favor of the defendants in an action brought by the plaintiff as special administrator of the estate of Mary McCord, deceased, to quiet title to certain real estate situate in the county of Napa, and to have canceled a certain deed from Mary McCord to Lillie E. Maddux and Anna A. Newell, two of the defendants in the action, which had been placed of record, and thus constitutes a cloud upon the title to said property, and which deed the plaintiff alleges the said decedent never made nor delivered to said grantees. The answer of the defendants denies title to said premises in Mary McCord at the time of her death, and alleges that said Mary McCord in her lifetime, and while the owner of said real estate, made, executed and delivered said deed thereto to the said grantees named therein, who had ever since been, and still were, the owners of the whole thereof. The cause went to trial upon the issues as thus presented, when certain evidence, to be hereafter adverted to, was adduced. Upon its submission the trial court, after making certain formal findings, proceeded to find that Mary McCord, on or about the 5th day of October 1912, while the owner of the whole of said real estate, had freely and voluntarily made, signed, and acknowledged her deed in writing, whereby she granted and conveyed unto said Lillie E. Maddux and Anna Augusta Newell all of said property, and that on or about said date she had delivered said deed to one W. J. Blake, and then and there instructed said Blake to hold said deed during her lifetime, and upon her death to deliver the same to said grantees; that said Mary McCord reserved no power thereafter to revoke or control said deed, and intended at the time she so delivered it to said Blake to make said delivery absolute, and to place said deed beyond her power and control, and thereby divest herself of the title to said real estate, excepting a life estate therein; that said W. J. Blake held said deed pursuant to said instructions during the lifetime of said Mary McCord and upon her death delivered the said deed to said grantees.

As conclusions of law from the foregoing findings of fact, the trial court found said defendants to be the owners of the property, and ordered judgment in their favor. From such judgment this appeal is taken.

[1] The first contention of the appellant is that the trial court in making the foregoing findings had gone outside the issues in the case, to the plaintiff's injury. It is true that the defendants in their answer asserted complete title in themselves from and after the 5th day of October, 1912, the date of the execution of said deed, and had not pleaded nor relied upon an escrow delivery of the same to W. J. Blake as the source of their title. But in their answer elsewhere the defendants had denied the plaintiff's asserted right and interest in said property, and had generally averred title in themselves. This would have put the plaintiff upon proof of his own asserted title, and thus have created an issue which would have justified the findings of the trial court. The only ground for complaint on the part of the plaintiff and appellant would be that he was in some way misled to his injury by the findings of the court; but in this respect the record shows that he was at all times during, and even prior to, the trial of the cause fully aware of the circumstances surrounding the making and delivery of the deed which formed the sole basis of the defendants' assertion of ownership of the premises in question, and hence could neither have been misled nor surprised by the findings and conclusions of the trial court.

[2] The next, and main, contention of the appellant is that the findings of the trial court to the effect that Mary McCord, at the time of the making, execution, and delivery to W. J. Blake of the deed in question, did and intended to divest herself of the title to the real estate therein described, are against the evidence, the contention of the appellant being that upon the undisputed facts in the case the findings of the court should have been that the grantor in said deed, by her said making and delivery of the same, did not intend to divest herself of the power to revoke said deed or control the title to the premises described therein, but only intended and attempted to make a testamentary disposition of the property, to become effectual at the time of her death.

In order to test this contention, the facts of the case may be briefly recited: Mary McCord, on October 5, 1912, was, and for some years prior thereto had been, the owner and in possession of the real estate involved in this action, which consisted of a farm known as the "home place," and which at that time was in the possession of one James H. McCord, who was her son, and who was holding and cultivating the premises as her tenant. She was then 78 years of age, and was living with one or the other of her two daughters, the defendants herein. She had recently been subject to a severe illness, from which she was somewhat recovered. For several years prior to said date she had for her business agent one W. J. Blake, who was in the real estate and insurance business in St. Helena, and was also a notary public and justice of the peace. He held in fact her power of attorney, and attended to the details of her affairs, particularly with reference to the leasing and handling of the home place. On or about said last-named date she sent for Mr. Blake, who came to the Kibbler building in St. Helena, where she was staying with one of her daughters, and she there instructed him to prepare certain papers, consisting of a deed of gift of the home place, and also of a bill of sale of the personal property thereon, to her two daughters, Mrs. Maddux and Mrs. Newell. He returned to his office and prepared said documents for her signature, and took them to her in the Kibbler building, where she signed and acknowledged the same, and then gave them to him, with instructions to deliver them to Mrs. Maddux and Mrs. Newell upon her death. Mr. Blake took the two documents to his office, placing them in his safe. Within a few days thereafter Mary McCord requested her two daughters to go with her to the office of Mr. Blake, where, according to the testimony of Mrs. Newell, she said the papers were, "and that she would hand them to us." They went there on the following day, and when they arrived at Mr. Blake's office Mrs. McCord asked for the papers, in order, as she stated, to hand them to her daughters. Mr. Blake gave them to her, and she then handed them to her daughters, passing the papers to each of them and telling them what they were, after which she gave the papers back to Mr. Blake, and repeated her instructions to him to keep them safely and deliver them to Mrs. Maddux and Mrs. Newell after her death.

There was a further transaction which shed some light upon this one. Mrs. McCord had a deposit in a local bank about which she had also consulted Mr. Blake at the time of the delivery to him of the papers above referred to, and he testified that she asked him to arrange the matter of her bank deposit so that Mrs. Maddux and Mrs. Newell might have her bank deposit upon her death, and he advised the opening of a joint account in the names of her two daughters and herself. This she did immediately after the transaction with reference to the deeds. Thereafter, and up to the time of her death in 1919, Mrs. McCord continued to live with one or the other of her said daughters. She also, with the aid of Mr. Blake, attended to whatever business was to be done with reference to the lease and change of tenants upon the premises in question, and payment of the taxes thereon. She also made sales of some small portions of the personal property thereon, such as a horse for $10, and some puncheons for an unascertained price. She also paid the insurance upon the buildings on the property, and made or caused to be made some minor repairs thereon. The papers affecting the property remained uncalled for and unchanged in the hands of Mr. Blake until her death intestate in 1919. Within a few days thereafter they were delivered to the grantees by Mr. Blake and duly recorded.

Upon these facts as above briefly recited, the appellant contends that the trial court should have found that Mary McCord, in making and delivering the deed in question to Mr. Blake, did not intend to vest the present or any title to the premises described therein, or to do other than attempt to make a testamentary disposition thereof, and that the findings of the court as to the existence and consummation of such an intention are not supported by the evidence in the case.

In making this contention counsel for the appellant strongly relies upon the case of Williams v. Kidd, 170 Cal. 631, 151 Pac. 1, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 703. Singularly enough, the respondents also strongly rely upon the same case as supporting their contention, which is that the question as to the intent of Mary McCord in the making and delivery of the deed in question to Mr. Blake was a question of fact to be determined by the trial court in the light of all the circumstances in the case, and that his conclusion thereon will not be disturbed by the court upon appeal. It is therefore interesting to see just what was decided in the case of Williams v. Kidd.

[3] The learned and lamented Justice Lorigan, who wrote the opinion in that case, laid down very clearly and correctly the law governing cases of this character. We cannot do better than to quote some excerpts from that opinion:

"It is well settled," says the learned justice, "that a person may make a conveyance of property and place it in the hands of a third party to be delivered to the grantee named in it on the death of the grantor, and that such a delivery will be effectual to pass a present title to the property to the grantee if the intention of the grantor is to make such delivery absolute and place it beyond the power thereafter to revoke or control the deed. Where delivery is made under these circumstances and with this intention, it is fully operative and effective to vest a present title in the grantee, the grantor retaining only a life estate in the property, and the third party or depositary holds the deed as a trustee for the grantee named in it. Bury v. Young, 98 Cal. 451, 35 Am. St. Rep. 186, 33 Pac. 338; Moore v. Trott, 156 Cal. 353, 134 Am. St. Rep. 131, 104 Pac. 578.

"On the other hand, it is equally well settled that, where a deed is deposited with a third party, to be handed to the grantee on the death of the grantor, unless this is accompanied by an intention on the part of the grantor that title to the property shall thereby immediately pass to the grantee, there is no delivery of the deed, and consequently no title is transferred. If the deed is handed to the depositary without any intention of presently transferring title, but, on the contrary, the grantor intended to reserve the right of dominion over the deed and revoke or recall it, there is no effective delivery of the deed as a transfer of title. So, too, if it be the intention of the grantor when he deposits a deed that it shall only be delivered to the grantee by the depositary after the death of the grantor, and that the title is to vest only upon such delivery after his death, then the deed is entirely inoperative as constituting an attempt by the grantor to make a testamentary disposition of his property. This may only be done by will executed as required by the law of wills of this state, and a deed, the purpose of which is intended to be testamentary, cannot be given effect. * * *

"It is essential to the validity of a transfer of real property that there be a delivery of the conveyance with intent to transfer the title, and the true test under which delivery is to be determined is in ascertaining whether in parting with the possession of the conveyance the grantor intended thereby to divest himself of title. If he did, there was an effective delivery of the deed. If not, there was no delivery. The solution of this question is grounded entirely on the intention of the grantor, and this essential matter of intention is a question of fact to be determined by the trial court from a consideration of all the evidence in a given case bearing upon the question. Bury v. Young, 98 Cal. 451, 35 Am. St. Rep. 186, 33 Pac. 338; Kenniff v. Caulfield, 140 Cal. 34, 73 Pac. 803; Est. of Cornelius, 151 Cal. 552, 91 Pac. 329; Follmer v. Rohrer, 158 Cal. 757, 112 Pac. 544."

Following a careful review of the facts in that case, which differ in certain essential respects from the facts of the case at bar, the learned justice continued:

"These matters, in the main, make up the evidence under which the court was to determine whether, when Williams delivered the deed in question to Kidd, he intended thereby to pass a present title in the property to the grantee. The court found that he did not. This finding of the court, it is true, rests mainly upon inferences which it deduced from the facts and circumstances in evidence; but if these inferences were fairly and reasonably deducible from them, the finding must stand. This court cannot set aside the finding of the trial court unless it appears that there is no evidence to support it, or the evidence is so clearly preponderating against the finding as made that it can be said that there is no substantial evidence to sustain it. We are satisfied from a full consideration of the evidence that this cannot be said."

From these extended excerpts drawn from that case it will be seen that the Supreme Court has clearly determined that the question as to the intention with which the grantor of real estate makes and delivers a deed thereof to a third person, with instructions to deliver the same to the grantee upon the death of the grantor, is a question of fact to be determined by the trial court from all the circumstances of the case, and that its determination of that fact, if it can be fairly drawn as a reasonable inference from evidence adduced before the trial court, will not be disturbed upon appeal. The Supreme Court did not disturb the determination of the trial court in the case of Williams v. Kidd, nor do we think we should do so in the case at bar. From a careful review of the evidence in this case we are convinced that the inference could fairly and reasonably be drawn that the grantor in the deed in question intended by her act in making the same, in delivering it to Mr. Blake, in handing it to the grantees, and in explaining to them its purpose, in redelivering it to Mr. Blake with the instruction to keep it safely and deliver it to her two daughters upon her death, in leaving the said deed with its depository for the seven remaining years of her life, in making no other or further attempt to dispose of the premises other than temporary uses consistent with a life estate therein, and in finally dying intestate, manifested an intention to transfer the title to the premises in question by delivery of the deed; and, the trial court having so found, we will not disturb its finding and resulting judgment upon appeal.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

54 Cal. App. 612

SAMPANES v. CHAZES. (Civ. 2333.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 19, 1921.)

1. Judgment $\S$ 143(17)—No abuse of discretion in setting aside default judgment entered contrary to settlement.

Where an affidavit and oral testimony in support of a motion, under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, to set aside a default judgment, showed that a complete settlement was entered into between the parties, and that plaintiff agreed to dismiss the action, but failed to do so, and that defendant did not learn of the default until some time after it was entered, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in granting the motion.

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 935(2)—Delay in moving to set aside default presumed satisfactorily excused, where parol proof not brought up.

Where parol proof, supplementing an affidavit in support of a motion to set aside a default judgment, was not brought up, the presumption is that it furnished a complete and satisfactory excuse for any delay in instituting the proceedings, which was not sufficiently explained in the affidavit; all intentions being in favor of the validity of the trial court's action and the regularity of the proceedings therein.

3. Judgment $\S$ 160—Affidavit of merits, in support of motion to set aside default, held sufficient.

An affidavit, in support of a motion to set aside a default judgment, "that affiant has fairly and fully stated the facts of the case and those upon which he bases his defense," etc., is a sufficient affidavit of merits.

4. Judgment $\S$ 160—Verified answer, denying all material allegations of complaint, held sufficient affidavit of merits on motion to set aside default.

A verified answer, filed with a notice of a motion to set aside a default judgment, positively denying all the material allegations of the complaint, is a sufficient affidavit of merits.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Action by Andrew Sampanes against Sam Chazes. From an order setting aside a default judgment, and permitting defendant to answer, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Charles L. Gilmore, of Sacramento, for appellant.

Ralph H. Lewis and A. B. Reynolds, both of Sacramento, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The appeal is from an order setting aside a judgment by default and permitting the defendant to answer. The motion for said order was based upon the ground of inadvertence, surprise, and excusable neglect. It was supported by an affidavit of defendant and by oral testimony. The proceeding was taken under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and notice was given within 6 months of the entry of the default. In the affidavit of defendant it appears that a complete settlement of all the matters in controversy was entered into between respondent and appellant on or about the 21st day of August, 1920, and it was agreed at the time that the action should be dismissed. It shows, further, a breach of faith on the part of appellant in failing to dismiss the action and in having the default of defendant entered. Therein it appears, also, that defendant did not learn of the default until some time after it was entered.

[1] The general features of the showing made, which we have thus outlined, show a case appealing to the wise discretion of the trial court, and we cannot say it was an abuse of that discretion to grant the motion. The principle that should control in such cases has been often set forth, and it needs no repetition. It is sufficient to refer to the decision of the Supreme Court and the respondent's brief in the case of Craig v. San Bernardino Inv. Co., 101 Cal. 122, 35 Pac. 558.

[2] If it should be thought that said affidavit was not sufficiently full in explanation of the delay of respondent in instituting the proceedings, we must remember that it was supplemented by parol proof. This not having been brought up, the presumption is, of course, that it furnished a complete and satisfactory excuse for any seeming remissness in that respect. The law is well settled that all intendments are in favor of the validity of the action of the trial court and of the regularity of the proceedings therein. McGowan v. Kreling, 117 Cal. 31, 48 Pac. 980; Alferitz v. Cahen, 145 Cal. 397, 78 Pac. 878.

[3] We may add that there is no virtue in the claim that the affidavit of merits is insufficient. Appellant, in his quotation of it, omitted this significant clause: "That affiant has fairly and fully stated the facts of the case." This is followed by the expression: "And those upon which he bases his defense to the above-entitled action," etc.

[4] Moreover, a verified answer was served and filed with the notice of the motion to set aside and vacate the judgment, and the motion, according to said notice, was based in part upon this answer. Therein was a denial of all the material allegations of the complaint which could possibly be construed as entitling plaintiff to any relief. "A sworn answer, positively denying the material allegations of the complaint, is a sufficient affidavit of merits." Fulweiler v. Mining Co., 83 Cal. 126, 23 Pac. 65.

We are not unmindful of the other points made by respondent, which it is claimed should lead to an affirmance of the judgment, including the contention that the record is not sufficiently authenticated, and that the complaint fails utterly to state a cause of action; but, as the matter to which we have directed specific attention seems decisive of the controversy, any further consideration would appear useless.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PREWETT,
Justice pro tem.

54 Cal. App. 622

McGARRY v. ELLIS, Superintendent of Streets, et al. (Civ. 3987.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Oct. 21, 1921.)

1. Municipal corporations $\S$ 450(2) — Entire city may be made improvement district.

Under Improvement Act 1911, providing for the district plan for making public improvements, and leaving it to the discretion of the governing officials to determine what the exterior boundaries of a district shall be, the entire city may be made an improvement district.

2. Municipal corporations $\S$ 294(3) — Notice of passage of resolution of intention need not describe specific property in district, nor statement of property exempted.

Under Improvement Act 1911, notice of passage of resolution of intention to make public improvement need not describe the specific properties within the exterior boundaries of the district created, nor include therein statement of property exempted from the assessment.

3. Municipal corporations $\S$ 488, 489(5) — Variance between notice of resolution of intention and resolution not fatal, where objection was not made as required.

Where resolution of intention to make public improvement made the exterior boundaries of city the exterior boundaries of assessment district, and declared all property therein benefited and subject to assessment, but exempted certain described property used for school purposes, and the notice of resolution posted in the city recited the improvement and property benefited, but did not mention the exempted property, the variance did not render assessment on plaintiff's property in the city void, where he failed to make objections at time and place the notice provided, in view of Improvement Act 1911, § 5, providing that the notice of passage of resolution of intention shall be in legible characters, state the fact of passage of resolution, and refer to the resolution of intention for further particulars, and section 9, making it sufficient for orders and notices subsequent to resolution of intention to briefly describe the work or the assessment district, or both, and refer to resolution of intention for further particulars, and in view of section 20, subd. 8, giving power to exempt school properties, and section 16, requiring protest at time and place specified to save rights.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; D. A. Cashin, Judge.

Action by P. H. McGarry against R. W. Ellis, Superintendent of Streets of the City of Clovis, and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Everts, Ewing & Wild, of Fresno, for appellant.

Gallaher, Simpson & Hays, of Fresno, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. This is an action by the plaintiff herein, alleging himself to be a property owner of the city of Clovis, to restrain the defendant R. W. Ellis, as superintendent of streets of said city, and the defendant Clark & Henery Construction Company, as contractors, from proceeding with the performance of certain street work within said city under proceedings theretofore inaugurated by the officials thereof under the provisions of the Improvement Act of 1911 (St. 1911, p. 730), and which proceedings had progressed through the various legal stages provided for in said act up to the award of the contract to do such street work as was provided for therein to the defendant contractor and to the actual commencing of the work under such contract. The resolution of intention to do the work in question contained the following provision:

"And whereas, said contemplated work and improvement is in the opinion of said board of trustees of more than local or ordinary public benefit, said board hereby makes the costs and expenses of said work or improvement chargeable upon a district, which district said board of trustees hereby declares to be the district benefited by said work and improvement, and to be assessed to pay the costs and expenses thereof, which said district, is and shall be the entire city of Clovis and all property lying within the exterior boundaries of said city of Clovis, and the exterior boundaries of said city of Clovis shall constitute the exterior boundaries of said district."

Following the foregoing provision in said resolution there was another clause therein reading as follows:

"And whereas, those certain lots, pieces or parcels of land particularly described as follows: All of block 26 of East Clovis, and lots 1 to 16 of block 27 of East Clovis, and lots 1 to 25, inclusive, of block 25 of East Clovis, and used in the performance of a public function, to wit, for public school purposes, and belonging to Clovis Union High School district of Fresno county, California, are included within the district aforesaid, the board of trustees hereby declares that said lots, pieces, or parcels of land shall be omitted from the assessment hereafter to be made, to cover the costs and expenses of said work and improvement."

Upon the adoption of said resolution of intention, the notice of passage thereof, and of the proposed making of said improvement required by the Improvement Act was duly posted on all the streets, alleys, and highways of the city of Clovis, and by its terms all persons having any objection to the making of said improvement were required to appear before the board of trustees of said city upon a designated day and show cause, if any existed, why said proposed improvement should not be made in accordance with the resolution of intention on file in the office of the city clerk, to which reference was expressly made for further particulars.

In the Improvement Act in question, in prescribing the form of said notice, it is provided that it—"shall, in legible characters, state the fact of the passage of the resolution of intention, its date, and briefly, the work or improvement proposed, and refer to the resolution of intention for further particulars." Section 5.

In connection with this section of the Improvement Act, expressly declaring what the notice provided for therein should contain, section 9 of said act is also to be read, which provides in part as follows:

In "all resolutions, notices, orders and determinations subsequent to resolution of intention and notice of improvement, it shall be sufficient to briefly describe the work or the assessment district or both and to refer to the resolution of intention for further particulars."

The notice which was posted in pursuance of these sections of the Improvement Act conformed to their requirements in all of the above particulars, but in so doing it contained the following statement as to the district to be benefited by and assessed for the costs and expenses of said improvement, namely:

"And whereas, said contemplated work and improvement is in the opinion of said board of trustees of more than local or ordinary benefit, said board hereby makes the costs and expenses of said work or improvement chargeable upon a district, which district said board of trustees hereby declares to be the district benefited by said work and improvement, and to be assessed to pay the costs and expenses thereof, which said district is and shall be the entire city of Clovis, and all property lying within the exterior boundaries of said city of Clovis shall constitute the exterior boundaries of said district."

The plaintiff herein, while a property owner of said city of Clovis, did not appear at the time specified in said posted notice of the proposed improvement to protest against the making thereof, nor was any protest, in fact, made by any one during the course of the proceedings leading up to and including the award of the contract for making said improvement; and the sole contention of the plaintiff in this action is that the officials of said city never acquired jurisdiction to make the improvement in question. The basis of this contention is this: That while in the resolution of intention to make the improvement it is provided that the district to be benefited by and assessed for said improvement "shall be the entire city of Clovis and all property lying within the exterior boundaries of said city of Clovis," it is also provided that certain specified lots and blocks within said city used for school purposes "shall be omitted from the assessment hereafter to be made to cover the costs and expenses of such work and improvement"; and while, as the appellant contends, these two provisions of said resolution of intention constitute the description of the district to be assessed, the notice of improvement which was posted in pursuance of said act and of said resolution of intention entirely omitted any reference to the school properties thus exempted from the assessment, and was, therefore, according to his contention, void as not embracing a description of the district to be benefited and assessed, and as failing to notify the property owners thereof

[1, 2] We find no merit in this contention. The Improvement Act of 1911, under which this proposed improvement was to be made, provides for the district plan of making such public improvements, leaving it to the discretion of the governing officials of the municipality to determine what the exterior boundaries of such district shall be. The board of trustees of the city of Clovis was therefore entitled to include the entire city within the exterior boundaries of such district, if in the discretion of the members of said board the scope of the improvement justified such inclusion. Kane v. Wedell, 202 Pac. 340, decided by this court October 13, 1921; Minnesota Land Co. v. Billings, 111 Fed. 972, 50 C. C. A. 70. The Improvement Act of 1911 also specifically provides for an exemption of property within said district used for school purposes in the discretion of the governing body of the city proposing to make such improvement upon the district plan. Improvement Act 1911, § 20, subd. 8. It follows that in the inclusion of the entire city of Clovis described by its exterior boundaries within the district to be benefited and assessed for the improvement, and also in the exclusion from such assessment of the designated lots and blocks devoted to school purposes, the governing body of the city of Clovis were acting strictly within their powers; nor did the fact of the exemption of the designated school properties from assessment in any way affect the size of the boundaries or description of the district itself. It was definitely bounded by the exterior boundaries of the city of Clovis. In the issuing and posting of the notice of the passage of such resolution of intention the board of trustees of said city were not bound, therefore, to include therein the statement of this exemption nor the description of the specific properties within the exterior boundaries of the district omitted from the assessment. Perine v. Erzgraber, 102 Cal. 234, 36 Pac. 585; Hutton v. Newhouse, 41 Cal. App. 690, 183 Pac. 276.

[3] It is, however, contended by the plaintiff and appellant herein that the omission from said notice of the fact and extent of these exemptions misled him as to the extent to which his own property would be assessed and as to the increase in his burden due to the exclusion from assessment of these exempted properties, as a result of which misleading he made no protest against the proposed improvement at the time and place provided for such protest in said notice. It is a sufficient answer to this contention that by the terms of the improvement act above referred to the notice is only required "to briefly describe the work or the assessment district or both", and to refer to the resolution of intention for further particulars. This provision made it the duty of the property owner within the designated district to inform himself as to the full terms and effect of the resolution of intention in order to guide his action or inaction in the matter of protesting against the proposed improvement; and not having so informed himself, and not having made his protest as required under said act and by said notice, he was concluded from urging the fact that he was in any manner misled by the form of the notice, and also, we think, concluded from urging the point upon which he rests his sole contention in this matter. Improvement Act 1911, § 16; Watkinson v. Vaughn, 182 Cal. 55, 186 Pac. 753. The cases cited by the appellant as supporting his contention do not in our opinion in any way militate against the foregoing conclusions nor the authorities which support them.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, P. J., KERRIGAN, J.

54 Cal. App. 673

SHEPHERD et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT IN
AND FOR FRESNO COUNTY et al.
(Civ. 4053.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Oct. 27, 1921. Rehearing Denied Nov. 26, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 22, 1921.)

1. New trial ☞113—Order granting is judicial act, and cannot be made by judge out of court.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 660, relative to the hearing of motions for new trials, and section 166, specifying the powers of a judge of the superior court at chambers the determination of a motion for new trial is a judicial act which the judge cannot make out of court by telephoning his courtroom clerk, who was then at his own home, to enter an order granting the motion.

2. Judges ☞27—Authority to transact business out of court exceptional, and exists only when authorized by statute.

The general rule is that all judicial business must be transacted in court, and the authority to transact such business out of court is exceptional, and does not exist unless expressly authorized by statute.

3. Time ☞10(7)—For new trial not extended because expiring on Sunday.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 660, providing that the power of the court to pass on a motion for a new trial shall expire within three months after verdict, etc., such time was not extended by the fact that it expired on Sunday, and that the last day and all of the Saturday preceding from 12 o'clock noon were holidays, and a nonjudicial period.

4. Holidays ☞5—Judicial business not transacted unless expressly authorized.

The superior court cannot, on a legal holiday, transact any judicial business outside of the constitutional and statutory exceptions.

5. Time ☞10(7)—When last day of period limited was Sunday, time for granting new trial ended at noon on Saturday.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 660, providing that the court's power to pass on a motion for a new trial shall expire within three months after verdict, etc., and that if such motion is not determined within such time the effect is to deny the motion without further order, where the last day of such period was Sunday, the court's power to determine a pending motion expired at 12 o'clock noon on Saturday, and when not determined before that time its jurisdiction was lost, and an order subsequently made was in excess of the court's jurisdiction.

6. Prohibition ☞3(2)—Granted to prevent new trial under void order.

Where an order granting a new trial was void because in excess of court's jurisdiction, but the court was about to go forward with a new trial, there was no plain, speedy, or any, remedy by appeal, and relief would therefore be granted by writ of prohibition.

Original application by B. F. Shepherd, Jr., and another for a writ of prohibition, directed to the Superior Court for the County of Fresno and S. L. Strother, judge thereof. Peremptory writ issued.

Lewis H. Smith, of Fresno, for petitioner Shepherd.

J. P. Bernhard, of Fresno, for petitioners De Vaux.

G. Levin Aynesworth and L. N. Barber, both of Fresno, for respondents.

WASTE, P. J. The petitioners have applied for a writ of prohibition to restrain the respondent from proceeding with the retrial of a case, after motion for a new trial granted. The order purporting to grant the motion is regular on its face, but is shown by uncontroverted evidence to have been irregularly made and entered.

The petitioners were defendants in an action brought in the court below, entitled Kahrman et al. v. Shepherd et al. (No. 23376). Judgment was rendered in their favor. On the 3d day of January, 1921, as such defendants, they gave notice to the plaintiffs in the action of the entry of the judgment. Plaintiffs in the action thereupon interposed a motion for a new trial, which, after argument and submission, was taken under advisement by the trial court. By the terms of section 660 of the Code of Civil Procedure the period of limitation on the power of the court to determine the motion expired on Sunday, April 3d. Between 3 and 4 o'clock on Saturday afternoon, April 2d, the trial judge telephoned from his residence to his courtroom clerk, who was then at his own home, to enter an order granting the motion for a new trial. This order was not entered by the clerk until the next Monday morning, April 5th, when it was made to appear in the minutes as though made and entered during a regular session of the court on Saturday, April 2d. The petitioners here subsequently made a motion to vacate and set aside the order granting a new trial, which was denied, and the respondent is about to go forward with the retrial of the case, to prevent which this proceeding was brought.

The petitioners contend that the action of the trial court in granting the motion for a new trial was a nullity, for two reasons which we deem worthy of consideration: First, because the purported order was made on a holiday; and, second, for the reason that it was not given and made in court. Corollary, we may say, to both propositions is the suggestion that the time within which the trial court could determine the motion for a new trial had expired by the limitation fixed by the Code section.

If we were only called upon to consider the effect of a court order made and entered on a holiday, but within time, we would not hesitate to hold with the respondent, and say that the action of the trial court resulted in a mere irregularity, which was waived by the subsequent attitude of the petitioners in not calling the attention of the respondent, or of the plaintiffs in the action, to their objection to the procedure until after the time within which the plaintiffs might have appealed from the judgment against them. McGrath v. Langford, 35 Cal. App. 215, 217, 169 Pac. 424; People v. Maljou, 34 Cal. App. 384, 388, 167 Pac. 547. Another and more serious consideration is presented by the fact that the respondent attempted to perform a judicial act out of court.

[1, 2] The motion for a new trial was not heard by the respondent judge merely as an individual, but by the court. Its determination was a judicial act (Code Civ. Proc. § 660; Campbell v. Genshlea, 180 Cal. 213, 214, 180 Pac. 336), and the order granting the motion was not one which the respondent had a right to make out of court. The powers of a judge of the superior court at chambers are enumerated in section 166 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the authority to determine a motion for a new trial is not among them. The general rule is that all judicial business must be transacted in court, and the authority to transact such business out of court is exceptional, and does not exist unless expressly authorized by statute. Carpenter v. Nutter, 127 Cal. 61, 64, 59 Pac. 301, and cases cited. When a judge of the superior court is present at the place designated for the transaction of judicial business, and there assumes to transact such business, his acts may be considered as the acts of the court of which he is judge, even though he be the only one present. Von Schmidt v. Widber, 99 Cal. 511, 514, 34 Pac. 109. But even this broad limitation was never intended to cover a case like the present one, in which the respondent essayed a judicial act while at his private residence away from the courthouse, and not even in the presence of his clerk.

[3-6] Then, again, the respondent had no jurisdiction, either as judge or court, to make the order granting the motion for a new trial. The three months' period of limitation within which the court could determine the motion expired on Sunday, April 3d, and was not extended by the fact that the last day, and all of the Saturday preceding from 12 o'clock noon until 12 o'clock midnight, were holidays and a nonjudicial period. Bidwell v. Sonoma County Transportation Co., 39 Cal. App. 330, 333, 178 Pac. 722. The superior courts cannot, on a legal holiday, transact any judicial business outside of the constitutional and statutory exceptions. In re Smith, 152 Cal. 566, 572, 93 Pac. 191. Consequently, it was incumbent upon the respondent to have determined the pending motion for a new trial in the court below before 12 o'clock noon of Saturday, April 2, 1921. Not having done so, the effect was a denial of the motion, without further order of the court, by operation of the statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 660), which deprived the respondent of any further power in the matter. Its jurisdiction to determine the motion for a new trial was lost. Consequently, in proceeding to take any steps looking to a retrial of the case of Kahriman et al. v. Shepherd et al. (No. 23376), respondent is acting in excess of its jurisdiction. Petitioners have no plain, speedy, or any, remedy by appeal from the order granting the new trial, and are therefore entitled to the relief prayed for. Havemeyer v. Superior Court, 84 Cal. 327, 397, 24 Pac. 121, 10 L. R. A. 627, 18 Am. St. Rep. 192.

Let a peremptory writ of prohibition issue in accordance with the views herein expressed.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; STURTEVANT, Justice pro tem.

54 Cal. App. 654

GATES v. DALEY et al. (Civ. 3395.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 25, 1921.)

Master and servant — §302(2) — Automobile truck owner liable for negligence of driver's assistant.

The owner of an automobile truck is liable for its negligent operation by one driving with permission of the driver, while he is resting, though he had no authority to engage an assistant.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by Harry E. Gates against George R. Daley and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant Daley appeals. Affirmed.

Charles C. Crouch, of San Diego, for appellant.

James L. Allen, of Brawley, and Conkling & Brown, of El Centro, for respondent.

WORKS, J. Action for damages caused by the negligent operation of an auto truck. Plaintiff had judgment, and defendant Daley appeals.

The auto truck was the property of appellant, and the defendant George Edge was employed by him to drive it. In the regular course of his employment Edge went on a long trip with the vehicle, accompanied by his wife. At a point on the journey Edge became fatigued, and in order temporarily to rest himself, allowed Mrs. Edge to operate the truck. It was while she was at the wheel that the accident occurred out of which this litigation arises. Edge had no authority from appellant to engage a substitute or assistant to drive the truck.

Appellant contends for a reversal of the judgment against him on the ground that Mrs. Edge was not employed by him, nor under any authority conferred on Edge by him, to operate the truck, claiming that the liability of an owner of an instrumentality for damages caused by its negligent operation by another person can only be predicated of the fact that such other person was at the time the agent of the owner. In support of his view appellant cites abundant authority from some of the other states; the cases referred to upholding that view in no uncertain terms. In fact, however, there are many cases on both sides of the question, an exhaustive citation of them being found in 18 R. C. L. p. 785, par. 245, notes; 26 Cyc. 1521; note to Thyssen v. Davenport Ice Co., 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 572; note to Geiss v. Twin City Taxicab Co., 45 L. R. A. (N. S.) 382.

The cases in which masters have been held liable for the negligence of assistants to their regularly employed servants, laying aside those instances in which the servants have engaged the assistants under an express authority conferred by the masters, seem to be divided into two classes: First, those cases in which the assistants committed the acts of negligence in the presence, and therefore impliedly under the direction, of the servants; second, those in which the assistants, although being negligent while working out of the presence of the servants, were engaged in the rendition of services which they had been accustomed to perform at the servants' request for considerable periods of time, thus giving rise to the view that the servants enjoyed an implied authority to engage them. A fair sample of the first class of cases is Geiss v. Twin City Taxicab Co., 120 Minn. 368, 139 N. W. 611, 45 L. R. A. (N. S.) 382. After referring to several authorities on the subject the Supreme Court of Minnesota there said:

"We think they support the conclusion that the master is liable when the act is done in the presence of the servant and by his direction, or with his acquiescence, though the person doing the act is not a servant of the master, and though the master has not authorized the servant to employ an assistant."

A case of the second class, on the facts stated, is found in the decision of our Supreme Court in Bank of California v. Western Union Tel. Co., 52 Cal. 280; but the opinion there found is practically based upon Althorf v. Wolfe, 22 N. Y. 355, a case undoubtedly belonging in the first class. The present case, if the judgment against appellant is to stand, naturally falls in the same classification with Althorf v. Wolfe and with Geiss v. Twin City Taxicab Co., supra. By its indorsement and adoption of the doctrine of Althorf v. Wolfe, our Supreme Court has aligned itself with the courts of those states whose decisions fall under the group to which that case belongs. Appellant was therefore liable for the damages occasioned by the negligence of Mrs. Edge.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; CRAIG, J.

(54 Cal. App. 645)

PLUMB v. STAHL et al. (Civ. 2366.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 24, 1921. Rehearing Denied Nov. 23, 1921.)

1. Libel and slander — 7(6) — Charge of burglary libelous per se.

Publication in a newspaper of a charge that one has committed a burglary, and that he was suspected of having committed another burglary, is libelous per se.

2. Libel and slander — 124(8) — Where publication of libel charging felony is admitted, plaintiff entitled to damages.

Where newspaper published of plaintiff that he had committed a burglary, and defendant admitted the publication, and that the charge was untrue, it was error to instruct the jury that it was their province to determine whether or not damages should be allowed.

3. Libel and slander — 5 — When malice may be rebutted stated; "Malice in Fact"; "Malice in Law."

That form of malice the existence of which cannot be rebutted is a legal malice, or "malice in law," and, the libel being admitted, this form of malice is conclusively presumed; but "malice in fact," which is a vexatious purpose to injure, may be rebutted.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Malice in Fact; Malice in Law.]

On Rehearing.

4. Libel and slander — 105(1, 2) — Immaterial evidence should have been excluded.

In action for libel against newspaper for publishing that plaintiff had committed a burglary and was suspected of having committed another burglary, in which defendant admitted charge was untrue, court erred in admitting evidence to show whereabouts of plaintiff and as to other matters concerning plaintiff and a companion, and evidence that defendant had published, prior to publication in suit, that a crook tried to rob store, was likewise inadmissible, though proof showed that store was under office of plaintiff.

5. Libel and slander — 111 — Evidence held admissible to rebut malice.

Where plaintiff sued for libel in charging him with having committed a burglary and alleged malice, defendants, though admitting the publication, and that charge was untrue, were entitled to show, to rebut the malice charged, and thereby reduce punitive damages, that they believed that the man reported to them as having committed the burglary was plaintiff, and that it had been reported to them that another of the same name had committed the offense.

Appeal from Superior Court, Solano County; W. T. O'Donnell, Judge.

Action by William Plumb against Henry F. Stahl and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Frank A. Duryea, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Joseph M. Raines and W. U. Goodman, both of Fairfield, for respondents.

PREWETT, Justice pro tem. [1, 2] The respondents published in their newspaper a charge that appellant had committed a burglary, and that he was suspected of having committed another burglary. The appellant lived and carried on business within the city in which the libel was published. The respondents admit that the charge is untrue, and thereby admit the commission of the libel. The appellant sued for damages. The language charged is clearly libelous per se. Words of doubtful import and words of two or more meanings are not libelous unless the jury finds that they were used in a libelous sense. But it has always been held that it is libel per se to charge a person with the commission of a crime involving moral turpitude. In this case there is no pretense that the libel was not published, and no pretense that the language used is true. Under this state of facts the appellant was entitled to a verdict for damages, and it was error for the court to charge the jury that they might find to the contrary. The publication being admitted, it was error to charge the jury that it was their province to determine whether or not damages should be allowed. Under the law the appellant should have had a verdict.

In Childers v. Mercury, etc., 105 Cal. 289, 38 Pac. 903, 45 Am. St. Rep. 40, the court says:

"This publication charged plaintiff with the commission of a felony. It was false, not privileged, and libelous per se. Upon such a state of facts, the cause of action for actual damages is conclusively established. * * * And the amount and measure of damages are the only questions left for litigation."

This case has been frequently cited with approval.

In Taylor v. Hearst, 107 Cal. 262, 40 Pac. 392, the court holds that:

"It was not necessary that damages resulting from injury to the feelings be specially alleged, or that proof of such injury be specially given."

In this case it is further held that an erroneous verdict in a libel case will be set aside, even though the court may think that only nominal damages will be awarded, citing in support of the doctrine the case of Lick v. Owen, 47 Cal. 252. This cited case shows that, if a publication be libelous and not privileged, the presumption that it is malicious is conclusive and cannot be rebutted.

"If the publication is a libel per se, the plaintiff is entitled to recover compensatory damages." Gilman v. McClatchy, 111 Cal. 606, 44 Pac. 241.

"The plaintiff was therefore entitled to substantial damages for the injury admittedly suffered by him—that is to say, to 'damages reasonably adequate' to the injury suffered, and the jury should have been instructed to that effect." Turner v. Hearst, 137 Cal. 232, 70 Pac. 18.

A large number of similar cases are drawn to the attention of the court, but a detailed examination of them is unnecessary, since they are in harmony with the foregoing. Our attention has not been drawn to any case to the contrary. The respondents are evidently convinced that none exist, for they have cited none.

[3] That form of malice the existence of which cannot be rebutted is a legal malice, or malice in law. The libel being admitted, this form of malice is conclusively presumed. But malice in fact, a vexatious purpose to injure, may be rebutted, and the cases cited by respondents go wholly to this form of malice.

The respondents, by asking the court to charge the jury that they might find a verdict for any sum above one cent and not exceeding the amount claimed by the appellant, concede the soundness of his claim that he proved his case when he showed the publication of the libel.

The court, in a number of instances, modified the proposed instructions by charging the jury that it rested with them to find whether or not the appellant was damaged. This relegated to the jury the conclusive presumption that the article complained of was libelous, and entitled the appellant to damages, and charged them, in effect, that they might disregard that presumption. One or two examples of a number will illustrate this point. In instruction numbered 6 the court says:

"In connection with that portion of the article which I have already instructed you is libelous per se, [it] subjects the defendants to liability for damages to the plaintiff, if you so find from the evidence."

And in the ninth instruction, the court uses this language:

"The plaintiff is entitled to verdict against the defendants for such general or actual damages, if any, as you may find from the evidence."

These modifications left it to the jury to determine whether or not they would find a verdict for the appellant.

Under the admitted facts of the case, the appellant was entitled to a verdict. Even if the court had not made these modifications, we would still be under the necessity of reversing the judgment, since the evidence does not justify the verdict.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

On Rehearing.

PREWETT, Justice pro tem. [4] In denying the petition in this case for a rehearing, it is proper to add that it was error to require the witness, Mrs. Plumb, to testify on cross-examination, as to the whereabouts of her son and as to other matters concerning him and his companion. These matters were not in issue, and their truth or falsity was a matter or no moment in this case. Likewise, the testimony of Officer Malone along the same lines should not have been admitted.

Evidence of the publication in the newspaper of respondents, about one month prior to the publication of the libel in question, and entitled "Crook Tried to Rob Store," was for like reasons improperly admitted. That some one attempted to commit the burglary in the publication mentioned may be conceded, but the respondents do not claim that the appellant did it or was in any manner connected with it. The proofs showed that the store referred to is under the office used by the appellant as a taxicab office. The evidence could only have been offered for the purpose of prejudicing the case of the appellant, in view of the charge in the libel that he was suspected of having attempted the burglary. It was otherwise wholly immaterial.

[5] Other points urged by appellant do not require special notice. The appellant chose to tender the issue that the libel was published "maliciously," and so long as the complaint remains in its present shape he must bear the burdens arising from that tender. The respondents are entitled to meet the charge of malice (in order to reduce the amount of punitive damages) by appropriate pleadings and evidence. If the demands of the appellant had been limited to mere compensation for the actual injury suffered, of course the proofs would have been limited to that question. Under that state of the issues, the respondents would have been restricted to proofs minimizing the extent of the actual injury suffered. Davis v. Hearst, 160 Cal. 143, 116 Pac. 530.

Under the issues in the case, the court did not err in permitting the respondents to show that they believed that the William Plumb reported to them as having committed the burglary was the appellant, and as explanatory of their attitude as to actual malice, that it had in fact been reported to them from reliable sources, that another person of the same name had committed the offense. But under an issue as to mere compensation only, such proofs would have been inadmissible. Taylor v. Hearst, 118 Cal. 366, 50 Pac. 541; Id., 107 Cal. 262, 40 Pac. 392. Rehearing denied.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

CAVANAGH et al. v. SHAVER et al.* (Civ. 3972.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Oct. 15, 1921.)

1. Municipal corporations ☞581—Evidence held to show city's receipt of money deposited on refusal of tender to redeem from sale.

In an action to recover money tendered by plaintiffs to redeem from a sale for a street assessment, and, on refusal to accept it under protest, deposited by plaintiffs in a bank, a certificate of deposit, bearing the indorsement of the superintendent of streets and street superintendent, held to show that the city had received the money.

2. Municipal corporations ☞581—Deposit of money claimed to be necessary for redemption from sale held made under duress.

Where plaintiffs' land was sold for a street improvement assessment and shortly before the time for delivery of a deed plaintiffs, under protest, tendered the amount claimed by the superintendent of streets to be necessary to redeem, and, on his refusal to accept it, deposited it in a bank, the deposit was made under duress, as in the absence of payment the title already clouded would have been permanently lost.

3. New trial ☞2—Not unauthorized when judgment granted on pleadings and statements of counsel.

In an action against a city and its superintendent of streets to recover money tendered to redeem land from a sale, and, on refusal of the tender, deposited in a bank, where the answer alleged that defendants had not received the money and at the trial moved for judgment which was granted after a colloquy between the court and counsel in which statements were made which were treated as evidence, the court had jurisdiction to grant a new trial in view of the implied denial of the averment of the answer under Code Civ. Proc. § 462, preventing judgment on the pleadings, and section 582, relative to judgments on the merits.

4. Appeal and error ☞884—Defendants collecting money pending suit not entitled to attack complaint or assert that action was prematurely brought.

In an action to recover money tendered to a city superintendent of streets under protest, to redeem from a sale and on his refusal to accept, deposited in a bank, defendants who made the point that the complaint did not allege that they had received the money, disclaimed in their answers, but collected the money before judgment held not entitled to attack the sufficiency of the complaint or assert that the action was prematurely commenced because they had not then received the money.

*For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

*For opinion on rehearing see 207 Pac. 275, 56 Cal. App. 58.

5. Appeal and error —232(2)—Objection not made to evidence in trial court would not be considered.

Where there was no objection to a certificate of deposit indorsed by and paid to defendant's officer for want of proof of the signatures thereon, defendants were not entitled to urge that matter in the appellate court.

6. Municipal corporations —581—Statute held to adopt general laws as to penalties and procedure on redemption from sale for assessment.

Under St. 1889, p. 74, § 16, providing that provisions of law in reference to sale and redemption of property for delinquent taxes shall be applicable to the sale and redemption of property for delinquent assessments for street improvements, the penalties on redemption and the procedure on redemption are governed by the general laws covering taxes.

7. Municipal corporations —300—City council in adopting street ordinance could adopt general statutes as they stood in any particular year.

Under Petaluma charter, art. 3, § 21, authorizing the city council to provide for the widening of streets and, in the ordinance, to embrace such powers as are granted by a general law, the city's legislative body could adopt the provisions of the Political Code as they stood in the year 1894, or in any other year.

8. Appeal and error —909(6)—Presumed in support of judgment that ordinance not before court adopted general statutes after repeal of provision for penalty.

In an action to recover back money tendered to redeem from a street assessment sale and deposited on refusal of the tender, where the ordinance regarding the improvement is not before the court it must be assumed in support of the judgment below that it adopted the provisions of the Political Code as they stood after the repeal of section 3779 relative to the penalty to be paid on redemption from tax sales.

9. Appeal and error —901—Party claiming error must show facts constituting.

It is presumed that the case was properly tried and decided, and one claiming that error has been committed should show by the record on appeal the facts constituting the error.

10. Appeal and error —634—Judgment affirmed for defects in record.

Where papers brought up on appeal are stipulated as being full, true and correct copies but there is nothing to show that they are the ones on which the trial was had, or in which the trial resulted, and there is nothing to show that the judgment roll is before the court, nor to show the date of filing of any paper and the bill of exceptions, though certified as being the engrossed bill, is neither stipulated nor certified as full, true and correct, the judgment will be affirmed, especially where it is apparent that there has been no miscarriage of justice.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Emmet Seawell, Judge.

Action by J. E. Cavanagh and others against E. S. Shaver individually and as superintendent of streets and street superintendent of the City of Petaluma and another. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

G. P. Hall, of Petaluma (E. J. Dole, of Petaluma, of counsel), for appellants.

W. T. Mooney, of Petaluma, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, J. The city of Petaluma was organized and is existing under and pursuant to a freeholders' charter. Stats. 1911, p. 1799. Pursuant to the provisions of section 21 of article 3 of said charter, the city has the power by ordinance to provide for the widening of a street, and in such ordinance to embrace such powers as are granted by a general law. The state of California enacted a general law on that subject. Stats. 1889, p. 70. Among other things, in section 16 of said act it is provided:

"All provisions of the law in reference to the sale and redemption of property for delinquent state and county taxes in force at any given time, shall also then, so far as the same are not in conflict with the provisions of this act, be applicable to the sale and redemption of property for delinquent assessments hereunder, including the issuance of certificates and execution of deeds."

When the last statute was enacted, chapter 7 of title 9 of part 3 of the Political Code, sections 3746-3819, prescribed the law in reference to the sale and redemption of property for delinquent state and county taxes.

On the 20th day of October, 1913, the city of Petaluma commenced proceedings for the opening, extending, and widening of Douglas street in said city. At that time the plaintiffs were property owners in said city. The proceedings were conducted to such a point that the properties of the plaintiffs were sold for the nonpayment of the assessments. Such sale was made to W. J. Hickey. When the time was arriving at which the said W. J. Hickey might appear and demand a deed, the plaintiffs tendered to E. S. Shaver, as superintendent of streets, $9,065.53, being the amount claimed by the superintendent of streets as necessary to justify a redemption. Such tender was accompanied by a written protest. The superintendent of streets did not accept the tender, and thereupon the plaintiffs deposited the $9,065.53 in the Petaluma National Bank, and immediately served a written notice to that effect on the superintendent of streets. Thereafter they commenced an action against him to recover a money judgment for the amount so deposited. The defendants appeared and filed answers, denying that they had received the money, and disclaiming a right thereto. Thereafter, on the 11th day of April, 1918, the case came on for trial, and judgment was ordered in behalf of the defendants. Another action was commenced by the purchaser, W. J. Hickey, for the purpose of obtaining deeds. That action was brought on for trial after the 11th day of April, 1918, and judgment was rendered against the purchaser, because the owners had tendered to the superintendent of streets the full amount necessary to authorize a redemption, and the redemption should have been allowed. When that judgment was rendered E. S. Shaver had ceased to be the superintendent of streets, and had been succeeded by James A. Potter as superintendent of streets. On July 6, 1918, and after the rendition of the judgment in the Hickey case, James A. Potter, as superintendent of streets, went to the bank and collected the amount theretofore deposited by the plaintiffs. Then, on July 29, 1918, the trial court signed a judgment. In the meantime, these plaintiffs had prepared a motion for a new trial, which was granted, and thereafter, on the 18th day of November, 1918, the case again came on for trial. On the second hearing of the case these plaintiffs contended that when they made their tender of $9,065.53 they did so because the superintendent of streets demanded that sum. They also contended that said sum included, among other items, a penalty of $3,337.89, and that said item was not a proper charge, and should not have been demanded nor paid. In this last contention the trial court agreed with the plaintiffs and awarded the plaintiffs a judgment for that amount. The defendants appealed from the judgment and have brought up papers purporting to be the judgment roll and a bill of exceptions. No motion to dismiss has been made because of any defect in the record on appeal.

[1] The appellants assert that the evidence does not show that the money alleged to have been deposited in bank ever came to the hands of the defendants, or either of them, or was ever claimed by them or either of them. In so far as E. S. Shaver, or E. S. Shaver, as superintendent of streets, is concerned, the contention is well founded if the record and bill of exceptions are full, true, and correct as to all papers and proceedings. As to the city of Petaluma, the contention is not sustained by the record. The certificate of deposit was offered in evidence, and on it appears the indorsement, "Paid 7/6/18," and also the indorsement, James A. Potter, Superintendent of Streets and Street Superintendent of the City of Petaluma and Successor in Office to E. S. Shaver." During the second hearing the question of the payment of the certificate being under discussion, Mr. Hall, attorney for the appellants, admitted that the certificate of deposit had been paid after the judgment in the Hickey suit, which judgment held that the tender was good.

[2] The appellants claim that the deposit was not made under duress. We think they are mistaken. True, the title of the plaintiffs had already been clouded at the time of the tender. But in the absence of the payment, the plaintiffs' title would have been permanently lost.

[3] The appellants claim that the trial court had no jurisdiction to grant a new trial. In making this contention we understand them to rely upon the rule stated in Gray v. Cotton, 174 Cal. 256, 162 Pac. 1019, and Stow v. Superior Court, 178 Cal. 140, 172 Pac. 598. We think that this case is not controlled by either of said cases, but that the latter case is more nearly in point, and in that event the trial court did not exceed its jurisdiction in granting the so-called motion for a new trial. It might be better said that the trial court was merely remarking that it took a different view of the pleadings than it entertained on a previous date, and was hearing the case for the first time; or, to put it another way, that it had inadvertently exceeded its jurisdiction on the former occasion when the plaintiffs were not awarded a trial, and that the matter was being cured by having a formal trial on the latter date. The first step in the proceedings is, by one of the defendants' attorneys, called a motion for judgment on the pleadings; by another of defendants' attorneys it is called a motion for a nonsuit. It is not clear that the first trial was not a trial on the merits. True, the plaintiffs had not alleged "that the defendants had and received" any money; but, the defendants, in their answer, inserted an allegation that they had not had and received the money. The averment of the answer was deemed denied by virtue of the provisions of section 462, Code of Civil Procedure. In the face of such a record the defendants had no right to move for judgment on the pleadings. McGowan v. Ford, 107 Cal. 177, 40 Pac. 231. To avoid the rule in that case the defendants at the hearing on April 11, 1918, made certain statements to the trial court, which were taken and acted on as evidence. The trial court so considered the record, as appears from the proceedings:

"Mr. Dole: If your honor please, before we proceed with taking any evidence, I want to make a motion for judgment on the pleadings in favor of defendants. * * *

"The Court: And that he refused to accept the same. * * *

"Mr. Hall: Yes; failed, neglected, and refused. * * *

"The Court: You say it is not our money; we don't want it?

"Mr. Dole: Yes.

"The Court: * * * I will hear from Mr. Mooney. * * *

"The Court: You do not even allege you applied to the bank and they refused to pay you back your money.

"Mr. Mooney: No; we have not, your honor. I think the money is not there for us.

"The Court: Well, I think the bank should be a party to it, * * * because Shaver has never gotten it, and he says he has never gotten it; does not want it; would not have it."

"It appearing that the defendants, each and all, disclaim any interest whatever in the fund deposited by the plaintiffs in said bank for the use and purposes described in the complaint, and the fact of the allegation appearing in the complaint that Shaver and the other defendants have at all times refused to accept the money, and they in no way appearing to hinder or impede its repayment to the parties who are properly entitled to it, or who made the deposit, under the disclaimer, so far as these defendants are concerned, the court finds, as a matter of fact, on the statement in the pleadings, that the defendants are not impeding or standing in the way of the payment of this money, and are willing that the bank should pay it; in fact, disclaim any interest whatever in it. It is the order of the court that judgment to that effect be made, and that defendant have judgment for their costs."

These, and other matters, tend to show a trial of the case on its merits. Code Civ. Proc., § 582.

[4] The appellants complain with much vigor that the plaintiffs' complaint does not state a cause of action. It is far from being a model of good pleading. In view of the facts recited in the introduction of this opinion, we think that the appellants are estopped to raise that question. We are fully aware that the appellants have acted, and are acting, in the best of good faith in everything that they have done. However, they were not entitled to make the point that the complaint did not allege that they had received the money to insert a disclaimer in their answers, and then to go and collect the money before the trial court's judgment had been signed or entered. If they desired to have this court pass on the sufficiency of the complaint, they should have allowed the facts to remain as the facts were on the date the action was commenced, and not to alter the facts by an overt act which would greatly prejudice the rights of the plaintiffs.

In this same connection the appellants claim the action was prematurely commenced. In this connection the appellants assert that they received the money after the plaintiffs had commenced this action. What we have said above regarding the attack on the complaint applies to this attack as to the date of the commencement of the action.

[5] The foundation was very imperfectly laid for the introduction in evidence of the certificate of deposit, but the objection to its introduction was equally faulty. The proceedings were as follows:

"Mr. Mooney: I have also here a certificate of deposit which was made by the plaintiffs in this action, and which has since been cashed in by the city. Is there any objection to that?

"Mr. Dole: That is objected to as incompetent, irrelevant, immaterial, and hearsay.

"Mr. Hall: Now, if your honor please, counsel is endeavoring to open this whole case. Your honor passed your judgment on this case and then granted a new trial upon one theory alone. Now, is it the idea to open up this case entirely—your honor can readily understand that the introduction of this evidence throws the bars all down and means a complete trial of the case.

"The Court: I do not think it is hearsay."

We find no record as to the proof of signatures on the certificate, but such objection was never made or called to the attention of the trial court. The appellants therefore are not entitled to have this court consider matters which were never before the trial court.

[6-8] As hereinabove stated, the trial court gave judgment in favor of the plaintiffs for a sum of money which it is stated in the record was claimed by the defendants as a penalty of 50 per cent. The ordinance adopted by the city of Petaluma is not before us. It is stated in the briefs of the appellants that by cross-reference and adoption the statute imposing the penalty is section 3779 of the Political Code as it was worded on March 6, 1889. That section provides as follows:

"On filing the certificate [of redemption] with the county recorder, the lien of the state vests in the purchaser, and is only divested by the payment to him, or to the county treasurer for his use, of the purchase money and fifty per cent. thereon."

In reply to this contention the respondent cites and relies on San Francisco, etc., L. Co. v. Banbury, 106 Cal. 129, 39 Pac. 439, and also calls attention to the fact that the act of 1889, hereinbefore referred to, provides a full scheme and plan as to assessments, penalties, charges, and costs, and that section 16 of that statute should have application only in such matters as are not clearly provided for in other portions of the act of 1889. In this contention respondent would be correct if his statement of the law were correct, but a most cursory reading of section 16 of the act of 1889 shows that that statute does not provide, nor purport to provide, the penalties on redemption or the procedure on redemption, but such matters are to be ascertained by consulting the general laws. As stated, the sale in question was made to a private individual and not to the state. When section 3779 of the Political Code was in force it spoke with reference to sales to a private individual. The section was repealed March 28, 1895. When the ordinance regarding the opening of Douglas street was enacted the legislative body of Petulama had the power to adopt by the terms of an ordinance the provisions of the Political Code as they stood in the year 1894, or in the year 1895, or in any other year. Without having that ordinance before us, we are unable to state what statute was adopted. These matters were before the trial court. Every intendment is in favor of the judgment of the trial court, and we must assume therefore that the ordinance on its face showed the adoption by cross-reference of the provisions of the Political Code after the repeal of section 3779, supra.

[9, 10] Conceding that we are in error in our reasoning as to any point discussed above, still we think the judgment should be affirmed. It is presumed that the case was properly tried and decided. He who would claim that error has been committed should show by the record on appeal the facts constituting the error. This the appellants have not done. Some papers have been brought up which are stipulated as being full, true, and correct copies. There is nothing in the record showing said papers are the ones on which the trial was had, or that they are the result of the trial. There is nothing to show that the judgment roll is before us, nor to show the date of the filing of any paper. The bill of exceptions is certified as being the engrossed bill; but it is neither stipulated nor certified as being a full, true, and correct bill. Moreover, it is patent that there has not been a miscarriage of justice.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

54 Cal. App. 665

PEOPLE v. MACCHIAROLI. (Cr. 778.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Oct. 26, 1921.)

1. Rape ☞19—Aider and abettor must both aid and abet.

To support a conviction of rape as an aider and abettor under Pen. Code, § 31, it must be proved that he both aided and abetted in the commission of the crime.

2. Rape ☞19—Defendant guilty of rape as aider and abettor.

Where defendant and two others held up and robbed a man and a woman, and the others then raped the woman while defendant prevented the man from interfering by holding a gun against him, defendant was guilty of rape as an aider and abettor.

3. Robbery ☞15—Robbery of two held joint enterprise so as to render defendant liable for whole robbery.

Where defendant and two others held up a man and a woman seated in an automobile and defendant robbed the man while the others robbed the woman, and all then drove away in the automobile, there was a joint enterprise and defendant was guilty of robbing the woman.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Sidney N. Reeve, Judge.

Frank Macchiaroli was convicted of robbery and rape, and from the judgment and an order denying a new trial he appeals. Affirmed.

Guy Eddie and William F. Adams, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Arthur Keetch, Deputy Atty. Gen., and John W. Maltman, of Los Angeles, for the People.

SHAW, J. Appellant was indicted on four counts. The first count charged him with the robbery of an automobile and of money and other personal property from one Esquerre. The second count charged him with the robbery of some earrings and a gold ring from a young woman who was the companion of Esquerre in the automobile at the time of the robbery. The third count charged him with the crime of rape in that he aided and abetted one Gonzales in the rape of the woman. The fourth count charged him with the crime of rape in that he aided and abetted one Marsiglia in the rape of the woman. The defendant, having been found guilty of all of these counts, has appealed from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

[1] The first contention of appellant is that the evidence is insufficient to justify his conviction on either the third or the fourth count. He claims that while his acts may have aided in the accomplishment of the crime of rape by Gonzales and Marsiglia, yet that there is no evidence that he abetted them in the commission of those crimes. In order to sustain the conviction on these counts, it must have been proven that the defendant did "aid and abet" in the commission of the crimes. Pen. Code, § 31. "The law declares that all persons concerned in the commission of a crime, whether they directly commit it, or aid and abet in its commission, or advised and encouraged its commission, are principals." People v. Coffey, 161 Cal. 433, 440, 119 Pac. 901, 904 (39 L. R. A. [N. S.] 704). In People v. Bond, 13 Cal. App. 175, 185, 109 Pac. 150, 155, the court adopted the following definition:

"To abet is to incite or encourage a person to commit a crime. An abettor is a person who, being present or in the neighborhood, incites another to commit a crime and thus becomes a principal in the offense."

Applying the definition to that case, wherein the defendant Bond and one Carpenter were jointly charged with the murder of one Robert Junior, and it was claimed that the shot which caused the death of Junior was fired by Carpenter, the court said:

"If, with the knowledge of Bond, Carpenter feloniously made the assault and the former voluntarily assisted in taking the life of the Indian, although he did not fire the fatal shot, both would be equally guilty. It would be absurd to say that if Bond knowingly contributed to the death of Junior he would not be an aider and abettor of whatever crime was committed."

[2] In this case it appears from the evidence that appellant, Macchiaroli, together with Gonzales and Marsiglia, came to the automobile in which Esquerre and the woman were seated and ordered them out of the machine. Esquerre was made to step out of the automobile on one side, and the woman on the other side. While appellant took money and other personal belongings from Esquerre, the other two took certain jewelry from the woman. Then Gonzales and Marsiglia carried the woman across the road, where the crime of rape was committed by them. After this the woman was brought back and left with her companion on the road side, while appellant and his accomplices drove away with Esquerre's automobile. In the confession afterwards made by appellant, which was duly admitted in evidence, he claimed that while the rape was being committed he made some objection. At the same time, however, the evidence shows that appellant held Esquerre there with a revolver against him. Esquerre testified that when he heard the woman cry out the only reason why he did not go to help her was that appellant was holding the gun against him. These circumstances being well established, to hold that appellant did not both aid and abet the others in the commission of the crime of rape would be audaciously absurd.

[3] The only other point suggested in support of the appeal is that there was no evidence to justify conviction of appellant of the crime of robbery of the earrings and gold ring taken from the woman. That the robbery of both Esquerre and the woman was a joint enterprise of these three men, in which all were equally guilty, is so plain that no argument whatever is needed to sustain the conviction.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

54 Cal. App. 609

PEOPLE v. ROLLINS. (Cr. 571.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 19, 1921.)

1. Embezzlement $\S$ 44(4)—Evidence that accused received the money held sufficient.

In a prosecution for embezzlement, where it was claimed that the money embezzled belonged to complaining witness and another, evidence by the complaining witness that he gave the money to defendant out of his own pocket, if believed by the jury, is sufficient to justify conviction.

2. Criminal law $\S$ 406(5), 736(2)—Admissions by accused of commission of wrong of some sort admissible, and in relation to present charge for jury to determine.

In a prosecution for embezzlement, admissions by defendant that he had committed a wrong in the northern part of the state were admissible; it being for the jury to determine whether such admissions related to the present case.

3. Criminal law $\S$ 1186(4)—Alleged misconduct of prosecutor in cross-examination held not prejudicial.

In a prosecution for embezzlement, any possible error by the district attorney's question to defendant if at the time of his arrest he had not stated to policemen that he was "going right to Stockton to straighten up about that car" was not reversible error in view of the sustained objection and the court's direction that the jury should disregard it, and the fact that the evidence justified conviction, in view of Const. art. 6, $\S$ 4½, in relation to disregard of errors not affecting substantial rights.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; Geo. F. Buck, Judge.

G. C. Rollins was convicted of embezzlement, a new trial was denied, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Glenn West, of Lodi, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PREWETT, Justice pro tem. The appellant is charged with the crime of embezzlement committed by the felonious appropriation to his own use of the sum of $140.75, intrusted to him for the purpose of paying certain laborers who were working under his immediate supervision as foreman. He was tried by a jury and found guilty as charged, and he brings this appeal from the judgment of conviction and from an order denying his motion for a new trial. The appellant makes three points:

[1] 1. That the evidence is insufficient to sustain a verdict of guilty, in this, that the money embezzled belonged to the complaining witness and another person, while the charge is laid in the information that it belonged to the complaining witness alone. This witness testified that he gave the money to the appellant out of his own pocket. This, if believed by the jury, was sufficient. The evidence shows that the money in question was intrusted to the appellant to pay the wages of the laborers working under him, and that, instead of executing his trust, he appropriated the money to his own use and absconded. He went from Stockton to Los Angeles and later to San Jose, at which place he was arrested by a policeman. The claim or statement in appellant's brief that he surrendered himself to the policeman is evidently a mistake. He was arrested while in the act of selling a kit of carpenter's tools.

[2] 2. The appellant stated to the district attorney that he had admitted to a party in Los Angeles the commission of a wrong of some sort in the northern portion of the state. The appellant objected to the testimony of the district attorney to this effect upon the ground that there was no evidence showing that this admission related to the present case. But it might have related to this case, and it was the province of the jury, in the light of all the facts and circumstances in evidence, to determine whether or not it so related. It is a common practice for courts to admit in evidence statements, acts, or material objects, such as weapons, in the absence of direct and positive evidence connecting them with the case on trial. There was no error in the ruling complained of.

[3] 3. After a question as to whether or not the appellant was in an automobile when arrested, the district attorney asked this question: "Is it not a fact that, when the policeman approached you, you told them you were going right to Stockton to straighten up about that car?" The appellant objected to the question and assigned the act of the district attorney in propounding it as prejudicial misconduct; and in that connection his attorney stated in court: "That car belonged to the defendant, who paid $700 for it." The court promptly sustained the objection and charged the jury that the matter should not have the slightest weight with them. This action of the court cured whatever error may have been committed. We are not disposed to commend the act of the district attorney in asking the question, but it is difficult to see how any injury to appellant could have resulted therefrom. Moreover, the evidence of the guilt of the appellant is so conclusive that the jury could not have failed to find him guilty, even though the alleged error had not been committed. We are satisfied that no miscarriage of justice arose by reason thereof. Section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution was enacted to meet cases of this class.

The order denying the motion of appellant for a new trial and the judgment are affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

54 Cal. App. 649

PEOPLE v. O'KEEFE. (Cr. 819.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Oct. 25, 1921.)

1. Burglary —10—In first degree must be committed in nighttime.

A conviction for burglary in the first degree is not justified, in the absence of evidence that the burglary was committed in the nighttime.

2. Criminal law —878(2)—Verdict held one of guilt on both counts.

Under Pen. Code, § 954, providing that an indictment may charge two or more different offenses of the same class, and that defendant may be convicted of any number of the offenses charged, and each one of which he is convicted must be stated in the verdict, where defendant was charged with burglarizing the same house on two different occasions, and evidence was received concerning both charges, and both were submitted to the jury, a verdict, finding him guilty of burglary in the first degree was a verdict of guilty on both counts.

3. Criminal law —1177—Defendant not prejudiced by insufficiency of evidence on one count when sentenced to only one term of imprisonment.

Under Pen. Code, § 954, as to charging different offenses in the same indictment, and section 669, requiring the imprisonment on a second conviction to commence at the termination of the first term of imprisonment, where defendant was found guilty on two counts charging burglary, but sentenced only for an indeterminate period for the crime of burglary, he was not prejudiced by the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict on one count if there was sufficient evidence under the other count, as he was entitled to the benefit of the judgment as limited by its own terms to one term of imprisonment.

4. Burglary —42(1)—Evidence insufficient to support conviction.

Evidence held insufficient to support a conviction for burglarizing a dwelling house, there being no evidence tending to prove defendant's guilt aside from his possession of stolen property more than two months after the burglary.

5. Burglary —36—Evidence that defendant was victim's divorced husband, etc., held irrelevant.

On a trial for burglary, evidence that defendant was the divorced husband of a woman residing in the burglarized house whose property was stolen, and that more than a month after the date of the alleged burglary he was found loitering about her home, and had placed under her door and in her automobile documents of an unexplained nature, was irrelevant, as creating a suspicion that he had a disposition to annoy his former wife.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Howard A. Peairs, Judge.

Timothy O'Keefe was convicted of burglary, and from the judgment and an order denying a new trial, he appeals. Reversed.

Dorris & Henderson, of Bakersfield, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Arthur Keetch, Deputy Atty. Gen., and R. L. Chamberlain, of San Francisco, for the People.

CONREY, P. J. Appeal from the judgment and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

The information is in two counts. The first count charges that on or about the 23d day of December, 1920, the defendant unlawfully, feloniously, and burglariously entered a certain dwelling house in the city of Taft, with the intention then and there to commit the crime of larceny. The second count charges a similar entry of the same house on or about the 1st day of January, 1921. The verdict of the jury, without particular designation of either count, found the defendant guilty of burglary in the first degree. The judgment, after reciting that the defendant was duly convicted of "the crime of felony, to wit, burglary in two counts," ordered that the defendant be punished by imprisonment in the state prison of the state of California "for an indeterminate period for the crime of burglary in the first degree."

[1] Appellant contends that the verdict is defective in this, that it cannot be ascertained therefrom upon which of the counts the jury rendered its verdict, and that this is prejudicial to him for the reason that the verdict cannot possibly be supported on the second count. Appellant claims—and in this we agree with him—that there is no evidence to show that the burglary charged in the second count was committed in the nighttime. This being so, a verdict convicting the defendant of the crime of burglary in the first degree, as charged in the second count, could not be justified by the evidence.

[2] We are of the opinion that the verdict as rendered was a verdict of guilty on both counts. Under section 954 of the Penal Code, the indictment or information may charge two or more different offenses of the same class of crimes or offenses. "The defendant may be convicted of any number of the offenses charged, and each offense upon which the defendant is convicted must be stated in the verdict." Since evidence was received concerning both charges, and both were submitted to the jury, we think that the verdict in the form in which it was rendered was a verdict of guilty on both counts.

[3] On this state of the record, and in view of the judgment as entered, the defendant has not been prejudiced by reason of the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict on the second count, if he was convicted upon sufficient evidence relating to the first count. Section 669 of the Penal Code reads as follows:

"When any person is convicted of two or more crimes before sentence has been pronounced upon him for either, the imprisonment to which he is sentenced upon the second or other subsequent conviction must commence at the termination of the first term of imprisonment to which he shall be adjudged, or at the termination of the second or other subsequent term of imprisonment, as the case may be."

It is not here necessary to determine whether under the provisions of section 669, where a defendant has been convicted of two or more crimes covered by one verdict, the court would be authorized to sentence the defendant for successive terms of imprisonment for the several offenses of which he was found to be guilty. The judgment in this case did not attempt to go that far. He is entitled to the benefit of the judgment as limited by its own terms, whereby he is sentenced to only one term of imprisonment, for the crime of burglary in the first degree. Construing the verdict and judgment as we have done, there is no sufficient reason for a reversal under the claim of a defective or otherwise insufficient verdict.

[4] Appellant further contends that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict against him on the first count. There is no direct evidence of his presence at the house in question at the time, nor until more than a month after the time, when the alleged burglary was committed. There is evidence that at a subsequent time certain articles stolen from that house were found in his possession. He invokes the rule that the mere possession of stolen property by a defendant is not sufficient evidence upon which to justify an inference of guilt, and that there must be other circumstances besides the unexplained possession of such property to justify a verdict of guilty of burglary. People v. Boxer, 137 Cal. 562, 564, 70 Pac. 671; People v. Lang, 142 Cal. 482, 76 Pac. 232. In the case last cited the court said:

"While possession of the stolen property is not of itself sufficient evidence of the guilt of the party in whose possession it is found, still the recent possession, unexplained, is a very strong circumstance, when taken in connection with other circumstances that point to guilt."

The question, therefore, is whether in this case other circumstances that point to guilt were established by the evidence. One of the stolen articles was a gold ring belonging to the complaining witness, Harvey Countess, which was last seen in his house on December 16, 1920. The ring having been lost, Mrs. Countess made a thorough search for it on December 19th, without success. It was not seen again until found on the 2d day of March following in the defendant's locker in his sleeping room. Two other men slept in that room, but the defendant's locker was fastened with a Yale lock, of which the key was found in the defendant's pocket. The arrest of the defendant occurred on the evening of the 2d day of March, when the defendant was found loitering about the home of Mr. Countess and his wife. Immediately preceding his arrest, the defendant had placed in their automobile an envelope containing papers, the contents of which are not explained, but which are referred to in the evidence as "literature." Similar papers had been found thrust under the door of the house on two or three occasions in February. At the time of his arrest the defendant admitted that those papers had been placed there by himself. Besides these facts, all of which were introduced over the objections of the defendant, it was also shown (his objections being likewise overruled) that he formerly had been the husband of Mrs. Countess, and that in the year 1902 they were divorced. At the time of his arrest there was found in the coat pocket of the defendant a letter addressed to Mrs. Countess by one of her friends. This letter, according to the testimony of Mrs. Countess, had been missing since December, or just before Christmas. There was also found in the locker, together with said ring, a revolver belonging to Mr. Countess, which he had last seen on New Year's day, and had first discovered its loss on the 2d day of March.

[5] We are forced to the conclusion that, aside from defendant's possession of the stolen property at a date more than two months after that property appears to have been stolen, there is no evidence tending to prove defendant's guilt of the crime of burglary as charged in the first count of the information. The fact that the defendant had been the husband of Mrs. Countess, and the fact that more than a month after the date of the alleged burglary he had placed under her door and in her automobile documents of an unexplained nature, and was found loitering about the home of Mr. and Mrs. Countess on the 2d day of March, are not circumstances tending to prove that at any time during the preceding December he was guilty of burglary of that house, either for the purpose of committing larceny, or at all. Such evidence tends to create a suspicion that the defendant had a disposition to annoy his former wife, and was likely to arouse prejudice against him in the minds of the jurors. Of this he would not be entitled to complain if at the same time the evidence had any connection with the commission of the crime charged against him, but the facts thus shown are wholly unrelated to that crime. Aside from the bare fact of the possession of the stolen property at the time stated, there is absolutely no evidence that at or about the time of the commission of the burglary, or at any time prior thereto, the defendant ever was present in the house where the burglary was committed, or in that vicinity. We conclude that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict against the defendant on the first count. The judgment is reversed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; JAMES, J.

54 Cal. App. 677

JONES v. KEY et al. (Civ. 3733.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Oct. 27, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 22, 1921.)

1. Municipal corporations ☞706(5)—Evidence held sufficient to support finding that plaintiff was not negligent.

In an action for injuries from an automobile collision, evidence held sufficient to support a finding that plaintiff was not negligent.

2. Evidence ☞474(3)—Admission of statement of plaintiff concerning the permanency of injuries held proper.

In an action for negligent injuries, the admission in evidence of a statement of the plaintiff that he did not believe he would ever recover full use of his arm and hand was proper.

3. Damages ☞161 — Mental suffering held within the issues framed.

In personal injury action, where, although the complaint did not directly mention mental suffering, it did allege that plaintiff suffered serious and lasting injury to his nervous system, mental suffering was a proper element of damages in the issues as framed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Louis W. Myers, Judge.

Action by Thomas L. Jones against Alvin E. Key, doing business under the fictitious name and style of the Key Motor Transfer Company, and another. From judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

W. I. Gilbert, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Newlin & Ashburn, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. Pursuant to the verdict of a jury, the plaintiff has recovered damages in the sum of $5,000 for personal injuries resulting from a collision between the plaintiff and an automobile owned by the defendant Key, and driven by the defendant Satterfield. The defendants appeal from the judgment. The points relied upon by appellants are: First, that the respondent, as shown by all of the testimony, was guilty of negligence in failing to maintain a proper lookout or to exercise ordinary care while he was crossing the street where the accident occurred, and that this negligence contributed directly and proximately to his injury; second, that the court erred in admitting in evidence testimony of the respondent to the effect that he did not believe that he would ever recover the full use of his arm and hand. In overruling the objection to this testimony, the court limited the testimony to the single purpose of showing the mental suffering which resulted to him from the injuries received.

[1] Respondent was hit by the automobile while he was passing from the south side to the north side of Third street, in the city of Los Angeles, at a point between Spring street and Broadway. The automobile was moving in an easterly direction, a part, if not all, of the automobile being on the north side of the street, which was the wrong side of the street for an automobile traveling in an easterly direction. Respondent was north of the center of the street when the collision occurred. Before leaving the curb of the sidewalk, respondent saw the automobile of the defendants, and saw that it turned in behind a line of automobiles which were moving slowly toward him on the south side of the street. Seeing that he was safe with respect to that line of automobiles, he approached the center of the street and turned his attention toward the east, that being the direction from which danger might be apprehended on the north side of the street. At that instant the driver, Satterfield, left the line in which he was moving and drove rapidly toward Spring street. According to his own statement, "when I swung out around these cars in front of me, my idea was to get in front of them and beat them to the Spring street crossing." It is not necessary to state further particulars of the evidence. The facts are very similar to those existing in the case of Lewis v. Tanner et al., 193 Pac. 287, recently decided in this court. For like reasons as those given in that decision, we are satisfied that the jury in this case was well warranted in finding that the plaintiff was not chargeable with negligence.

[2] The court did not err in receiving the testimony of respondent, stating his belief concerning the probable permanency of his injuries. The question is analogous to that which was under consideration in Boa v. San Francisco-Oakland Terminal Rys., 182 Cal. 93, 187 Pac. 2. In that case appellant claimed that the court erred in receiving in evidence statements to the plaintiff by certain physicians as to the possibility of the permanency of the plaintiff's injuries. The court said:

"Unquestionably the physical and mental condition of plaintiff resulting from the accident was material, and mental suffering occasioned by any reasonable apprehension of future disability or deformity resulting naturally and proximately from her injury was a proper element to be considered by the jury in assessing the damages. Sedgwick on Damages (9th Ed.) § 44, and cases cited. The disability apprehended was one arising from the blow occasioned by defendant's car and cannot be considered in any sense remote. It follows that plaintiff had a right to testify as to her belief at the time of the trial that she would be a permanent invalid."

[3] Appellants contend that mental suffering was not a proper element of damages in the issues as framed, for the reason that the damages as alleged in the complaint were confined to physical injuries and loss of earnings. It is true that the complaint does not directly mention mental suffering, although it does allege that the plaintiff suffered serious and lasting injury to his nervous system. But the same criticism might have been made upon the complaint in Boa v. San Francisco, etc., Rys., supra. The complaint there did not directly mention mental suffering, but only alleged that the plaintiff's nervous system was shattered and unstrung, and that she suffered, and would continue to suffer, pain and anguish. Nevertheless the court decided the matter as hercinabove stated.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; JAMES, J.

54 Cal. App. 628

PARKER et al. v. HARDISTY et al.
(Civ. 2357.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 21, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 19, 1921.)

1. Judgment $\S$ 379(1)—For plaintiff not annulled in absence of substantial defense.

A judgment for plaintiff will not be annulled for fraud in its procuring it at the instance of defendants, unless the defendants had a substantial defense to the action in which the judgment was rendered.

2. Reformation of instruments $\S$ 26—Grantee in deed held entitled to reformation.

Where a husband intended to convey certain land in a deed of gift to his wife, but by reason of interpolation of the word "of," the deed only conveyed a part thereof, and the wife attempted to convey the entire tract to a third person, who paid consideration therefor, her grantee was entitled to reformation of the husband's deed as against his heirs, whose claim was not founded upon any consideration, and not asserted during 14 years.

3. Judgment ☞624—Administratrix cannot confess judgment and set it up as bar in her own favor.

A party ought not to be permitted to urge in bar of an action against her personally a judgment that she has confessed to as an administratrix and defendant in a former action.

4. Limitation of actions ☞82—Held to run against heirs.

The statute of limitations, pending administration, runs against heirs in favor of one claiming the land adversely under a deed from the ancestor.

5. Judgment ☞237(1)—Judgment for one defendant and further hearing for another held proper.

In action by heirs against two defendants claiming two tracts of land separately to set aside a judgment reforming a deed of the ancestor in favor of one of the defendants, where judgment was rendered in favor of the latter defendant, court properly permitted the other defendant to amend her answer so as to set up claim by adverse possession or otherwise, in order that the conflicting interests of all the parties might be determined in one action, under Code Civ. Proc. § 578.

Appeal from Superior Court, Calaveras County; Fred V. Wood, Judge.

Action by Emma Parker and others against Etta Hardisty and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

J. P. Snyder and A. H. Carpenter, both of Stockton, for appellants.

R. L. Beardslee and Nutter & Hancock, all of Stockton, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. The opinion of the trial judge, which is set out in respondents' brief, seems to us to be a clear and satisfactory exposition of the facts and of the legal principles involved in the case, and we hereby adopt it, as follows:

"This is an action to vacate a judgment of this court heretofore rendered by Judge McSorley and entered on January 24, 1910. The facts upon which plaintiffs seek relief are, in substance, as follows:

"On March 29, 1895, one Robert Reed Jenkins was the owner of 1,350 acres of agricultural land in Calaveras county, one lot in Camp Seco, and four lots in the city of Stockton. Upon that day he executed a gift deed whereby he apparently attempted to convey all of this property to his wife, Julia. The deed refers to the land conveyed as 'containing 1,350 acres.' Jenkins was the owner of the south half ($\frac{1}{2}$), the fractional northwest quarter ($\frac{1}{4}$) and the fractional southwest quarter ($\frac{1}{4}$) of the northeast quarter of section 16, but in the deed to his wife the word 'of' was interpolated after the words 'the south half ($\frac{1}{2}$),' which had the effect of eliminating from the description the south half, and the north one-half of the northwest quarter of the section. Of the property thus omitted from the description in the deed, the defendant Etta Hardisty claims to be the owner of about 235 acres by virtue of a conveyance from her mother, Julia A. Jenkins, bearing date January 18, 1896; and as to the remaining 125 acres of the omitted property it appears that on said January 18, 1896, for a valuable consideration the said Julia A. Jenkins executed a deed therefor to Hiram Tyrer, who entered into possession under said deed, and thereafter, on June 5, 1905, executed a deed of the property to one Frank Sanborn. The latter, for a valuable consideration, on September 15, 1909, executed a conveyance of the property to W. S. Dennis, one of the defendants in this action. The following month the attorneys for Dennis discovered that the description in the deed from Jenkins to his wife did not include the property that had been purchased by Dennis, which seems to have been the first discovery made by any one that word 'of' had been interpolated in the deed.

"At the request of Dennis, Mrs. Etta Hardisty procured letters of administration upon the estate of her father, Robert Reed Jenkins, to be issued to her, and on January 10, 1910, Dennis commenced an action in this court against Mrs. Hardisty, as such administratrix to reform the gift deed from Robert Reed Jenkins to his wife, Julia A. Jenkins, upon the ground of the mutual mistake of Jenkins, his wife, and the scrivener who drew the deed, said mistake being the insertion of the word 'of' heretofore referred to. By said action Dennis also attempted to obtain a decree quieting title upon the ground of his predecessor's adverse possession for more than five years. Mrs. Hardisty as administratrix filed an answer consenting to a judgment in favor of Dennis in said action. All of the expenses of Mrs. Hardisty and her attorney in procuring letters and appearing in said action were paid by Sanborn, the grantor of Dennis. Judge McSorley took evidence in said action, and by his decree not only adjudged the reformation of said deed by striking out the word 'of,' but as well found and decreed that Dennis and his predecessors had been in the actual, open, and continuous occupation of the land, and paid all taxes levied and assessed thereon ever since the execution of the deed to Julia A. Jenkins.

"The defendant, Etta Hardisty, and the three plaintiffs in this action are the surviving children of Robert Reed Jenkins and his heirs at law, the wife, Julia A. Jenkins, having died February 5, 1907. For nearly 15 years it was assumed by all of these persons that by the deed of conveyance from Robert Reed Jenkins the whole of his property had been vested in his wife Julia A., and it was not until the rendition of the judgment by Judge McSorley that the plaintiffs discovered the error in the description, whereupon they commenced this action to vacate and annul that judgment.

"While it is claimed by the plaintiffs that the judgment heretofore rendered was made in pursuance of a conspiracy to cheat and defraud plaintiffs, and while the said acts complained of may be such as to constitute legal and actionable fraud, yet it is but fair to the defendants to say that there is not a particle of evidence to indicate that they were intentionally endeavoring at any time to wrong or defraud any person, but, on the contrary, they were acting from honest motives in an attempt to correct the paper title of the property of the defendant Dennis.

[1] "Consideration will be first had of the plaintiffs' asserted cause of action against the defendant Dennis. The rule is well established that in order for the plaintiffs to prevail in an action of this character, they must show, not only that the former judgment was procured by fraud, but also that they had a substantial defense to the action in which the judgment was rendered, for equity will not annul a judgment if it is a correct and just determination of the rights of the parties thereto. See Reed v. Bank of Ukiah, 148 Cal. 97, 82 Pac. 845; Parsons v. Weis, 144 Cal. 417, 77 Pac. 1007; People v. Perris Irrigation Dist., 142 Cal. 606, 76 Pac. 381; 23 Cyc. 1039 and 1040.

"The facts in this case in reference to the error in the deed are quite similar to those appearing in Hart v. Walton, 9 Cal. App. 504, 99 Pac. 719. There the court adjudged a reformation of a deed, because through the carelessness of the scrivener in writing the word 'of' instead of 'and' the grantee received 115 acres of land less than she bargained for. In that case, however, the grantee had paid a valuable consideration for the conveyance. It is here urged that as the conveyance from Jenkins to his wife was a mere voluntary transfer without any consideration, the former judgment of this court in reforming the deed was erroneous, citing Enos v. Stewart, 138 Cal. 112, 70 Pac. 1005. That was a suit against the husband as administrator of his wife's estate, brought by her mother to correct a description in a deed of gift executed to the mother by the daughter prior to her death. It was there said: 'It is a universal principle of courts of equity that in all cases where relief is asked by aiding and correcting mistakes in the execution of instruments and powers the party seeking such relief must stand upon some equity superior to that of the party against whom he asks it. If the equities are equal, the law must prevail, and the court will remain silent and passive. The equities of respondent are, at least, equal to those of the appellant. It is the dictate of equity and natural justice that the property of a wife dying without issue should go in part to her surviving husband. * * * By refusing to correct the deed no fraud nor injustice is done to appellant. She has lost nothing because she paid no consideration for the deed.'

"The statement, often made, that 'courts of equity will not aid voluntary conveyances,' cannot be accepted as an inflexible rule, for like most others it is subject to exceptions. Thus in Dawson v. Dawson, 16 N. C. 101, 18 Am. Dec. 573, cited in Enos v. Stewart, supra, we find the court saying, 'Where, however, the conveyance is complete and property passes, or rights are vested by it, that property or those rights are guarded and protected, notwithstanding there was no consideration for passing or raising them.' So too, in Cummings v. Freer, 26 Mich. 128, which was an action for the reformation of a deed of gift, brought against the heirs of Freer by a mortgagee who had loaned money to the son of Freer after he had gone into possession under the deed and made improvements upon the property, it is said by the court that if 'before its execution he [the father] may have been under no legal obligation to execute it, and a mere agreement to execute such deed as a gratuity, though in consideration of natural love and affection to a son, where the grantee had not gone into possession, or done, given up, or expended anything on the faith of it, and no equities of other parties had intervened, would not, perhaps, be enforced by a decree for a conveyance.'

[2] "The case presented before Judge McSorley was radically different from that of Enos v. Stewart, upon which plaintiffs rely, and there can be little question but that Dennis stood upon an equity superior to that of the heirs of Robert Reed Jenkins, who are the plaintiffs in this action. Dennis paid full value for the land, and his predecessors in interest, including Julia Jenkins, had been, for over 14 years in the open, notorious, actual, and continuous possession of the same, and paid all the taxes thereon. Plaintiffs' claim to the property is not founded upon any consideration, and was never asserted during the 14 years mentioned.

[3] "Consideration now will be had of this action as it affects the 235-acre tract claimed by Mrs. Hardisty. The first question that arises is as to whether, even assuming the legality in every respect of the judgment rendered by Judge McSorley, can it be urged by Mrs. Hardisty in bar of the claim now made by these plaintiffs against her? In 23 Cyc. at page 1237, it is said: 'To constitute a judgment an estoppel, there must be an identity of parties as well as the subject-matter; that is, it is necessary that the parties as between whom the judgment is claimed to be an estoppel must have been parties to the action in which it was rendered, in the same capacities and in the same antagonistic relation, or else they must be in privity with the parties in such former action.' However, in City of El Reno v. Cleveland-Trinidad Paving Co., 25 Okl. 648, 107 Pac. 163, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) at page 650, in the footnote, will be found a line of authorities holding that a judgment is res adjudicata between codefendants as to matters which were or even might have been adjudicated in a former suit.

"It may be assumed that, if the judgment rendered before Judge McSorley was regular and unimpeachable, then these plaintiffs cannot now, in an action against Mrs. Hardisty, question the fact that there was an error in the deed caused by mutual mistake as alleged, but as the 235-acre tract of land was not involved in the former action, nor any person claiming it under the conveyance to Julia A. Jenkins made a party thereto, no opportunity was there afforded to these plaintiffs represented by an administratrix to obtain a judicial determination as to whether Mrs. Hardisty was entitled to a reformation of the deed to perfect her title to the 235 acres. Indeed the defendants in the former action may have not denied the error in the deed as alleged, but they did not thereby confess that Mrs. Hardisty was entitled to a reformation to clear her title, nor could that question have been involved without placing Mrs. Hardisty in the anomalous position of individually suing herself as administratrix. Furthermore, upon general equitable principles a party ought not to be permitted to urge in bar of an action, a judgment that she has confessed to as an administratrix and defendant in a former action. Believing as I do that the decree of Judge McSorley was not an adjudication of any claims to the 235-acre tract, it follows that under the pleading and evidence before the court Mrs. Hardisty has shown no legal claim to property, for as she cannot rely upon the former decree, it was incumbent upon her by proper pleading and legal evidence to show that there was a mutual mistake in the execution of the deed, and that she had a superior equity to that of plaintiffs to the property, or that she had acquired ownership by 5 years' adverse possession, but in both these particulars she has failed. Certain statements of counsel made during the trial, together with certain evidence, lead to the inference that Mrs. Hardisty may be able to produce evidence that she has acquired title by adverse possession, and that the deed under which she claims was acquired by virtue of a division and settlement of the estate of Julia A. Jenkins among her children. Under such circumstances justice and equity seem to dictate that the rights of Mrs. Hardisty shall not be finally cast without an opportunity to amend her pleadings and produce further evidence.

[4] "In this connection it may not be amiss to notice the claim made by the plaintiffs that the statute of limitations cannot run against them as heirs of their father, Robert Reed Jenkins. In support of this contention they rely upon the case of Blair v. Hazzard, 158 Cal. 722, 112 Pac. 298. There is nothing in that case that would militate against the acquirement of title by adverse possession by either Dennis or Mrs. Hardisty. All that was involved there is stated at the top of page 725, and is as follows: "The question is, Can a devisee of an estate or a grantee of a devisee entering into possession of realty by virtue of title actually or colorably derived from the estate and asserting title from no other independent source acquire, under the circumstances, a title against the estate by adverse possession so as to relieve the property from the statutory requirement that it shall be subject to the demands of administration?" The question was answered in the negative because real property, whether in possession of administrator, the heirs or devisees, until the close of administration, is always subject to the condition that it may be sold to pay debts and expenses of administration, and because everything that an heir or devisee in possession may do by way of ownership of exclusive control he has a perfect right to do so far as the estate is concerned.

"It is obvious here that neither Dennis, Mrs. Hardisty, or their predecessors ever asserted any title as heirs, devisees, or grantees of any heirs or devisees under the estate of Robert Reed Jenkins, but that since the execution of the deed by Jenkins they or their predecessors have asserted their claim of title in opposition to that of Jenkins or his estate.

"The prayer for the annulment of the decree made by Judge McSorley will be denied, and within 20 days after notice hereof the defendant Mrs. Hardisty is allowed to amend her answer and plead title by adverse possession and any equitable right she may have."

[5] It appears that, after said opinion was rendered, the defendant Mrs. Hardisty filed an amended answer, and the action as to her is still pending in the superior court. For the reasons stated in said opinion it was proper to award judgment in favor of defendant Dennis and to continue the cause for further hearing as to defendant Hardisty. Section 578, Code Civ. Proc. As stated, the action related to two different tracts of land claimed separately by the defendants, but since they were both made parties by the plaintiffs, the latter cannot complain that the court permitted said amendment in order that the conflicting interests of all the parties might be determined in one action.

Several specific objections to the judgment are urged by appellants, but they are substantially covered by the opinion of the trial judge, and it seems hardly necessary to make any further suggestions.

To conclude, we are entirely satisfied that the judgment is supportable upon the two grounds mentioned by the trial court: First, that the matter was res adjudicata; and, second, that respondent Dennis acquired a prescriptive title. We may add that, in our opinion, it would be a just inference from the evidence received that it was the intention of the grantor in said deed to convey the entire 1,350 acres, including the land in controversy. As to this last consideration we may state that at the oral argument herein said deed was exhibited and its appearance would indicate that the word "of" was interpolated or inadvertently used without any intention on the part of the grantor to qualify the extent of the property conveyed. The deed itself in connection with the practical construction placed upon it by the parties in interest and their acquiescence therein for so many years leaves scarcely any doubt that no mistake was made in the judicial determination of the intention of the grantor.

We find no merit in the appeal, and the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PREWETT, Justice pro tem.

54 Cal. App. 659

(202 P.)

HART v. CAPITAL FILM CO., Inc.
(Civ. 3554.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 25, 1921.)

1. Appeal and error ⚡518(4)—Order held not to be considered on appeal from judgment roll alone.

On appeal on the judgment roll alone the appellate court could not look to or consider part of an order fixing time to file an amended answer or an answer to an amended and supplemental complaint after answer stricken out, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 670, making provision for contents of judgment roll.

2. Appeal and error ⚡934(3)—Judgment roll held not to show error in entering default.

On appeal upon judgment roll alone, record did not show error in that it showed that a default was entered against a defendant without allowing the ten days within which to answer a pleading of its opponent, such judgment having been entered by the clerk and reciting, "legal time for answering having expired" the judgment against it is "hereby rendered" etc., under Code Civ. Proc. § 407, subd. 2, sections 432, 472 providing that defendant has ten days to answer but that court may direct a shorter time.

3. Appeal and error ⚡901—Appellant must affirmatively show error.

On an appeal from a judgment on the judgment roll alone, the appellant must make an affirmative showing of error.

4. Evidence ⚡83(6)—Presumed that official duty has been legally performed.

While a clerk of a superior court acts in a ministerial capacity in entering a default and in rendering default judgments, and while his acts are not supported by the presumptions to be indulged in connection with the judgments of courts of superior jurisdiction, he is yet a public officer, and his solemn acts done in the discharge of his official duty cannot be set absolutely at naught except upon some affirmative showing that they have been incorrectly performed, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 15.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County.

Action by Neal Hart against the Capital Film Company, Incorporated. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Walter E. Burke, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Wetherhorn, Hoyt & Jones, of Los Angeles for respondent.

WORKS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment entered pursuant to default. The printed transcript on appeal shows, among others, the following papers and minute orders: The complaint; a demurrer to the complaint; an order overruling that demurrer; the answer; an order striking the answer from the files, with which is incorporated an order granting leave to file a supplemental complaint and an order granting leave to file an amended answer; an amended and supplemental complaint; the entry of default; and a judgment by default, by the clerk of the court. The amended and supplemental complaint, which was filed June 2, 1920, was introduced by the statement that its filing was upon leave of court. Included with the order giving leave to file a supplemental complaint, there was, as we have observed, an order granting leave to file an amended answer. The time allowed for that purpose by the order was three days. The defendant having filed no answer to the amended and supplemental complaint, his default was entered on June 7, and a judgment on the default was rendered June 8, and was entered June 10. If we are to take all these matters as they appear in the printed transcript, and are to construe the leave to file an amended answer within three days as an order shortening the time to answer the amended and supplemental complaint, it is apparent that defendant's time to answer had expired when the default was entered.

[1] It is contended that we may not look to that part of the order fixing three days' time within which an amended answer might have been filed, the appeal being prosecuted on the judgment roll alone, and there being no bill of exceptions. This point is based on section 670, Code of Civil Procedure, making provision for the contents of the judgment roll, and it is well taken, for in the description in that section of the papers and orders to be included in the judgment roll there is nothing which would permit the incorporation therein of an order fixing the time to file an amended answer, or an answer to an amended and supplemental complaint, after answer stricken out. By the terms of the enactment the judgment roll is to consist, under such a situation as is here presented, of "the pleadings, all orders striking out any pleading in whole or in part, a copy of the verdict of the jury, or finding of the court or referee, and a copy of any order made on demurrer, or relating to a change of parties, and a copy of the judgment."

[2, 3] Disregarding, then, the order printed in the transcript allowing appellant three days within which to file an amended answer, the record shows that the default was entered on the fifth day after the service and filing of the amended and supplemental complaint, while the judgment was rendered the sixth day and entered the eighth day after that event. Appellant insists that this state of the record shows that the default was erroneously entered and the judgment erroneously rendered, and in doing so places its reliance on Bedan v. Turney, 99 Cal. 649, 34 Pac. 442 and Johnston v. Southern Pacific

Co., 150 Cal. 535, 89 Pac. 348, 11 Ann. Cas. 841. In the first of these cases—and the second is in no way different from the first—it is said:

"When an appeal from a judgment is heard upon the judgment roll alone, nothing can be assumed or considered that does not appear upon the face of that roll. If that discloses error, we can no more assume that it was cured by some matter which does not appear therein than we can consider matters outside of the roll for the purpose of impeaching the correctness of the judgment. In each case the record must be judged by itself alone."

It is to be noted, however, that this language was used concerning a judgment roll which contained a bill of exceptions as one of its component parts, and it was employed, moreover, in refutation of an argument of counsel to the effect that, where a bill of exceptions fails to disclose that it contains the entire evidence, a court of review will assume that evidence was given which would support a contested finding. However, if we take the broad language which we have quoted from the opinion in Bedan v. Turney, without explanation, it does not fit the situation here. This record does not show error. It merely shows that a default was entered against a defendant without allowing it 10 days within which to answer a pleading of its opponent, a thing which, under a section of the code cited below, may be done with perfect propriety. A defendant is allowed 10 days' time within which to answer a complaint (Code Civ. Proc. § 407, subd. 2); he may have a like period within which to answer an amended complaint interposed before answer or demurrer filed, or after demurrer, and before the trial of the issue of law thereon (Id., § 472); or, to state the rule which governs the present case, where an amended complaint is filed under circumstances different from those specified in the section last cited, a defendant is to answer within 10 days after service, or within "such other time as the court may direct" (Id., § 432).

In saying, as we have said already, that the record here does not show error on this question, we are indulging in no assumption in opposition to the record for on the subject which we now consider there is nothing in the record to be opposed. As far as we have recited it, the record is devoid of any showing concerning the time within which defendant might have answered the amended and supplemental complaint, always remembering that for the reasons already stated we must disregard the order printed in the transcript. If the judgment appealed from were one which had been rendered by the court, we should be sure that we have now disposed of the question presented as, in the case of an appeal from such a judgment it is always incumbent on the appellant to make an affirmative showing of error. In default of that showing every such judgment appealed from must be affirmed. Does this rule apply in the case of a judgment rendered by the clerk under the circumstances here shown to exist? This point may be considered, with profit, in connection with what we say at the outset of the paragraph next following.

[4] There is a feature of the record to which we have not referred in our statement of its contents. The judgment rendered by the clerk recites that, among other things, defendant's "legal time for answering having expired," the judgment against it is "hereby rendered," etc., and the statement showing the entry of default also recites that the time for answer had expired. In the case of a judgment by the court, such a recital would be conclusive on appeal (Catnich v. Hayes, 52 Cal. 338; McCauley v. Fulton, 44 Cal. 355; Whitney v. Daggett, 108 Cal. 232, 41 Pac. 471); but appellant, citing Providence Tool Co. v. Prader, 32 Cal. 634, 91 Am. Dec. 598, and Farrar v. Steenbergh, 173 Cal. 94, 159 Pac. 707, insists that no such sanctity surrounds that recital when contained in a judgment rendered by the clerk. These decisions go no further than to state the well-recognized rule that, in entering a default, and in rendering judgment upon it, the clerk acts in a ministerial, and not in a judicial, capacity, making application of it to the facts presented in each of the cases. The two citations are but parcel of a long line of decisions on the same subject running at least from Stearns v. Aguirre, 7 Cal. 443, to Landwehr v. Gillette, 174 Cal. 654, 163 Pac. 1018. In none of this line of cases, however, is there presented such a situation as is evident in the present litigation. In none of them was there before the court the question of the effect of a recital by a clerk such as appears in the judgment here. In considering that question, then, for the first time, we are to remember that there is nothing in the record in this cause to instill a doubt as to the truth of the recital. Moreover, in such a case as this the judgment roll can never be made to speak in such a manner as either to justify or to confound such a recital. The statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 432), we are to observe, allows a defendant 10 days within which to answer an amended and supplemental complaint filed under the conditions which obtain here or within "such other time as the court may direct."

We have already seen that an order of court directing the filing of an answer to such a pleading in a shorter time has no place in the judgment roll. Under the contention now made the consequences of such a situation are startling. If the judgment before us is not to stand, it is not possible for a clerk to render one which will stand in a case in which an amended complaint has been filed after answer to the complaint, and in which less than 10 days has been allowed by the court for the filing of answer to the amended pleading unless the clerk awaits the expiration of 10 days from the service and filing of the amended complaint. This, of course, would allow the defendant 10 full days to answer, would nullify the practical operation of the portion of the statute allowing the court to fix less than 10 days for that purpose and, in effect, would nullify any order made under it. An order shortening the time to answer under the section can be preserved for use on appeal only by a bill of exceptions. The party in whose favor such a judgment is rendered could file no such bill, because there is nothing to which he is to except. The other party will make no effort thus to preserve such an order, for he may sit quietly beside the trap the law has laid, and, if the clerk should enter default under the order and in less than 10 days, he may prosecute an appeal the outcome of which is bound to satisfy his most sanguine expectations. Such a condition of affairs would be intolerable if there were no remedy at hand, which, happily, there is.

While a clerk acts in a ministerial capacity in entering defaults and in rendering default judgments, and while his acts are not supported by the presumptions to be indulged in connection with the judgments of courts of superior jurisdiction, he is yet a public officer, and his solemn acts, done in the discharge of his official duty, cannot be set absolutely at naught except upon some affirmative showing that they have been incorrectly performed. It is to be presumed that official duty has been regularly performed. Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 15. Where a default is entered for a failure to answer the complaint, the summons and proof of service are part of the judgment roll, and the default, or any recital made in entering it or in the clerk's judgment rendered pursuant to it, may be measured accordingly. If the judgment roll, so constituted, shows that the default has been entered too soon, the presumption that the clerk's duty has been properly performed is overcome. In such a case as this, however, where the judgment roll does not show and cannot show whether the statutory time has been shortened, the situation is quite different. Here, without the aid of any showing in the judgment roll, we are bound to assume either that the clerk violated his duty by entering default before the expiration of the statutory time within which an answer might have been filed, or that he properly performed it pursuant to some order of the court shortening that time. We have no doubt as to which of these assumptions we shall indulge. The case presents a clear opportunity for the operation of the presumption that official duty has been properly performed. It appears, then, that this is an instance in which it is incumbent on the appellant to make an affirmative showing of error. This it might have done through the medium of a bill of exceptions, if, in fact, it were true that the statutory time was not shortened and that, therefore, the clerk entered the default before the time to answer had run out. No such showing being made, and no error appearing in the rendition of the judgment, it must stand.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; CRAIG, J.

54 Cal. App. 668

HOOPER et al. v. STONE et al. (Civ. 4006.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Oct. 27, 1921.)

1. Charities ☞39—Religious societies ☞4—Exclusive proprietary right in a name extends to charitable and religious societies.

An exclusive proprietary right may be acquired in the name under which a business has been conducted, and such right may not be lawfully interfered with or obstructed, and it extends to charitable, religious, and other societies.

2. Religious societies ☞23(1)—Seceding body from religious society cannot by incorporation acquire use of name of parent body.

A seceding body from a religious society cannot by incorporating under the name of the parent body, acquire a right to the use of the name, although the parent body was not incorporated.

3. Religious societies ☞12(2)—Dispute with seceding body as to name not exclusively under jurisdiction of ecclesiastical courts.

The dispute between the seceding body from a religious society and its parent society concerning the use of the society's name is not a matter exclusively under the jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts, especially when there is no ecclesiastical tribunal to which an appeal could be taken.

4. Appeal and error ☞1010(1)—Findings of trial court based on sufficient evidence conclusive.

The findings of the trial court, based upon sufficient evidence, are conclusive on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Everett J. Brown, Judge.

Suit by William J. Hooper and others against Philip M. Stone and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

E. W. Taylor, of San Francisco, for appellants.

E. J. Sinclair and Henry E. Ashmun, both of Berkeley, and Sloss, Ackerman & Bradley, of San Francisco, for respondents.

KERRIGAN, J. This is a suit in equity brought to determine the right to the use of a name.

It appears from the complaint that plaintiffs are members of the Christian Science Society of the University of California. It is alleged that this society was founded and organized in 1907, and continuously since said time has been and now is an association formed for the purpose of uniting the Christian Scientists in the University of California in closer bonds of Christian fellowship; of affording to the faculty and students of that institution so desiring opportunities to become familiar with Christian Science as taught by Mary Baker Eddy, the founder of the faith, by providing authorized Christian Science literature in the library, and by the doing of other acts to aid its members in becoming familiar with the teachings of the mother church. By further allegation it appears that since the time of its inception in 1907 the association had appropriated and assumed the name "Christian Science Society of the University of California," and that said association and the members thereof have been and now are the sole and exclusive owners and solely and exclusively entitled to the use of such name. It is claimed that the members of the association by diligent and continuous effort have built up from a small beginning a strong society widely known, the meetings of which are well attended, and that the Christian Science Society of the University of California is recognized by all Christian Science churches and organizations throughout the world as the authentic representative of the Christian Science movement in the University of California, and that it receives financial recognition and support from the mother church and other Christian Science organizations. It is charged that notwithstanding the long and quiet use and enjoyment of the claimed name the defendants, with the exception of Frank C. Jordan, as secretary of state of the state of California, well knowing such facts, did willfully and wrongfully and in utter disregard of the rights of said association assume and attempt to appropriate to their own use the same and identical name used by said association with intent to deceive and defraud the public and particularly the students, faculty, and alumni of said university, and to discredit the association of which plaintiffs are members, to its great damage and detriment. It is further charged that the defendants signed and filed articles of incorporation in the office of the county clerk of Alameda county under the claimed name, and subsequently presented a certified copy thereof to defendant Jordan, as secretary of state, and requested him to file the same. By further allegation the plaintiffs allege that as members of said society they have accumulated a large sum of money and securities, and that defendants will attempt to appropriate the same to their own use by their assumption and use of the name. The commission of other unlawful acts is charged, and equitable interposition for relief is prayed for.

By a second cause of action plaintiffs allege that they also presented to defendant Jordan, as secretary of state, articles of incorporation under the claimed name, but that he refused to file the same on the ground that as the two different instruments were presented simultaneously a proceeding should be instituted to determine the relative rights of the parties to the name. Injunctive relief is asked restraining defendants from the use of the name, and a mandatory injunction is prayed for, directing defendant Jordan to file the plaintiffs' articles of incorporation, and that he be directed to issue a certificate of incorporation to said plaintiffs under the name "Christian Science Society of the University of California."

Defendants interposed demurrers to each count of the complaint upon general grounds, among others, that such count does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against the defendants, or any of them, and on the further ground that the court had no jurisdiction of the subject of the action attempted to be set up in either count of the complaint, as the matter so set up is solely one for the jurisdiction of the tribunals of the church named in the complaint.

The demurrers were overruled, and defendants, answering, alleged, in substance, that they were for a long time prior to the date of the commencement of the action members of said society, and entitled to all the rights and privileges of such membership, including the use of the name contended for. They then allege facts regarding the existence of a controversy in the society, the removal of one of its officers, the expulsion of three of its members, the abandonment by the majority faction, to which plaintiffs belong, of the objects and purposes for which the society had been formed, and an attempt to coerce the minority faction into a like abandonment of such objects and purposes. It is further recited that the minority faction, composed of defendants and others, called and held a meeting to reconstruct and re-establish the society as originally formed, and had elected directors to form a corporation under the contested name, to which they claim they are entitled. Denial is made that defendants will attempt to appropriate the property accumulated by the plaintiffs.

No question is here presented as to accumulated property or the regularity of the removal or suspension of defendants; the sole question involved being which of the two factions is entitled to the use of the designated name.

It appears from the record that the parties hereto are members of the Christian Science faith, and that all of them were members of the Christian Science Society of the University of California, an unincorporated religious association, founded and organized in 1907 under authority of the by-laws of the mother church, the First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass. The provision of the by-laws authorizing the formation of such a society provides that members in good standing with the mother church who are members of the faculty, instructors, or students in any university or college can form and conduct a Christian Science organization at such university or college, provided its rules so permit. The object of such societies is for the purpose heretofore recited. The literature of such societies consists of the Bible and all the books written by Mrs. Mary Baker Eddy, and the literature which she founded and authorized. These various publications are exclusively issued and sold by the Christian Science Publishing Society. This society instituted an action in Massachusetts against the mother church, and in consequence the controversy in the society here involved arose. The majority faction, to which plaintiffs and respondents belonged, instituted in the society what may be termed a boycott against the periodicals issued and sold by the Christian Science Publishing Society for its action in suing the mother church. It also instructed its secretary to send out to the Christian Science churches and societies in California notice of its action in this regard. The secretary declined to do so, and resigned his office. The majority faction then requested the officer known as the reader to resign her office, for the reason that she continued to distribute the periodicals issued by the publishing company. This she refused to do, and she was removed from office. Subsequently certain members were expelled from the society by reason of the controversy. Thereafter these members, who may be denominated as the minority faction, met for the purpose of organizing another society, and incorporating the same under the same name as the society of which they were formerly members, claiming that the majority faction by its action had ceased to carry out the purposes for which such societies were organized.

Upon sufficient evidence the court found that the plaintiffs had not changed, or attempted to change, the society into an organization different from that which was originally formed; that plaintiffs constitute the majority faction in the society, which faction is continuing to hold meetings under the name "Christian Science Society of the University of California," and is holding itself out as the original and authentic society formed in 1907 and operated and conducted since that date for the objects and purposes as stated in the original by-laws of the organization and in accordance with the manual of the mother church.

As conclusions of law it is found that plaintiffs have the legal right to the exclusive use of the name contended for, and to an injunction restraining the defendants from using the same, and to a further injunction enjoining the filing by defendant Jordan as secretary of state of the defendants' articles of incorporation under the claimed name, and directing him to file plaintiffs' articles and to issue to them a certificate of incorporation under such name.

[1] Appellants here claim that their demurrer to the complaint should have been sustained. With reference to the general grounds relied upon in support thereof, it is sufficient to say that it is a well-established rule that an exclusive proprietary right may be acquired in the name under which a business has been conducted, and that such right may not be lawfully interfered with or obstructed. This protection is not limited to business and trading corporations, but is given to charitable, religious, and other societies. Salvation Army v. American Salvation Army, 135 App. Div. (N. Y.) 268, 120 N. Y. Supp. 471; Grand Lodge K. P. v. Grand Lodge K. P., 174 Ala. 395, 56 South. 963; Benevolent & Protective Order of Elks v. Improved Order, etc., 205 N. Y. 459, 98 N. E. 756, L. R. A. 1915B, 1074, Ann. Cas. 1915F, 639; Int. Com. Y. W. C. A. v. Y. W. C. A. of America, 194 Ill. 194, 62 N. E. 551, 56 L. R. A. 888.

[2] Nor does the fact, as suggested by appellants, that plaintiffs never incorporated their society, alter the rule. A seceding body cannot by incorporating under the name of the parent body thus acquire a right to the use of the name; the fact of incorporation being immaterial. Supreme Lodge K. P. v. Improved Order K. P., 113 Mich. 133, 71 N. W. 470, 38 L. R. A. 658; Modern Woodmen v. Hatfield (D. C.) 199 Fed. 270.

[3] Nor do we see any merit in the remaining objection that the question is one exclusively under the jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts. It is admitted that there is no tribunal within the Christian Science denomination to which an appeal could be taken, the manual of the mother church providing for local self-government.

[4] And, finally, appellants insist that the evidence shows that respondents have abandoned the method for disseminating the teachings and promoting the tenets of the faith by their act in withdrawing their support from certain publications, and for that reason they are no longer entitled to the use of the claimed name. The findings of the court based upon sufficient evidence are otherwise, and concludes this question.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, P. J.; RICHARDS, J.

54 Cal. App. 392

COLE v. MERCHANTS' TRUST CO. et al.
(DE JERSEY, Intervener). (Civ. 3538.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Sept. 27, 1921. As Modified Oct. 24, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 22, 1921.)

1. Appeal and error ⇨1099(4) — Construction of contract on former appeal held the law of the case.

The holding on a former appeal that a provision of a contract giving defendant an exclusive right to sell plaintiff's lots on monthly installments for a period of 18 months, later extended for 6 months longer, that time should be of the essence, did not require the payment to plaintiff of the full sum which he was to receive within the 18 months, but merely the procuring of sufficient contracts within that time, was the law of the case on a subsequent appeal.

2. Brokers ⇨9—Contract for sale of lots making time of the essence held to apply to time of procurement of contracts for amount to which owner entitled.

Under a contract whereby plaintiff gave defendant the exclusive right for 18 months to sell plaintiff's lots for prices payable in monthly installments, and which provided that all proceeds in excess of $27,640 should go to defendant, and that time was of the essence of the agreement, and a declaration of trust extending the life of the contract for 6 months, the provision making time of the essence did not apply to the time within which plaintiff was to receive the $27,640, but to the time within which defendant should procure contracts for the sale of lots under which plaintiff's share would be sufficient to aggregate that sum.

3. Brokers ⇨37—Under contract for sale of building lots amount expended for improvements held not chargeable to selling agent.

Where a contract giving defendant the exclusive right for 18 months to sell plaintiff's lots required plaintiff to make certain improvements, and provided that he should receive a specified amount from the proceeds of sales, plus interest, and expenditures for improvements, but a declaration of trust conveying the unsold lots and contracts of sale to a trust company and extending the life of the contract for six months authorized the trustee to pay plaintiff any sums expended in further improvement of the property, if necessary in the opinion of defendant, an amount paid by the trust company by plaintiff's direction for further improvements without defendant's knowledge or consent was properly chargeable against plaintiff, especially where defendant had then procured a sufficient number of contracts for the sale of lots, so that plaintiff had no interest in their further improvement.

4. Brokers ⇨37—Amount paid to remove liens on property held properly chargeable against selling agent.

Where plaintiff gave defendant the exclusive right for 18 months to sell plaintiff's lots, and thereafter a declaration of trust was executed placing title to unsold lots and contracts of sale in the trustee, and providing that the trustee might pay any sums necessary to remove liens, an amount paid by the trust company to satisfy liens for street work, though paid after plaintiff's interest had terminated by reason of procurement of sufficient contracts to insure the amount to which he was entitled and without the knowledge of defendant or his assignee, held properly chargeable against defendant.

5. Appeal and error ⇨1073(7) — Error in charging amount against one party harmless where he had received an amount more than sufficient to offset it.

In an action to terminate a trust and procure a conveyance of lots which another party to the trust had been given an exclusive right to sell, the error in charging plaintiff with an amount properly chargeable to such other party was not prejudicial where there had been wrongfully paid to him by the trustee an amount to which he was not entitled and more than sufficient to offset that which was properly charged against him.

6. Trusts ⇨147(1)—Party to declaration of trust held authorized to assign interest.

Where plaintiff gave defendant an exclusive right for 18 months to sell building lots, and thereafter for the purpose of extending and carrying out the contract a declaration of trust was executed placing title to the unsold lots and contracts of sale in a trust company, where the declaration of trust contained no prohibition against the making of assignments, defendant might assign his interest in the trust, especially where he and the trustee had then fully performed their part of the contract.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Paul J. McCormick, Judge.

Action by Cornelius Cole against the Merchants' Trust Company and others. From a judgment in favor of the intervener, B. H. De Jersey, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 34 Cal. App. 82, 166 Pac. 871.

Haas & Dunnigan and J. J. Wilson, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Hunsaker, Britt & Cosgrove, Robert B. Murphey, Benjamin E. Page, and Arthur C. Hurt, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHAW, J. Plaintiff was the owner of 27.64 acres of land which he was desirous of selling for $27,640 net. With this object in view he on February 1, 1905, executed a written contract with F. W. Armitage wherein he agreed to subdivide the tract into lots as per map attached; grade all of said streets delineated on said map other than Marathon street, and grade and gravel the sidewalk on all streets graded; execute contracts of sale for all lots sold by Armitage, the price of which should not be less than $250 each and upon terms of sale which required the payment of not less than $25 cash and the balance of the purchase price at the rate of not less than $10 per month, which deferred payments should bear interest, commencing one year from date of sale, at 7 per cent. per annum; and execute deeds to the purchasers to whom certificates of title should be delivered as each lot was paid for. Armitage on his part agreed to advertise the lots for sale, maintain an office on or near the tract, use due diligence to complete the sale of said lots during the life of the agreement, which gave to the agent the exclusive right for 18 months for the performance of the contract, pay the cost of subdividing, recording map, and procuring certificates of title, sell no lot for less than $250, nor on more advantageous terms to buyers than $25 down and $10 per month, with interest at 7 per cent. on balance, commencing after one year from sale. It was agreed that the compensation of Armitage should be: First, 10 per cent. of the amount of each sale, payable out of the first moneys received thereon; second, all of the purchase money for each lot in excess of $250; and, third, all moneys received in the aggregate from sale of lots in excess of $27,640, added to the interest on deferred payments, and money expended by first party in improving said land (consisting of the grading of streets and grading and graveling of sidewalks)—in addition to which it was provided that, when Cole received the amounts specified to be paid to him, all of the lots remaining unsold, together with contracts upon which payments were not fully made, were to be conveyed and transferred to Armitage. It was further provided that "time is of the essence of this agreement, and upon the failure of the second party (Armitage) to keep the covenants on his part herein contained, this agreement shall, at the option of the first party (Cole), become null and void, and all right" of Armitage shall end.

Immediately upon the execution of the contract the parties entered upon the performance of their respective covenants, and prior to April 4, 1906, prior to which Cole graded the streets and sidewalks, Armitage sold 23 of the lots for $7,945.70, cash, for which Cole executed deeds to the purchasers, and likewise executed contracts to purchasers of 73 lots sold on time, and at prices largely in excess of $250 each. Of the money so received up to April 4, 1906, Cole had received $9,362.50 in cash, and held contracts upon which there was unpaid the sum of $25,650. At this time an account stated was had between the parties showing a balance to be paid to Cole of $19,948.30. Thereupon and although several months must elapse before the expiration of the terms of the exclusive agency so granted to Armitage within which he might continue selling lots and procuring contracts from which Cole should be paid the balance of the $27,640, being the agreed price of the land, together with other sums specified to be paid him under the terms of the contract, a declaration of trust was executed under which all of the unsold lots and the 73 contracts upon which balances were due from the purchasers of lots should be and were conveyed and transferred to the Merchants' Trust Company, which company was authorized to collect the moneys due upon said contracts as the same became due and payable, and, when entitled thereto, execute deeds to purchasers of lots, and execute contracts of sale to purchasers of unsold lots upon the unqualified order of Armitage, or upon the order of Cole, whose right to sell, however, was subject to a specified price being obtained largely in excess of $250, and pay and distribute the money collected and received by said trust company from the contracts assigned to it, as well as from sales and contracts of sale to be executed by it, in the following manner, to wit: To Armitage, any balance of 10 per cent. due him as commissions on assigned contracts, together with 10 per cent. of the purchase price of all lots sold by the trust company upon the order of Armitage or Cole; and next pay to Cole the sum of $19,948.30, and also pay any sums expended in the further improvement of the property, provided such improvement was necessary, in the opinion of Armitage, and also any sums necessary to remove any liens, including taxes, which payments, however, for liens, taxes, or further improvement of the property required by Armitage were not to be deemed any part of the $19,948.30 and interest collected on contracts due to Cole. It was further provided that—

"This declaration of trust is intended to carry out the contract made February 1, 1905, between C. Cole of the one part and * * * F. W. Armitage, * * * of the other part, as modified by extending the life of said contract to February 1, 1907, and by directing the payment to C. Cole of all money arising out of the sale of lots above 10 per cent. until he shall be fully paid."

It thus appears that the declaration of trust not only extended for a period of six months the time within Armitage might sell the lots, but modified the agreement in that no charge should be made against Armitage for further improvements of the property (that is, other than improvements theretofore made pursuant to the terms of the agreement in regard to grading streets and sidewalks), unless the same were, in his opinion, necessary, and for the provision in the agreement under which Armitage, in addition to his 10 per cent. commission, was given the right to all of the money received on the sale of a lot in excess of $250, there was substituted the provision that, other than the 10 per cent. commission to be paid to Armitage, all of the money derived from the sales of lots, less the 10 per cent. commission, should by the trustee be applied in liquidation of the amounts due to Cole. During the period between April 4, 1906, and February 1, 1907, the trust company sold 10 lots upon contracts for the aggregate sum of $5,525, which, together with the aggregate amount due upon the 73 contracts so transferred to the trust company, and after deducting the 10 per cent. due Armitage, left a sum largely in excess of that to which Cole was entitled, and which, after being paid, also left in the hands of the trustee certain unsold lots.

On February 6, 1913, and after all of the lots save and except 32 of those so conveyed to the trust company had been disposed of, and the moneys collected upon the contracts, and from the proceeds of which plaintiff, Cole, had been paid the full balance of the $27,640, together with interest and costs of improvements, all as called for by the agreement made with Armitage on February 1, 1905, he brought this action against the Merchants' Trust Company to terminate the trust and procure a reconveyance of the 32 lots constituting the trust property. In its answer the trust company admitted the existence of the trust, but denied that plaintiff was the sole beneficiary thereunder, alleging that it held the property in trust, for plaintiff and F. W. Armitage. As assignee of Armitage, Basil H. De Jersey filed a complaint in intervention, setting forth the facts in relation to the trust and asking for an accounting and conveyance to him of the unsold lots. Plaintiff answered the complaint in intervention, as likewise did Armitage; the latter admitting the truth of all the allegations contained in such complaint. A trial was had upon the issues raised by plaintiff's answer to the complaint in intervention, as a result of which the court denied any relief to the intervener and rendered a decree terminating the trust and ordering the trust company to convey the trust property to plaintiff. From this decree De Jersey, as intervener, and the Merchants' Trust Company appealed, and the judgment so rendered was reversed by this court in an opinion reported in 34 Cal. App. 82, 166 Pac. 871. Thereupon a retrial of the case was had upon the same pleadings, with the result that a judgment was rendered terminating the trust and ordering a conveyance of the property remaining in the hands of the trustee to B. H. De Jersey, assignee of F. W. Armitage. From this judgment plaintiff has appealed.

[1, 2] On the former appeal, as in this, the chief contention of plaintiff was that the provision in the agreement dated February 1, 1905, making time the essence thereof, was intended to and did require the payment to plaintiff of the full sum of $27,640 within the 18 months as extended for a period of six months by the declaration of trust. To quote counsel for appellant:

"The bald proposition is: Did the parties contemplate the payment to Cornelius Cole of $27,640, together with costs of improvements and interest paid in on deferred payments, within 18 months from the 1st day of February, 1905, and the additional 6 months' extension granted under the declaration of trust, making the full time limit 24 months, or was it the intention of the parties that all that the declaration of trust required was that the selling agent, Armitage, procure contracts of purchase for lots in the tract in question, sufficient in number or amount, regardless of the time within which the payments on said contracts should be completed, sufficient to pay Cole $19,948.30, provided said contracts be obtained within the 24 months limit as found by the court?"

This was the identical question involved on the former appeal, and the adverse decision made in construing the instruments must be deemed the law of the case on this appeal. We may add that, in view of the fact that under the contract payment to Cole was to be made out of the proceeds arising from the sales of lots at not less than $250 per lot, upon terms of $25 cash and $10 per month, it is apparent that by the agreement the parties contemplated, not the full payment to Cole of the amount due him within such specified time, but that Armitage, under his exclusive agency, should, within the time so fixed and as extended by the declaration of trust, negotiate a sufficient number of contracts from which, as paid, a sufficient sum over and above commissions would be derived to liquidate the amount due to Cole as provided under the terms of the contracts. Any question as to this being the proper interpretation of the agreement disappears when the contract is construed with the declaration of trust under which the trustee was authorized to execute contracts for the continued sale of property upon the terms mentioned in the agreement of February 1, 1905, and which necessarily carried the time of full payment years beyond February 1, 1907, when the term of the agency expired. The findings upon this point are based upon the evidence taken in the first trial, and also new and additional evidence touching the intention of the parties and circumstances under which the agreements were made. The character of the new evidence is conflicting, and it is not of a nature which would warrant any interpretation of the instruments other than that which was accorded them upon the hearing of the former appeal, and in accordance with which decision a retrial was had. We again hold that the provision of the contract making time of the essence thereof applies, not to the time within which Cole was to receive the $27,640, but to the time within which Armitage should procure contracts for the sale of lots wherein Cole's share thereof would, when collected in accordance with the terms of the contract of sale as modified by the trust, be sufficient in the aggregate to secure to him payment of the agreed purchase price.

[3] Under the declaration of trust, as we have seen, Cole's interest in these contracts covered all of the purchase price over and above 10 per cent. of the sales price specified therein. While it appears that at the expiration of the 6 months specified in the declaration of trust sales of property had been made for cash and upon contract, the proceeds of which in the aggregate were largely in excess of the sum due Cole under the terms of the contract and declaration of trust, nevertheless the trust could not be terminated until Cole, as one of the beneficiaries therein, had received the full amount due to him. It is conceded that this sum consisted of $22,461.68 made up of the sum of $19,948.30 specified in the trust agreement, together with $1,776.91, covering all interest paid in upon lot contracts, and $736.47 advanced by Cole in 1911. He was paid $20,355.82, leaving a balance of $2,105.86. It appears, however, that in 1909, long after February 1, 1907, to which the time for performance of the agreement was extended, Cole entered into a contract for the further improvement of the streets, under which contract the trust company, upon his order and direction, paid for such work the sum of $4,263.57. The court found that this sum was not an expenditure provided for under the contract of date February 1, 1905, nor under the trust agreement dated April 4, 1906, and was made without the knowledge, approval, or consent of Armitage, and was properly chargeable against the plaintiff, Cornelius Cole. Appellant attacks this finding, claiming that it is contrary to the evidence. We cannot assent to his contention. When the contract of date February 1, 1905, was entered into it provided that Cole should grade certain streets and grade and gravel the sidewalks thereon. It appears that this work was promptly done under a contract with one Crandall. Under the trust agreement Cole had no authority to further improve the streets at the expense of Armitage, and particularly so since at the time he entered into the contract Armitage had procured a sufficient number of contracts for sale of lots from which Cole, as the money was paid thereon, would be fully paid, and therefore he had no interest in the further improvement of the lots. Moreover, in the trust agreement it was provided that the trustee should not use any sum of money in its possession "to further improve the property" so conveyed to it unless Armitage deemed such improvement necessary. It is therefore clear that under our interpretation of the contracts, and that heretofore made by this court on the former appeal, the money, to wit, the sum of $4,263.57, so paid out at the request of Cole for the improvement of the streets, should, as found by the trial court, be charged to him as a part of the amount due to him as beneficiary in said trust.

[4] The court further found:

"That the sum of $2,562.51, paid out by the Merchants' Trust Company in 1909 with the knowledge and consent of the plaintiff, Cornelius Cole, to satisfy liens arising under the Vrooman Act, for public street work done in said tract, was made after all interests of the plaintiff in said tract had terminated, and was made without the knowledge of the defendant Armitage or of the intervener, and was not an expenditure properly chargeable against the trust fund held by the defendant Merchants' Trust Company."

This finding, in our opinion, is not supported by the evidence. The declaration of trust provided that—

"Should it be necessary to remove any liens, * * * now existing, or hereafter to exist on the said property, * * * the trustee shall use any funds in its possession for this purpose, provided, however, that money so used shall not be deemed a payment to the said Cole."

It therefore appears that it was the duty of the trust company, independently of Cole or any request therefor made by him, to apply the sum of $2,562.51 of the trust funds in satisfaction of the liens created by assessments made upon the lots for street improvement due to action had and taken under the Vrooman Act (St. 1885, p. 147, as amended). In the accounting had the trial court therefore erred in finding that this sum should be chargeable to plaintiff Cole.

[5] The error, however, was not prejudicial to plaintiff for the reason that, as properly found by the trial court, he had received the sum of $4,263.57, wrongfully paid to him by the trustee and to which he was not entitled, which sum, conceding that he was erroneously charged with the $2,562.51, was much more than sufficient to offset that to which he was entitled. Indeed, it appears that he was overpaid by the difference between the two sums stated.

[6] We attach no importance to appellant's contention that Armitage was prohibited by the agreement of February 1, 1905, from assigning his interest in the contract. Conceding that he did, prior to the commencement of the action, assign to De Jersey all his right, title, and interest as a beneficiary under the declaration of trust, it was at a time when Armitage and the trustee had fully performed their part of the contract. Moreover, there is nothing in the declaration of trust prohibiting the making of such assignment. Cole had parted with the legal title to the property and his rights and those of Armitage were only such as existed under the trust; hence either might assign his interest therein. Tyler v. Granger, 48 Cal. 259.

The judgment as rendered is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

54 Cal. App. 681

HOOKE v. GREAT WESTERN LUMBER CO.
(Civ. 3965.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Oct. 27, 1921. Rehearing Denied Nov. 23, 1921.)

1. Evidence $\S$ 445(1), 466—Written contract may be modified or discharged by oral agreement.

A written contract, as well as one not in writing, may be discharged, canceled, or modified by a subsequent oral agreement, and the parol evidence rule does not exclude oral evidence thereof.

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 995—Weight of evidence not considered.

An argument on the weight of the evidence is not properly addressed to the appellate court.

3. Contracts $\S$ 255—May be canceled by mutual agreement when supported by consideration.

Under Civ. Code, $\S$ 1541, and under general principles of law it is necessary that there be a consideration for an oral rescission of a written contract, but there is a sufficient consideration where there is a mutual oral agreement to cancel a contract; each releasing the other from his obligations thereunder.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Caba-niss, Judge.

Action by George H. Hooke against the Great Western Lumber Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Fabius M. Clarke and William H. Bryan, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Frank E. Hinckley, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action to recover damages for breach of an agreement to deliver spruce cannery shook. With reference to this agreement the court found:

"That plaintiff and defendant entered into a mutual agreement in writing in words and figures as follows:

"San Francisco, Cal., April 11, 1917. Mr. G. H. Hooke, San Francisco, Cal.—Dear Sir: This will confirm our acceptance of an order for approximately 160,000 6/1 gallon spruce cannery shook at $11.75 per 100 F. O. B. Watsonville. It is further understood and agreed that we will furnish as many 12/1 gallon standard cases as we can get from our normal run of box lumber at 19c F. O. B. Watsonville. These prices are subject to a 2% cash discount if paid within 10 days after arrival or 30 days net.

"Yours truly, Great Western Lumber Co.,

"By G. P. Smith.

"Approved: Geo. H. Hooke."

The trial court further found:

"That the reasonable time for delivery of said spruce cannery shook was within the season for canning of summer fruit in the year 1917 at said Watsonville, which season was approximately from the 16th day of May to the 15th day of October in said year."

It was also found that only 13,000 of said shook were delivered by the defendant, and that defendant refused to deliver to the plaintiff, after demands therefor, the balance of said shook called for by the said agreement.

[1, 2] One of the defenses pleaded by the defendant in its answer was that the contract between the parties had been, by mutual agreement between plaintiff and defendant, duly canceled, and the delivery of said 147,000 shook was waived by plaintiff. The defendant offered to prove by oral testimony that performance of the contract had been waived by the plaintiff, and that the contract had been, by mutual agreement, abandoned. The court refused to hear evidence upon these questions upon the ground that, the contract being in writing, a waiver or abandonment thereof could only be shown by a writing. It is a general rule that a written contract, as well as one not in writing, may be discharged or modified by a subsequent oral agreement, and that the parol evidence rule does not exclude oral evidence thereof. Elliott on Contracts, $\S$ 1861; 13 Corp. Juris. 601; 25 R. C. L. 712; Iroquois Furnace Co. v. Bignall Hardware Co., 201 Ill. 297, 66 N. E. 237; Beach v. Covillard, 4 Cal. 315; Gardiner v. McDonogh, 147 Cal. 313, 322, 81 Pac. 964; Guiderly v. Green, 95 Cal. 630, 634, 30 Pac. 786; Arsenio v. Smith, 194 Pac. 756. The trial court, after refusing all testimony offered by the defendant upon this subject, found that the allegations of the answer regarding waiver and abandonment were not true. Respondent meets this objection by stating that the testimony offered by the appellant and rejected by the court upon this point was not such as in itself to show a waiver or abandonment. In the first place, this is an argument upon the weight of the evidence, and is not properly addressed to this court, and, furthermore, under the ruling of the court, we have not before us the evidence which the defendant may have wished to offer. The ruling of the court was a broad one, to the effect that no mutual oral agreement between the parties to abandon the contract would be permitted because such evidence "would be contrary to the rule that you cannot modify or prove a termination by agreement between the parties thereto of any sort or kind of written agreement except the agreement whereby you seek to prove that fact be itself in written form." Such a ruling is contrary to the authorities heretofore cited, and is clearly erroneous. The offer made by counsel was to show that after certain conversations between the plaintiff and the representative of the defendant plaintiff stated that he had purchased fiber board containers, and that the defendant company need not consider itself under any further obligation to furnish shook to him, and that thereupon by mutual oral agreement between the parties the performance was waived and the contract orally canceled.

(202 P.)

[3] While respondent is correct in his position that under section 1541, Civil Code, as well as under the general principles of law applicable to contracts, it is necessary that there be a consideration for the oral rescission of the contract, nevertheless, the offer of the defendant at the trial covered this element. He offered to prove a mutual oral agreement to cancel the contract. The release of the plaintiff from his obligation to accept and pay for the shook would have been a sufficient consideration for his release of the defendant from its obligation to deliver the shook. The broad ruling of the court excluded all evidence not in writing, and we are uninformed as to what evidence the defendant might have produced to show a mutual oral agreement for abandonment of the contract. As the allegations of the answer upon this question would have been a complete defense to this action if they had been proven, and as the defendant was prevented from introducing proof thereof by the ruling of the court, the judgment must be reversed upon this ground. It is so ordered.

We concur: NOURSE, J.; STURTEVANT, J.

187 Cal. 454

In re ROSS' ESTATE. (S. F. 9573.)

{Supreme Court of California. Dec. 2, 1921.
Rehearing Denied Dec. 29, 1921.}

1. Descent and distribution ⚡34—"Next of kin" entitled to estate where no issue, spouse, parent, or brother or sister survived.

A deceased widow's separate estate, where she left no issue, father, mother, brother or sister, was distributed to the children of her deceased sister, as "next of kin" under Civ. Code, § 1386, subd. 5, to the exclusion of grandchildren of another deceased sister, as subdivision 3, giving right of representation, does not apply unless a brother or sister of decedent survives.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Next of Kin.]

2. Husband and wife ⚡274(1)—Statute controls succession of community property of widow, although husband willed her the property.

Civ. Code, § 1386, subd. 8, controls the succession to property left by the widow, dying intestate, which was community property of herself and her husband at the time of his death, though he devised all or any part thereof to her by will.

3. Husband and wife ⚡274(1)—Descent of community property on death of surviving wife not affected by her not being survived by parent or brother or sister.

Where a widow dies leaving community property, the interests of the heirs of the widow and the heirs of her deceased husband each to one-half, under Civ. Code, § 1386, subd. 8, vest independently of each other, and the heirs of the deceased husband are entitled to one half irrespective of whether the other half vests in a father, mother, brother, or sister of the widow.

4. Husband and wife ⚡274(1)—Not necessary for brother or sister of widow leaving community property to survive for descendants of deceased brother or sister to inherit.

Under Civ. Code, § 1386, subd. 8, providing that one-half of community property of deceased widow shall descend, if no issue or parent survive her, "in equal shares to the brothers and sisters of such decedent and to the descendants of any deceased brother or sister by right of representation," there need be no brothers or sisters of decedent surviving in order that descendants of deceased brothers and sisters may inherit.

5. Executors and administrators ⚡314(7)—Petition for partial distribution showing claim not allowed held not demurrable.

A petition for partial distribution, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1663, as added by St. 1917, p. 575, was not demurrable in that it showed an outstanding claim not allowed, where it appeared that sufficient property had been set aside to cover it; for the section requires only allowed claims to be paid before petitioning, and does not require, as a condition precedent, that all claims shall have been allowed or disallowed, but only that the court satisfy itself that no injury can result to the estate by reason of the distribution.

6. Executors and administrators ⚡314(7)—Petition for partial distribution not demurrable as seeking determination of heirship.

Petition under Code Civ. Proc. § 1663, as added by St. 1917, p. 575, for partial distribution, was not demurrable because, although seeking determination of heirship, it did not conform to the requirements of section 1664, as to proceeding to determine heirship; determination of heirship being but incidental to distribution.

7. Executors and administrators ⚡314(7)—Petition for partial distribution not demurrable because showing inheritance tax not paid.

Petition for partial distribution under Code Civ. Proc. § 1663, as added by St. 1917, p. 575, which stated it was impossible to pay all the inheritance taxes until it was determined who were the heirs, was not demurrable because affirmatively showing that the inheritance tax had not been paid, it being sufficient, to satisfy the requirement of section 1669 that "before any decree of distribution of an estate be made" the court must be satisfied that all taxes, including inheritance tax, have been fully paid, that the order granting the petition direct that "out of the properties of the estate so distributed there shall be deducted and paid the inheritance taxes due * * * from each of the distributees."

8. Witnesses ⚡37(1) — Any person with knowledge may testify as to pedigree.

Proof of pedigree is not limited by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1852, 1870, subds. 4, 11, to acts or declarations of members of decedent's family or acts or declarations of decedent himself; but any person having knowledge of the facts may testify concerning matters of pedigree.

9. Executors and administrators ⚡314(11)—Special finding controls general finding.

Where there was a finding that all the allegations of the petition were true, and one of the allegations so found to be true was that the heirs of decedent included the descendants of B. and in the specific findings that certain named persons were heirs and in the conclusions of law the descendants of B. were excluded, there was no contradiction in the findings, as the special finding controlled the general finding.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thomas F. Graham, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Catherine Ross, deceased. From an order granting administrator's petition for partial distribution, certain relatives of decedent appeal. Affirmed as modified.

George D. Collins, Jr., of San Francisco, for appellants.

Thomas G. Crothers, Wm. M. Abbott, Wm. M. Cannon, Kingsley Cannon, and I. M. Golden, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

LAWLOR, J. This is an appeal by certain relatives of Catherine Ross, deceased, from an order granting a petition by the administrator for a partial distribution of the estate of the said Catherine Ross.

Catherine Ross died intestate March 22, 1916, leaving an estate amounting to upwards of $50,000. At her death she left neither issue nor surviving father, mother, brother, or sister. She did leave surviving her six nephews and nieces, the children of a deceased sister, Elizabeth H. Donohue, and thirteen grandnephews, grandnieces, great-grandnephews, and great-grandnieces, descendants of another deceased sister, Bridget H. Quinn. At the time of her death there were living also two sisters of John Ross, her predeceased husband, and certain descendants of a deceased brother and three deceased sisters of the said John Ross.

The estate of Catherine Ross consisted partly of her separate property and partly of property alleged to have been community property of herself and her deceased husband. The community property came to her through a decree of distribution of the estate of John Ross. James R. Carrick, the petitioner and one of the respondents herein, and a relative of John Ross, and Katherine H. Nicholson, one of the appellants and a relative of Catherine Ross, were appointed and qualified as administrator and administratrix, respectively, of the estate of Catherine Ross.

The petition for partial distribution was filed October 23, 1919, by James R. Carrick, as administrator of the estate. It related that notice to creditors had been duly given; that the time within which claims against the estate might be presented had passed; that all claims which had been presented had been paid save one for $2,442.40, which had been rejected, and for the establishment of which an action was at that time being prosecuted; that an inventory of the estate had been filed; and that the estate was not in a condition to be finally distributed. Then followed a recital of the items of the estate and a list of the surviving relatives of John and Catherine Ross. It further stated:

"That it has not been determined what inheritance tax is due to the state of California out of said estate, and a determination of that matter cannot be made until this court determines what part of the properties of said estate was the separate properties of said Catherine Ross, deceased, and what part of said properties was the community property of said deceased and her predeceased spouse, John Ross."

Petitioner's prayer was that the court ascertain and determine the rights of all persons interested in or claiming a portion of the estate, and the proportion to which each was entitled, and that petitioner have such other relief as might be proper. A demurrer was interposed on behalf of Katherine H. Nicholson on the ground that the petition did not state facts sufficient to entitle James R. Carrick to a partial distribution of the estate, which was overruled. Thereupon she filed an answer to the petition, wherein she alleged that all the property was the separate property of Catherine Ross; that Catherine Ross died testate, and that certain named persons were her only beneficiaries; that the only heirs of Catherine Ross were certain named persons who were the descendants of her two predeceased sisters. The answer further denied all the allegations of the petition.

The court found that all the allegations of the petition were true, and those of the answer were untrue; that certain designated property in the estate came to Catherine Ross by decree of distribution from the estate of John Ross, which property was community property; that certain other designated property was her separate property; and that certain named persons were the relatives of John Ross and Catherine Ross. As conclusions of law the court found:

"That all of the community property of said deceased * * * was succeeded to at the death of said Catherine Ross, deceased, and should be distributed, on final or partial distribution, in the following manner: One-half thereof to the said sisters of the said John Ross, deceased, and to the said descendants of the said deceased brother and sisters of said John Ross, deceased, by right of representation, the heirs, administrators or assigns, and one-half thereof to the said next of kin of said Catherine Ross, deceased, to wit, to the said children of said Elizabeth H. Donohue, deceased, their heirs, administrators, or assigns."

It was further found as a conclusion of law that the separate property should be distributed to the heirs of Catherine Ross, namely, to the children of Elizabeth H. Donohue.

A portion of the estate amounting to $28,000 was ordered distributed in accordance with the findings of the court. From this order one grandnephew and four grandnieces of Catherine Ross take this appeal. They are grandchildren of Bridget H. Quinn, one of the deceased sisters of Catherine Ross, whose descendants by the terms of the order of distribution are not entitled to share in the estate.

[1] 1. In considering the distribution of the estate we shall first dispose of the question of the separate property. In this connection respondents assert:

That "these nieces and nephews are 'the next of kin' of Catherine Ross, and the facts of this case bring it precisely within the provisions of subdivision 5 of section 1386 [of the Civil Code], which provides that, 'If the decedent leaves neither issue, husband, wife, father, mother, brother, nor sister, the estate must go to the next of kin in equal degree;" that "It is well established that under the circumstances of this case, subdivision 3 has no application because no brother or sister of deceased survived her."

Subdivision 3 of section 1386 is as follows:

"If there is neither issue, husband, wife, father, nor mother then in equal shares to the brothers and sisters of decedent and to the children or grandchildren of any deceased brother or sister, by right of representation."

Respondents further state:

"If there be no brother or sister of deceased living at the time of death, then the succession is not governed by subdivision 3, but is controlled by subdivision 5, which specifically provides for that precise case."

Appellants contend that—

"Subdivisions 2, 3, and 4, so far as they relate to inheritance by children and grandchildren of a deceased brother or sister, were all adopted at the same time and as amendments to the pre-existing statute, for the sole purpose of overturning the doctrine of the Estate of Ingram, 78 Cal. 586, 21 Pac. 435, 12 Am. St. Rep. 80, on which doctrine rests entirely the ruling in the Estate of Nigro, 172 Cal. 474, 156 Pac. 1019, relied upon by respondents to sustain the decree we have appealed from."

* * * Of course, if the deceased never had a brother or sister, there could be no child or grandchild of a deceased brother or sister."

* * * Subdivision 5 makes no provision whatever for vesting the inheritance in a brother or sister of the decedent, and hence the absence therein of any reference to the children or grandchildren of a deceased brother or sister. The entire subject of inheritance by the brothers and sisters and by the children or grandchildren of a deceased brother or sister is manifestly left by subdivision 5 to subdivisions 2 and 3 of section 1386."

Appellants further assert:

"By statutory enactment in 1905, and reaffirmed in 1907, the Legislature amended sections 2, 3, and 4 of section 1386 of the Civil Code by granting the right of inheritance to children and grandchildren of a deceased brother or sister, in equal shares and by right of representation, irrespective of whether the decedent left surviving a brother or sister. The purpose of this statutory amendment was to abolish the interpretation of the law as given by the Supreme Court in Estate of Ingram, 78 Cal. 586, 21 Pac. 435, 12 Am. St. Rep. 80. This fact is pointed out by the court in Estate of Jepson, 174 Cal. 684, 164 Pac. 1."

Respondents further claim that—

"The Estate of Jepson is a clear holding to the effect that, where particular conditions or facts are provided for by a particular subdivision or clause, that particular subdivision or clause must govern. The particular facts existing in the case at bar are specifically provided for by subdivision 5. The Estate of Jepson is clearly inapplicable and the Nigro Case is undoubtedly apposite and controlling."

The position of appellants is untenable. Estate of Jepson, supra, relied on by them, was decided on the authority of subdivision 2, there having been in that case a spouse and several children of predeceased brothers and sisters who survived the decedent. That case held that the amendments to subdivision 2 adopted in 1905 altered the meaning of that subdivision, and overruled Estate of Ingram, 78 Cal. 586, 21 Pac. 435, 12 Am. St. Rep. 80, Estate of Carmody, 88 Cal. 616, 26 Pac. 373, and Estate of Fabricio Nigro, 149 Cal. 702, 87 Pac. 384. These cases had held that, under subdivision 2, the children of deceased brothers and sisters could not inherit from the decedent unless the latter left surviving a brother or sister. Estate of Jepson, supra, held that under subdivision 2, as it was amended, the survival of a brother or sister was not necessary in order that children of a deceased brother or sister should inherit.

In Estate of Ellen Nigro, supra, the decedent left neither husband, father, mother, brother, nor sister. The only relatives claiming as heirs were the children and grandchildren of a deceased brother and two deceased sisters. It was claimed the case fell within the provisions of subdivision 3 of section 1386. The court said:

"The rights of the parties here are governed by subdivision 5 of said section. That subdivision is as follows: '5. If the decedent leaves neither issue, husband, wife, father, mother, brother, nor sister, the estate must go to the next of kin, in equal degree, excepting that, when there are two or more collateral kindred, in equal degree, but claiming through different ancestors, those who claim through the nearest ancestor must be preferred to those claiming through an ancestor more remote.'"

"This subdivision applies, as its language shows, to cases where the decedent leaves neither issue, husband, wife, father, mother, brother, nor sister surviving. This is the condition here presented. * * * Under its terms, therefore, the only persons in equal degree of kindred to Ellen Nigro who could inherit from her were the surviving children of the deceased brother and sisters. The grandchildren of such deceased brother and sisters were not in equal degree with such surviving children."

This case was not overruled by Estate of Jepson, supra, as appellants claim, for there was no contention in Estate of Jepson, supra, that the facts were the same as in Estate of Ellen Nigro, supra, and in Estate of Jepson, supra, it was declared:

"Estate of Nigro, 172 Cal. 474, 156 Pac. 1019, contains nothing in opposition to what has been here said. In the Estate of Nigro this court simply laid down the unimpeachable proposition that children and grandchildren of a deceased brother or sister were not grouped in the law as forming together one class but as forming two distinct classes, so that grandchildren were entitled to the inheritance only in the event that there were no living children."

In the case at bar, as pointed out, the deceased left neither husband, father, mother, brother, nor sister, and did leave children and grandchildren of deceased sisters. It is therefore similar to Estate of Ellen Nigro, supra, and is such a case as is contemplated by subdivision 5.

Appellants also claim that, even if the case at bar does fall within the provisions of subdivision 5, still the amendments to subdivisions 2 and 4 should be read into subdivision 5, and the children and grandchildren of the deceased sisters be allowed to inherit the property. That this is not the case is shown by the statement in Estate of Ellen Nigro, supra, that—

"These amendments obviously have no bearing whatever on the rule of interpretation here involved. They do not change the effect of the section [1386] as applied to the facts of this case."

There is no question but that the distributees of the separate property named in the order of distribution are the next of kin of Catherine Ross, they being the children of a deceased sister. As such they are entitled to the property by virtue of subdivision 5 of section 1386. It follows that the order of distribution of the separate property conformed to the statutory provision.

[2] 2. Touching the distribution of the community property, appellants 'make the contention that—

"Subdivision 8 of section 1386 of the Civil Code has no application, for in the first place that provision is a constituent part of the statute of succession, and is, of course, confined to estate not disposed of by will; and as all the property of the community estate that Mrs. Ross, the decedent, received, other than as surviving wife and pursuant to section 1402 of the Civil Code, came to her under the will of her predeceased husband, it is not within the statute of succession, to wit, section 1386 of the Civil Code."

Respondents, on the other hand, maintain that—

"It is utterly immaterial whether one-half of the community property vested in Catherine Ross by operation of law or under the terms of the decree in the husband's estate. Under the express language of section 1386 of the Civil Code, subd. 8, the test is: 'What is common property of such decedent and his or her deceased spouse while such spouse was living?'"

In Estate of Davidson, 21 Cal. App. 118, 122, 131 Pac. 67, 69, it was said:

"Subdivision 8 of section 1386 of the Civil Code controls the succession to property left by the widow, dying intestate, which was community property of herself and her husband at the time of his death, though he devised all or any part thereof to her by will."

All the community property in the case at bar is therefore to be distributed in accordance with the provisions of subdivision 8 of section 1386. That section reads:

"If the deceased is a widow, or widower, and leaves no issue, and the estate, or any portion thereof, was common property of such decedent and his or her deceased spouse, while such spouse was living, such property goes in equal shares to the children of such deceased spouse and to the descendants of such children by right of representation, and if none, then one-half of such common property goes to the father and mother of such decedent in equal shares, or to the survivor of them if either be dead, or if both be dead, then in equal shares to the brothers and sisters of such decedent and to the descendants of any deceased brother or sister by right of representation, and the other half goes to the father and mother of such deceased spouse in equal shares, or to the survivor of them if either be dead, or if both be dead, then in equal shares to the brothers and sisters of such deceased spouse and to the descendants of any deceased brother or sister by right of representation."

[3] Appellants argue that subdivision 8 of section 1386 makes the vesting of any interest in the heirs of John Ross dependent on the vesting of a one-half interest in a surviving father or mother, or, if none, in a surviving brother or sister of Mrs. Ross, the decedent. In support of this position is cited Estate of Ingram, supra, but that case is not in point, for the property there was separate property and the order of descent was regulated by subdivision 2. Besides, in Estate of Jepson, supra, upon which appellants rely, Estate of Ingram, as has been shown, was declared to have been overruled by the amendment of 1905. In Estate of Brady, 171 Cal. 1, 151 Pac. 275, the wife had died before the husband, leaving brothers and sisters and descendants of deceased brothers and sisters. The husband died later leaving no kin. One-half of the community property was declared escheated to the state. The state appealed from the decree of distribution, contending that the whole estate should have escheated. While the principal question to be decided in that case was whether the estate was community property, it was held that the relatives of the predeceased wife were entitled to inherit one-half of the community property, although the deceased husband left no kin to inherit his half. In Estate of Hill, 179 Cal. 683, 178 Pac. 710, the husband, Stephen Hill, predeceased his wife, Isabella Hill, and left surviving him a sister, two brothers, and the descendants of a deceased sister and two deceased brothers. Isabella Hill, upon her death, left only descendants of deceased brothers and sisters. Although the principal question in that case was the constitutionality of subdivision 8 of section 1386, the court affirmed a decree distributing one-half of the property among the relatives of the wife and one-half among those of the husband, although the wife, at her death, left neither father, mother, brothers, nor sisters. See, also, Estate of Wenks, 171 Cal. 607, 154 Pac. 24. It appears from these cases that the interests of the heirs of the two deceased spouses vest independently of each other, and that the heirs of John Ross are entitled to the one half without regard to whether the other half vests in a father, mother, brothers, or sisters of Catherine Ross. The heirs of John Ross were therefore properly included in the order of distribution as entitled to one-half of the community property.

[4] Appellants insist they are entitled to share that portion of the community property which was distributed to the heirs of Catherine Ross. Respondents assert:

"It will be noted that the language just quoted [subdivision 8] is similar to the language of subdivision 3 of section 1386, which was construed in the Estate of Nigro, 172 Cal. 474, 156 Pac. 1019, wherein it was directly held that, under the said language of section 3, neither the children nor the grandchildren of a deceased brother or sister are entitled to inherit, unless a brother or sister of the deceased be living."

Appellants state that—

"There is no merit in the point urged by respondents that, as Mrs. Ross left no surviving brother or sister, appellants, as grandchildren, have no right to inherit. This is an attempt on the part of respondents to apply to subdivision 8 the doctrine of the cases of Ingram and Nigro, whereas it has been explicitly held by the Supreme Court that the doctrine never had any relevancy to a case coming within subdivision 8."

Estate of McCauley, 138 Cal. 546, 71 Pac. 458, was a case involving the distribution of community property left by a surviving wife. Upon the death of the wife, two nieces of the predeceased husband claimed one-half of the community property left by the wife by virtue of subdivision 9, now subdivision 8, of section 1386. The court said:

"Respondents say that these nieces do not inherit under subdivision 9 of section 1386 of the Civil Code, because no brothers or sisters of the deceased spouse of McCauley were living at the time of Mrs. McCauley's death. This view of the statute is based on an alleged application of the rule laid down in Re Ingram, 78 Cal. 586, and in Re Carmody, 88 Cal. 616, construing subdivisions 2 and 5 of section 1386. These cases throw no light on subdivision 9. This subdivision plainly provides that in a certain contingency the community property must go to 'the brothers and sisters of such deceased spouse, in equal shares, and to the lawful issue of any deceased brother or sister, by right of representation.'"

For the purposes of the case at bar subdivision 8 of section 1386 is now worded the same as subdivision 9 was at the time Estate of McCauley, supra, was decided. Subdivision 8 provides that the property descends to "the descendants of any deceased brother or sister," whereas at the time of the decision in Estate of McCauley, supra, subdivision 9 provided that the property should go to "the lawful issue of any deceased brother or sister." It follows that under this subdivision there need be no brother or sister surviving in order that the descendants of deceased brothers and sisters may inherit under subdivision 8. Therefore the descendants of both Elizabeth Donohue and Bridget H. Quinn are entitled to inherit one-half of the community property by right of representation.

Finally, respondents argue that subdivision 5 is to govern the descent of the community property as well as that of the separate property. They claim that "subdivision 8 is a limitation upon the operation of the previous subdivisions of section 1386. It governs the succession of that particular part of the estate of the decedent which was the community property of himself and the predeceased spouse and controls in so far, and only in so far, as it expressly goes. In other words, it governs the succession only to the extent that its provisions specify. Putting it otherwise, it may be said that we must look to the other provisions of the statute of succession for those instances which subdivision 8 does not cover or for which it does not provide." However, inasmuch as subdivision 8 does control this case, as already appears, subdivision 5 is inapplicable. Furthermore, even if subdivision 8 did not provide a mode of descent for the case at bar, subdivision 9, which provides for escheat in cases of community property not covered by subdivision 8, would apply.

[5, 6] 3. Appellants' next contention is that the court erred in overruling the demurrer to the petition, on the grounds that under sections 1658, 1660, and 1661 of the Code of Civil Procedure an administrator cannot petition for partial distribution of an estate, and that the petition does not comply with section 1664 of the Code of Civil Procedure relative to the determination of heirship. They assert that the outstanding claim for $2,442.40 prevents the case from falling under section 1663 of the Code of Civil Procedure, added by St. 1917, p. 575, relative to the filing of a petition for partial distribution by an administrator, for the reason that it cannot be said whether the claim is an allowed claim or not until the litigation concerning it is determined. Appellants also insist that—

"The petition is also fatally defective in that it affirmatively shows that the inheritance tax has not been paid. The statute expressly provides that, 'before any decree of distribution of an estate is made, the court must be satisfied, by the oath of the executor or administrator, or otherwise, that all state, county and municipal taxes, legally levied upon property of the estate, and any inheritance tax which is due and payable have been fully paid.' Code Civ. Proc. sec. 1669."

This petition was presented in accordance with the terms of section 1663 of the Code of Civil Procedure, added in 1917 (St. 1917, p. 575). That section provides that—

"Where the time for filing or presenting claims has expired, and all claims that have been allowed have been paid, or are secured by a mortgage upon real estate sufficient to pay them, and the estate is not in a condition to be finally closed and distributed, the executor or administrator, or coexecutor or coadministrator, may present his petition to the court for ratable payment of the legacies, or ratable distribution of the estate to all the heirs, legatees, devisees, or their assignees, grantees or successors in interest."

The petition in this case, the allegations of which were found to be true clearly shows that a situation exists here which is within the contemplation of this statute. The fact that it has not been determined whether the claim for $2,442.40 is or is not to be allowed is immaterial, for the Code section refers only to those claims that have been allowed. It is not provided that it shall be requisite to a partial distribution that all claims shall have been allowed or disallowed. All that is required is that the court satisfy itself that no injury can result to the estate by reason of the distribution. None could result by reason of this outstanding claim, for there has been sufficient property set aside to cover it. Inasmuch as the petition conforms to section 1663 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it is immaterial whether or not it conforms to sections 1658, 1660, or 1661, which provide for partial distribution on the application of an heir or legatee. Neither is this a special proceeding to determine heirship, as provided by section 1664, and the petition, not having been presented in accordance with that section, need not comply with it. In William Hill Co. v. Lawler, 116 Cal. 359, 48 Pac. 323, it was said:

"The 'distribution' of an estate includes the determination of the persons who by law are entitled thereto, and also the 'proportions or parts' to which each of these persons is entitled; and the 'parts' of the estate so distributed may be segregated or undivided portions of the estate."

Although that case involved a final distribution, the same considerations apply to a distribution under section 1663, for, before the court can make an order for ratable distribution, it is necessary to know who the parties entitled to the estate are. Therefore in such a proceeding the court may determine who the heirs are and to what proportion of the estate each is entitled.

[7] Appellants make no objection to the nonpayment of any taxes except inheritance taxes. The petition states that it was impossible to pay all the inheritance taxes until it was determined who were the heirs. Estate of Mahoney, 133 Cal. 180, 65 Pac. 389, 85 Am. St. Rep. 155, involved the final distribution of an estate. The trial court ordered the estate distributed, and ordered that the administrator retain an amount equal to the inheritance tax claimed by the state. Although the precise point involved there was the validity of the inheritance tax, the case is applicable for the reason that the decree of distribution was affirmed, although the taxes were unpaid; the order for the payment being included in the decree of final distribution. In that case the court declared:

"There is no showing in the bill of exceptions that the taxes in question had been paid by anybody, and the last order of the court, made nunc pro tunc, shows that taxes to the amount of $1.90 on each $100 are claimed to be due upon said estate, and it is ordered by the trial court that the administrator retain that amount in his possession. It will not be presumed that the taxes have been paid, in the absence of a showing to that effect; and sections 3752 of the Political Code and 1669 of the Code of Civil Procedure make it the duty of the court to see to it that the taxes are paid. On the record before us we can see no error in the action of the court directing the administrator to retain the amount of the taxes claimed."

Here the question involved concerns the claims of various heirs, but the inheritance tax cannot be paid until those claims are settled, as in Estate of Mahoney, supra, it could not be paid until the validity of the tax was determined. In view of that case we think the order of the court directing that "out of the properties of said estate so distributed there shall be deducted and paid the inheritance taxes due to the state of California from each of said distributees" is sufficient to satisfy the court that the taxes will be fully paid by the time the order is executed.

[8] 4. Another assignment of error is as follows:

"The superior court erred in its ruling admitting in evidence the testimony of petitioner Carrick relative to pedigree. The testimony was clearly incompetent and irrelevant, as Carrick was not and never had been a member of the family of the deceased, John Ross, and gave no testimony concerning the declaration of the decedent on the subject."

In support of this position are cited sections 1852 and 1870, subd. 4, of the Code of Civil Procedure, and several cases, among them Estate of James, 124 Cal. 653, 57 Pac. 578, 1008, and Estate of Heaton, 135 Cal. 385, 67 Pac. 321. Section 1852 provides:

"The declaration, act, or omission of a member of a family who is a decedent, or out of the jurisdiction, is also admissible as evidence of common reputation, in cases where, on questions of pedigree, such reputation is admissible."

Section 1870, subd. 4, is to the effect that evidence may be given upon a trial of "the act or declaration, verbal or written, of a deceased person in respect to the relationship, birth, marriage, or death of any person related by blood or marriage to such deceased person," and by subdivision 11 evidence may be received of "common reputation existing previous to the controversy, * * * in cases of pedigree." Counsel for appellants seems to have fallen into error in assuming that these provisions are exclusive. They are but exceptions to the rule that hearsay evidence is not admissible. They do not prescribe the sole method by which pedigree must be proved, and do not exclude testimony on that subject by one having primary knowledge of the facts and who is competent to testify. In Estate of James, supra, there was no question concerning the proof of pedigree by direct testimony of a relative. The question was whether the declarations, concededly hearsay, were of such a character as to be entitled to admission under the exception made in cases of family relationship. In Estate of Heaton, supra, certain declarations and statements of common reputation were held to have been improperly admitted for the purpose of proving relationship, and the court cited the rules given above, but nowhere was it intimated that these declarations or evidence concerning reputation were the only means of proving relationship. To so hold would, for instance, prevent a parent from testifying as to the paternity or relationship of his or her own child. We conceive that any person having knowledge of the facts may testify concerning matters of pedigree, as on any other proper subject; his credibility and the weight of his testimony being determined in the trial court. Carrick's testimony was properly admitted.

[9] 5. A further assignment of error is that the findings are contradictory and in that respect do not sustain the decree. One of the findings is to the effect that all the allegations of the petition are true. Among these allegations so found to be true is one to the effect that "the names and residences of the heirs and distributees of said Catherine Ross, deceased, and persons entitled to distribution of said estate are as follows." In the list given appeared the names of all the relatives to whom we have referred, including those of appellants and the other descendants of Bridget H. Quinn. In the specific findings that certain named persons are the heirs, and in the conclusions of law, the appellants and the other descendants of Bridget H. Quinn are excluded. There is no error in these findings, for the special finding that certain named persons are the heirs controls the general finding that all the allegations of the petition are true. It was said in McCormick v. National Surety Co., 134 Cal. 510, 66 Pac. 741:

"A general finding of the court that certain averments of the complaint were true included the fact that the attached property belonged to both the defendants in the former action; but there was a special finding that it belonged to the defendant the said railroad company alone, subject to certain liens, and that the defendant Rickert had no interest therein. Appellant's contention that the special finding must prevail is correct, and this appeal must be determined upon that theory."

The judgment as to the separate property is affirmed, and, as to the community property, it is modified to include the descendants of Bridget H. Quinn as well as those of Elizabeth Donohue.

We concur: SHAW, C. J.; SLOANE, J.; LENNON, J.; WILBUR, J.; SHURTFLETT, J.

187 Cal. 479

Ex parte KANDARIAN. (Cr. 2421.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 5, 1921.)

1. Guardian and ward ⚭8—Superior court has jurisdiction to appoint guardian.

The superior court of Fresno county has jurisdiction and power to appoint guardians.

2. Guardian and ward ⚭17—Appointment not void because another entitled to appointment.

The appointment of a guardian by a court having jurisdiction was not void, because the mother of the minor children was entitled to be appointed, and was valid as against collateral attack.

3. Habeas corpus ⚭85(1)—Presumed that proper notices and proceedings were had in collateral proceeding.

In habeas corpus by the mother of minor children to obtain their custody from one appointed guardian by the superior court, it is presumed, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, that the proper notices and proceedings leading up to such appointment were had.

4. Contempt ⚭63(1)—Order not void because no copy served.

Where one charged with contempt was regularly cited and duly appeared, the order made at the hearing was not invalid, or void, because no copy was served on her.

5. Habeas corpus ⚭92(3)—Whether contempt was committed not open to inquiry.

On a collateral attack by habeas corpus, the court cannot inquire whether the contempt charged in proceedings for contempt was committed.

6. Habeas corpus ⚭54—Allegation that one was not legally appointed guardian held a conclusion.

In a habeas corpus proceeding to recover the custody of minor children, an allegation that a person was not the legally appointed, qualified, and acting guardian of the minors was a bare conclusion of law, and insufficient to authorize the issuing of the writ, especially where it was not justified by the facts alleged.

7. Guardian and ward ⚡13(8)—Appeal from order of appointment not taken in time.

An appeal from an order made March 7, 1921, appointing a guardian by means of a notice of appeal filed November 25, 1921, was wholly ineffectual to give jurisdiction, or suspend proceedings under the order, as it was taken too late.

In Bank.

Application by Zaroohe Kandarian for a writ of habeas corpus to secure the custody of minor children. Writ denied.

A. M. Drew, of Fresno, for petitioner.

SHAW, C. J. The petition for a writ of habeas corpus herein is denied for the following reasons:

[1] 1. The superior court of Fresno county has jurisdiction and power to appoint guardians.

[2, 3] 2. The fact that the petitioner was the mother of the minor children, and as such would be entitled to their guardianship, does not make the appointment of K. Kandarian as such guardian void. It is presumed, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, that the proper notices and proceedings leading up to the appointment of K. Kandarian were had. This being so, an order appointing a guardian is valid, except on appeal, notwithstanding the fact that some other person may have been lawfully entitled to letters.

[4-6] 3. The petitioner was regularly cited and duly appeared at the hearing of the charge against her of contempt of court on November 9, 1921. The order made at such hearing is not rendered invalid or void by the fact that no copy thereof was served on the petitioner. This court cannot, in a collateral attack of this character, inquire whether the contempt was committed as charged in the affidavit upon which said proceeding was initiated. The mere allegation that K. Kandarian is not the legally appointed, qualified, and acting guardian of said minors is a bare conclusion of law, and is not sufficient to authorize the issuing of a writ of habeas corpus. Moreover, it is not justified by the facts alleged in the petition as above mentioned, nor by any other facts alleged therein.

[7] 4. The appeal attempted to be taken from the order made March 7, 1921, appointing the said K. Kandarian as guardian, by means of a notice of appeal filed on November 25, 1921, is wholly ineffectual to give this court any jurisdiction of the appeal, or to affect in any manner the validity of the order appointing K. Kandarian as guardian, or to suspend proceedings under it. Such appeal was taken too late.

We concur: SHURTLEFF, J.; LENNON, J.; SLOANE, J.; WASTE, J.; WILBUR, J.; RICHARDS, Judge pro tem.

187 Cal. 489

CRAIG v. WHITE. (S. F. 9332.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 7, 1921.)

1. Navigable waters ⚡37(4)—Patent to lands bordering on lake conveys title to actual shore.

Government patents to uplands bordering on a lake convey title to the actual margin of the lake, though the surveyed meandered line does not coincide therewith, in view of Civ. Code, § 830, so that a state patent, purporting to convey shore lands between the meandered line and the margin of the lake under the Act March 24, 1893 (St. 1893, p. 341), gave no title where there had been no recession or drainage of the water of the lake.

2. Judgment ⚡704—Judgment quieting title against both vendor and purchaser admissible to support purchaser's action against vendor for payments.

In action by a purchaser to recover the payments for land, after rescission of his contract, a judgment, rendered against both vendor and purchaser, quieting the title of third parties to substantially all of the lands covered by the contract, is admissible.

3. Vendor and purchaser ⚡143—Entering into contract after examination of title does not waive right to deed conveying title.

Approval of the title by the purchaser before entering into an executory contract for purchase does not, in the absence of an express agreement or of facts constituting an estoppel, waive purchaser's right to a deed carrying the title, on the final execution of the contract.

4. Vendor and purchaser ⚡143—Acceptance of deed after approval of title prevents rescission.

Ordinarily the payment of the purchase price and acceptance of a deed to land after approval of title by the purchaser precludes the purchaser from rescinding and recovering the purchase money upon the failure of his title.

5. Vendor and purchaser ⚡130(1)—Breach of implied agreement to convey merchantable title warrants rescission.

In an executory contract for the sale of land there is an implied agreement to convey a merchantable title, and failure to do so on demand and tender of final payment is a breach of the contract which justifies rescission and recovery of the money paid by the purchaser.

6. Escrows ⚡8(1)—Escrow agreement held not to show executed transaction.

An escrow agreement whereby a deed of bargain and sale was delivered to a bank to be delivered to the grantee upon the completion of the stated payments therefor, and to be forfeited for failure to make such payments within 30 days after they became due, does not, on its face, constitute as executed a conveyance which would merge the implied agreement of the contract to convey a good title into the covenants of the deed.

7. Escrows ⚡8(1)—Delivery in escrow does not make transaction executed.

The placing in escrow of a deed to the property conveyed by an executory contract for sale does not make the deed an executed instrument.

8. Vendor and purchaser ⚡143—Acceptance of imperfect title might estop purchaser.

An examination and acceptance of an imperfect title before entering upon a contract to purchase might operate as an estoppel against rescission by the purchaser either by express agreement or under circumstances giving substantial advantage to the purchaser or operating to the detriment of the vendor.

9. Vendor and purchaser ⚡114—Waiver implies knowledge of right.

A waiver of the purchaser's right to rescind implies a knowledge, actual or constructive, on his part of the existence of the right and an intention to relinquish it.

10. Vendor and purchaser ⚡119, 144(2)—Purchaser not guilty of laches before time of conveyance; vendor may cure title any time before performance.

A purchaser is not guilty of laches in failing to give notice of rescission to the vendor in ample time to make title good before time for final payment and delivery of the deed, since vendor had until that time to make his title good.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Everett J. Brown, Judge.

Action by Joseph Craig against Richard White. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Samuel M. Shortridge, of San Francisco, for appellant.

A. E. Shaw and A. E. Cooley, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

SLOANE, J. The plaintiff in this action brought suit to recover the sum of $20,797.17, paid to defendant as part of the purchase price of real estate under a contract which was rescinded by plaintiff, the purchaser, because of failure of title in the defendant, the vendor. Judgment was for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

The finding of the trial court that the defendant had no title to the land at any time and failed to convey title upon demand and tender of full performance of the contract by plaintiff is amply supported by the evidence. The original contract of purchase and sale called for a conveyance of all of the defendant's "holdings on the shore of Clear Lake in Lake county, Calif., being about 350 acres and embracing about 13 miles of lake shore land."

The evidence disclosed that the lands referred to consisted of a strip of water front along the borders of the lake lying between the meander line as established by the United States survey and the actual water line of the lake. According to the calls of the United States field notes, it is shown that this meander line does not conform to the actual water line of the lake, but that the meander line is a sufficient distance from the actual border of the lake to inclose between such line and the water line of the lake the quantity of land called for by the contract between plaintiff and defendant.

Defendant's claim of title was evidenced by patents from the state of California purporting to convey by courses and distances the land between the meander line and the lake "under an act of the Legislature of the state of California, entitled 'An act regulating the sale of the lands uncovered by the recession or drainage of the waters of inland lakes and unsegregated swamp and overflowed lands, and validating sales and surveys heretofore made,'" approved March 24, 1893 (St. 1893, p. 341).

[1] These conveyances were made on the theory that the meander line as marked by the United States survey constituted the actual boundary between the uplands belonging to the government and the state lands included within the borders of the lake. Prior to the issuance of state patents to the defendant, United States patents had been duly issued to settlers on the government uplands bordering on this part of the lake, which patents, under the established rule governing such transfers, conveyed title to the patentees to the actual margin of the lake. Civ. Code, § 830; Lamprey v. State, 52 Minn. 181, 53 N. W. 1139, 18 L. R. A. 670, 38 Am. St. Rep. 541; Hardin v. Jordan, 140 U. S. 371, 11 Sup. Ct. 808, 838, 35 L. Ed. 428.

[2] It also was shown in evidence that there had been no recession or drainage of the waters of the lake, and that there had been therefore no additional land uncovered below the original water line to which defendant's state patents could attach. The title, therefore, to all the land covered by the contract between plaintiff and defendant was vested in other parties under the United States patents. There was, moreover, introduced in evidence the judgment roll in an action by a grantee under the government patents, in which action both the plaintiff and defendant here were made defendants, wherein a judgment had been given and had become final, quieting title in the claimants under the government title, and wherein it was found "that said defendants Richard White and Joseph Craig have not, nor has either of them any estate, right, title or interest whatever in or to any of said lands or premises," referring to lands described in the complaint. This description covered all lands bordering on the lake included within 11 of the 13 miles of lake front in controversy here. We think this judgment roll was properly admitted in evidence.

Neither of the parties to this action were ever in possession of the land contracted for. There was, if not a complete failure of consideration for the money paid to defendant under this contract, such an approximation to a complete failure as to justify a rescission by plaintiff and the recovery of the money paid, unless defendant was justified to raise the question of failure of title by waiver or laches.

The instrument setting out the terms of the contract for the sale of this land, dated July 16, 1906, and signed by the defendant, acknowledged the receipt of $100 from the plaintiff, on account of purchase price of the land, and provided that—

"Said Craig is to have until and including the 2d day of August, 1906, to examine title to property, and shall have to that date to pay an additional sum of $1,500.00, and to have a deed placed in escrow to be delivered to him, his heirs or assigns, upon condition that he or they shall pay to me or my heirs or assigns the additional sum of $14,400," payable in designated annual installments.

It was also specified that—"Should the title of said undersigned prove unsatisfactory to said Craig," he, the said Craig, "may on or before August 2, 1906, have return of said $100, and cancel this contract."

On the date specified, August 2, 1906, plaintiff, by his attorney, notified defendant that he was ready and willing to make the $1,500 payment, accepted the terms of the contract, and demanded that the deed to the premises be executed and placed in escrow as therein provided. The deed was prepared, signed, and acknowledged by defendant, and, after its inspection by plaintiff, placed in escrow with a trust company under an escrow agreement which set out the terms and conditions for the deferred payments, and directed the delivery of deed to plaintiff when the payments were completed. The deferred payments were thereafter met substantially as required by the contract, or as extended by agreement. It is questioned by appellant that some of the extensions were authorized, but the payments were accepted without protest, and no default on the part of plaintiff can be predicated upon such delays as occurred. Prior to the falling due of the last installment, defendant's claim of title was called in question by the suit of the holder of title under the government patents. Plaintiff thereafter and within the period allowed by his contract tendered payment of the balance due upon condition that the defendant convey to him a good title to the land in question. This was not done, and this suit was brought for the recovery of the purchase money already paid.

[3] The main contention of appellant, and the real point at issue on this appeal, is as to whether or not the election of plaintiff to affirm the contract and consummate the deal, after the period of 17 days given him to examine title and exercise his option to purchase, constituted such an acceptance of whatever title defendant might have, irrespective of its validity, as to estop him from pleading a failure of consideration. Time was given under this agreement of the vendor to sell for the examination of title as a condition precedent, not to the acceptance of a conveyance, but as preliminary to entering upon the contract of purchase. The approval of the title under such a provision should not, in the absence of express agreement, or of facts constituting an estoppel, operate as a waiver of the right to a deed carrying the title, on the final execution of the contract.

[4] It may be conceded that ordinarily the payment of the purchase price and acceptance of a deed to land, after approval of title by the purchaser, thus effecting an executed contract, precludes him from rescinding or recovering the purchase money upon failure of his title. Bryan v. Swain, 56 Cal. 616; Frederick v. Youngblood, 19 Ala. 680, 54 Am. Dec. 209.

[5] On the other hand, it is the general rule in case of an executory contract that there is an implied agreement on the part of the vendor to convey a merchantable title, and failure to do so on demand and upon tender of final payment is a breach of the contract which justifies rescission and recovery of the money paid by the purchaser. Backman v. Park, 157 Cal. 607, 103 Pac. 686, 137 Am. St. Rep. 153; Crim v. Umlsen, 155 Cal. 697, 103 Pac. 178, 132 Am. St. Rep. 127; Sanders v. Lansing, 70 Cal. 429, 11 Pac. 702; Winkler v. Jerrue, 20 Cal. App. 559, 129 Pac. 804; Flinn v. Barber, 64 Ala. 193; Eggers v. Busch, 154 Ill. 604, 39 N. E. 619.

This distinction between the rights of the purchaser under executed and executory contracts is plainly stated in Bryan v. Swain, supra. In that case plaintiff entered into an agreement with defendants by the terms of which he agreed to sell defendants certain parcels of land. The deed was to be a good and sufficient one to convey the title free from all incumbrances and was to be executed and delivered when full payment of the purchase money was made. A grant, bargain, and sale deed was executed and delivered by plaintiff to defendants, and a note and mortgage was taken for the unpaid purchase price. This completed the transaction as an executed contract. Title to one of the tracts covered by the contract and deed had never vested in the grantor. This was pleaded as a defense to an action to recover on the mortgage. Chief Justice Morrison, writing the opinion for this court, says:

"There can be no doubt that the plaintiff was obliged, under the agreement, to execute a good and sufficient deed, conveying the title; and if this case depended upon such agreement, the matter pleaded would be a good defense to the action. But the finding of the court is that the deed was taken and accepted in execution of the contract. * * * The rights of the defendants, therefore, depend upon the deed, and not upon the agreement, the latter being merged in and extinguished by the former."

It was further held in the case cited that, the deed having been accepted in execution of the agreement, the defendants must look to its covenants for a defense to the action.

But there, as here, the deed was one of grant, bargain, and sale, and the only covenant was the implied covenant that the grantor had not previously conveyed the premises, and that they were free from all incumbrances made or suffered by him (Civ. Code, sec. 1113), and, there as here, there was no breach of such implied covenant to which the purchaser could resort for relief.

Appellant, in the case before us, demands the application here of this rule of an executed contract, on the theory that the placing in escrow of a deed to the premises was a complete execution of the contract on the part of the vendor; that there was no further act for him to perform, and that the only condition to the delivery of the deed was the payment of the balance of the purchase price, and that the acceptance of the contract and execution of the escrow after the stipulated time for examining title was a waiver of all objection to the title.

Was the escrow deposit of this deed, for delivery upon payment of the balance of the purchase price, an execution of the contract to convey? In the first place, there was no mutual contract between the parties prior to the escrow. All that the agreement executed in the first instance by the defendant amounted to was an option giving the plaintiff the privilege to purchase on specified terms at the end of a specified period, if he was satisfied, from an examination of the title, to proceed with the deal. His refusal for any reason to proceed further could only have subjected him at most to the loss of the $100 initial payment. It was only when, after he expressed himself as satisfied, paid the $1,500 installment of the purchase price, and the deed and escrow agreement were executed by defendant and ratified by the plaintiff, that a mutual contract of purchase and sale was perfected. Then it was that the original option and offer of defendant became a contract of purchase and sale, and the nature and terms of such contract are evidenced by the escrow agreement signed by defendant and accepted over the signature of plaintiff. The deed was an ordinary grant, bargain, and sale deed, without express covenants.

[6] The escrow paper was as follows:

"California Safe Deposit & Trust Company, San Francisco, Cal.—Gentlemen: There is herewith delivered to you a deed of conveyance dated August 2, 1906, from the undersigned Richard White, as grantor, to Joseph Craig, as grantee, embracing Lake Shore lands in Lake county, California, which deed is placed in escrow with you and is to be held by you and delivered to said grantee, his heirs or assigns, upon the condition that he shall pay, and when he or they shall have paid to you for account of the undersigned, or his heirs or assigns, the sum of fourteen thousand and four hundred dollars ($14,400.00) in United States gold coin, at the time and in the manner following, to wit: Sixteen hundred dollars ($1,600.00) on or before the second day of August, 1907, and a like sum on or before the second day of August of each year thereafter until the said sum of fourteen thousand and four hundred dollars ($14,400.00) is paid. Together with interest upon all of the said deferred payments at the rate of three per cent. (3%) per annum from August 2, 1906, until paid, interest payable annually at the same time as the payments of the principal installments as above.

"The whole unpaid balance may be paid at any time and if the same shall be paid within three years after the 2d day of August, 1906, all interest which shall have been actually paid shall in that event be credited upon the principal, and considered as having been paid on that account and not as interest.

"If the said grantee, his heirs or assigns, shall fail to make payment of any of such installments at or before maturity, or within thirty days thereafter, he or they shall forfeit all right to have a delivery of the said deed, and shall forfeit all right to the moneys which may have been paid, and the said deed shall be redelivered to the undersigned, his heirs or assigns, free from all claims or rights of the said grantee, his heirs or assigns.

"Witness my hand at San Francisco, California, this 3d day of August, A. D. 1906.

"Richard White.

"I accept the terms of the within conditions.

"J. Craig."

This transaction does not on its face constitute an executed conveyance such as to merge the implied agreement of the contract to convey a good title into the covenants of the deed, as indicated in Bryan v. Swain, supra.

[7] The placing of the deed in escrow did not make it an executed instrument. There had been no delivery to the purchaser, no transfer of title. Civ. Code, § 1057; 3 Washburn on Real Property, 536; Whitney v. Sherman, 178 Cal. 435, 173 Pac. 931. It is said by this court (Fitch v. Bunch, 30 Cal. 212) that "an escrow differs from a deed in one particular only, and that is the delivery," but the lack of delivery is a very essential omission to the consummation of a conveyance. It will not be questioned that the failure of a grantor's title pending the delivery of an escrow deed would support a rescission by the vendor, unless the deed itself and not the title was the subject of the agreement between the parties. The same result follows when such title has failed prior to the escrow; because the agreement, express or implied, is that the escrow deed will convey title under the same conditions. In this case the implied agreement for title remained executory. The contract to convey a good title was independent of the escrow itself. That was but one of the steps toward the consummation of the contract, the final one on the part of the vendor, it is true, but not such as to satisfy the contract until its delivery.

We have been referred to no authority which holds that mere opportunity to investigate title before entering into a contract of purchase, and the implied approval of the title offered by subsequently entering into the contract constitutes a waiver of the obligation of the vendor to furnish title on tender of the final payment. The fact of inspection and approval by the plaintiff here of the deed offered for escrow has no significance, because the deed itself was regular on its face and purported to convey the title to the land contracted for.

[8] An examination and acceptance of an imperfect title precedent to entering upon a contract to purchase, by express agreement or under circumstances giving substantial advantage to the purchaser, or operating to the detriment of the vendor, might operate as an estoppel. But even an express agreement to buy and pay for land to which it was known the vendor had no title whatever would be void for want of consideration. Here there is no claim of an express waiver, and there are no circumstances to sustain an equitable estoppel of the purchaser. It is entirely clear that both parties contracted on the belief that the defendant had and could convey title to the land. The plaintiff, although it does not so appear of record, presumably made some search or inquiry. The record title appeared to be in defendant. The plaintiff, by entering upon the contract to purchase, impliedly, at least, expressed himself as satisfied that the title was good. We are of the opinion that this did not preclude him from rescinding while the contract was still executory, and not merged in an executed and delivered deed of conveyance, when he discovered that the defendant had no title whatever and could not make such conveyance.

[9] As is said in Ruling Case Law (27 R. C. L., p. 908):

"To constitute a waiver within the definitions given, it is essential that there be an existing right, benefit or advantage; a knowledge, actual or constructive, of its existence, and an intention to relinquish it. No man can be bound by a waiver of his rights, unless waiver is distinctly made, with full knowledge of the rights which he intends to waive; and the fact that he knows his rights, and intends to waive them."

And again:

"In the absence of an express agreement a waiver will not be presumed or implied contrary to the intention of the party whose rights would be injuriously affected thereby, unless by his conduct the opposite party has been misled, to his prejudice, into the honest belief that such waiver was intended or consented to."

It can hardly be seriously contended in this case that the defendant was impressed by anything the plaintiff said or did, with a belief that the latter intended to accept an entirely inoperative deed in satisfaction of his contract.

[10] There was no laches in failing to give notice of rescission before the time had arrived for final payment and delivery of the deed, because the defendant had until such time to make his title good, and it could not appear until the judgment was given in the attack upon defendant's title that he would be unable to do so. The vendor is not in default in such contract if he is able to furnish title when the conveyance is due. Backman v. Park, supra; Hanson v. Fox, 155 Cal. 106, 99 Pac. 489, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 338, 132 Am. St. Rep. 72; Garberino v. Roberts, 109 Cal. 125, 41 Pac. 857; Easton v. Montgomery, 90 Cal. 307, 27 Pac. 280, 25 Am. St. Rep. 123. And it was not incumbent on plaintiff to tender his final payment so as to enable him to make demand for a conveyance of title before the final payment was due.

Appellant places strong reliance upon the decision in the case of Sage L. & I. Co. v. McCowen, 30 Cal. App. 126, 157 Pac. 244, in support of his contention that there was a waiver of objections to invalidity of title. In that decision of the Court of Appeal of the Third District, in an opinion by Mr. Justice Burnett, it was held that, upon the examination of title by vendee under an executory contract to purchase, failure to point out defects constituted a waiver. We think, as pointed out by the District Court of Appeal, there is a material distinction between that case and this. In the case cited the purchasers did point out the defect in the title they were contracting for, and expressly agreed in writing to accept it on specified conditions.

In the first place, the purchasers were furnished an abstract and given 30 days thereafter to make an examination, and report defects, the vendor agreeing to clear such defects within a reasonable time. Title to part of the land was approved and accepted and deeds of conveyance made and delivered. As to part of the land, certain defects were pointed out, and ostensibly cured in a suit to quiet title brought by the vendor. The only remaining objection was that one defaulting defendant served by publication was entitled under the law to appear within one year and contest the proceedings. A deed to this property was placed in escrow under the express agreement of the purchaser that if the defaulting defendant did not appear within the year the deed would be accepted. No such appearance was made, but the purchaser discovered other defects in the title; but, under the state of facts indicated, it was held that grounds of objection other than that specified in the agreement were waived. This is not contrary to the doctrine we have set out in this opinion. In this case we hold there was no express waiver, and no facts to support an equitable estoppel to plead a failure of title.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, C. J.; LENNON, J.; WILBUR, J.; SHURTLEFF, J.; WASTE, J.

187 Cal. 431

HYGIENIC HEALTH FOOD CO. v. GRANT.*

(S. F. 10054.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 28, 1921.
Rehearing Denied Dec. 27, 1921.)

1. Corporations ⇨308(10)—Evidence in suit to recover amount paid manager for services held to sustain finding that majority of directors voted to increase his salary.

In an action by a corporation against defendant, to recover an amount paid defendant for his services as manager, which resulted from an increase in his salary for one year, evidence held to sustain a finding that the minutes of the meeting at which the increase in salary was voted by the directors, and which showed that the majority of the directors did not vote for such increase, had been amended at the next meeting by striking the statement that one of the directors did not vote.

2. Evidence ⇨389—Minutes may be contradicted by other evidence.

A statement in the minutes of the meeting of the directors of corporation may be contradicted by other evidence.

3. Corporations ⇨289 — Cannot recover increase of salary paid on plea that it was voted by de facto director.

Where an increase of salary voted the manager of a corporation, who was also a director and stockholder, had been paid to the manager for services rendered by him, the corporation cannot recover the amount of the increase on the plea that one of the directors, whose vote was necessary to make a majority for the increase, was only a de facto director.

4. Corporations ⇨308(10)—Evidence held to sustain finding of corporation extending term of increased salary of manager.

Where it appears that directors of a corporation voted to increase the salary of the manager for a period of six months, evidence of a vote by the directors more than three months after expiration of that six months' period ratifying all payments to the manager at the increased rate, and continuing the same salary for the remainder of the year, sustains the finding of the court, in a suit to recover the increase paid him, that he did not receive any money during the year to the use of the corporation by reason of such increased salary.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; A. F. St. Sure, Judge.

Action by the Hygienic Health Food Company against J. E. Grant. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Welles Whitmore, of Oakland, and Cyril C. Lotz, of Berkeley, for appellant.

Greene & Sinclair, of Berkeley, for respondent.

SHAW, C. J. The District Court of Appeal in the above-entitled action rendered an opinion of which the following is a portion:

"This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment against it in an action to recover from the defendant, who was formerly its general manager and member of its board of directors, the sum of $300 claimed to have been illegally paid by the plaintiff company to the defendant as salary. The defendant had acted as such general manager for some time prior to February 1, 1918, and during that time, according to the testimony, had received a salary of $125 a month. From that time on, for a period of one year, the defendant was paid $150 a month. The increase of $25 a month for one year—$300—is the subject of this action.

"Payment of $150 a month to the defendant as salary, for a period of six months, was purported to be authorized by a resolution of the board of directors of the plaintiff company on February 19, 1918.

"The appellant argues two questions: (1) That this resolution providing for payment of $150 a month was invalid because not carried by the requisite number of votes of directors. (2) That, if said resolution was valid, nevertheless, after the expiration of the period of six months covered by said resolution, the defendant was not entitled to $150 a month for his services while he continued in the employment.

[1] "The action was for money had and received by the defendant for the use of the plaintiff, and the trial court found that the defendant was not indebted to the plaintiff, impliedly finding that the resolution was properly passed and that the salary of defendant was thereby fixed at $150 a month for six months. This view of the evidence finds some support in the record. It appears that there were five directors of the company. Two of these, admittedly, voted for this resolution. The defendant was present at the meeting, but was disqualified, by reason of his interest in the subject-matter, to vote upon this resolution. The other directors were Cyril C. Lotz, who was secretary of the company, and Mr. Lewars, the president of the company, who was chairman of the meeting of the board. It is admitted that Mr. Lotz did not vote for the resolution. The dispute arises over the vote of Mr. Lewars. The original minutes of the meeting of February 19, 1918, where this question of increase of salary first came up for discussion, were written up by the secretary, and were offered in evidence. They recite that the motion was duly made and seconded, and that 'the motion thereupon was passed, the chair and the secretary not voting.'

⇨ For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

*Motion to vacate judgment denied, 204 Pac. —.

"When these minutes were read at the following meeting of the board of directors, held on May 14, 1918, Director Lawson, who had made the original motion, raised a question about the correctness of the minutes. He testified that when the minutes were read, and he discovered that they were so written up as to convey the idea that Mr. Lewars had not voted on the resolution, he objected that they did not recite the fact, and asked that the erroneous portion be stricken out, and it was so agreed. Mr. Rogers, another director, also testified that at the meeting of May 14, 1918, Director Lawson objected to the statement in the minutes of the previous meeting that 'the chair' had not voted, and such words were accordingly stricken out. It is true the minutes of May 14, 1918, do not recite this objection of Mr. Lawson that the minutes did not state the fact with reference to the vote of Mr. Lewars, but they do show an amendment which eliminates the recital that 'the chair' did not vote, and to that extent corroborate the testimony of the two witnesses just referred to. The portion of said minutes bearing upon this matter is as follows: "Thereupon the secretary read the minutes of the meeting of the board of directors held on the 19th day of February, 1918, the said meeting being the last one at which the board had convened; Director Lawson stated in reference to the clause "the chair and secretary not voting" in line 28 on page 140 hereof, that the secretary of a board of directors was not necessarily a director and that he thought they should be amended to state, "Director Cyril C. Lotz not voting." They were thereupon approved as so amended."

"There is also testimony to the effect that the amendment was actually made on the face of the minutes by drawing a line through the entire clause 'the chair and secretary not voting,' and by writing in between the lines the words 'Director Cyril C. Lotz not voting.'

"A witness for the defendant testified that she had made about 12 copies of the minutes of this meeting, and that the words 'the chair and the secretary not voting' appeared upon the original copy as stricken out by having a line drawn through them; that she had seen these minutes up to within a month of the trial, when she was denied access to them. The testimony of Director Lawson is that it was agreed at the meeting where said minutes were read that these words would be stricken out, and he thinks they were stricken out in his presence. The secretary, Mr. Lotz, upon producing the minutes in court, was asked about the line drawn through these words. There had evidently been an unsuccessful attempt made to erase this line. He explained it by saying that there had been some talk of amending the minutes to show that the chair did vote, and during such discussion the line was probably drawn through the words, but the amendment was not made, and the line was afterwards erased. This testimony, together with the testimony of Mr. Lewars, merely raised a conflict in the evidence upon this point, and, assuredly, there is sufficient testimony in the record to indicate that the minutes were amended to conform to what was then conceded by all the directors, including Mr. Lewars and Mr. Lotz, to be the fact, i. e., that all directors, except the secretary and the defendant, actually voted for the resolution.

[2] "It is true, as contended by appellant, that a statement in the minutes may be contradicted by other evidence, and that the testimony of Mr. Lewars that he did not vote is competent to contradict a statement to the contrary in the minutes. However, the record presents more than a mere statement in the minutes contradicted by the testimony of Mr. Lewars. It presents evidence that at the following meeting the question of whether or not Mr. Lewars actually voted for the resolution was under discussion. Two witnesses testified that at that time Mr. Lawson challenged the correctness of the statement in the minutes of the previous meeting that 'the chair' had not voted for the resolution; that his contention at this time was conceded to be correct, and the minutes were corrected to conform to this acknowledgment of the facts. As so amended, the minutes were then accepted and approved. All directors were present at that meeting, including the two who now contradict by their testimony the recital of the minutes so amended. The conflict is not, therefore, between a recital in the minutes and the testimony of Messrs. Lewars and Lotz, but a conflict between the testimony of these gentlemen at the trial and their admissions and acknowledgments regarding the facts made at an earlier time by the amendment and approval of the minutes. The trial court resolved this conflict in favor of the defendant, and with such determination we may not interfere.

[3] "At the trial an attempt was made by the plaintiff to show that one of the men who was acting as director, and who voted for the resolution, did not actually hold stock in the company in his own name, and therefore was not qualified as a director. The court excluded such evidence upon the ground that it was immaterial. If he was not a director de jure, he was a director de facto, and that is sufficient to bind the plaintiff under the facts shown here. Appellant contends that the doctrine of de facto directors applies only between the corporation and innocent third persons, and those who have no means of ascertaining the fact. The case of Rozecrans Gold Mining Co. v. Morey, 111 Cal. 114, 43 Pac. 585, cited by appellant, does not support this contention. The facts of that case make it entirely inapplicable here. It is there said that the rule of law for the protection of third parties as to acts of de facto officers may well be doubted when applied between the corporation and its own illegally elected officers.

"In the present case, the question is not between the corporation and an illegally elected officer, as it was in the case of Rozecrans Gold Mining Co. v. Morey, supra. This is a case where a corporation has received the benefit of defendant's services under a resolution to compensate him therefor at the rate of $150 a month. The testimony is abundant that the defendant earned all of his salary, if not more. He supervised the mixing of the company's products, and managed all its business, devoting all his time to this work. Having received the benefit of the defendant's services, we think the corporation is estopped to assert now that one of the directors who voted for the resolution providing for payment of defendant's salary was not qualified to act as a director. If it could question this increase in salary upon this ground, it could, upon the same logic, accept the services of all its employees, if they happened to own stock in the corporation, and then refuse to pay any of them because the resolutions authorizing payment were voted upon by a director not actually holding stock in his own name. The plainest principles of estoppel apply equally to both situations. We think the ruling of the trial court excluding this evidence was proper."

The foregoing part of the opinion is approved.

[4] The appellant also contends that the judgment is excessive because of the fact that the resolution above referred to was limited in its operation to a period of six months, and that thereafter there was no authority for the payment to the defendant of a salary, or, at all events, of anything in excess of $125 a month, which was the salary fixed by the by-laws of the corporation. The record, however, shows that on November 12, 1918—more than three months after the expiration of the first six months' period succeeding the passage of the resolution raising the salary to $150 a month—the board of directors unanimously passed a resolution declaring that all payments of $150 a month to Grant for his services as general manager made since February 1, 1918, were fully authorized and that the same salary be continued the remainder of the year. This was full authority for the finding of the court that the defendant had not received any money for the use of the plaintiff on account of the payment to him of the additional $25 per month for the last six months for the year ending February 1, 1919.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, J.; WILBUR, J.; SLOANE, J.; SHURTLEFF, J.; RICHARDS, Justice pro tem.

187 Cal. 443

PLATNER v. VINCENT. (Sac. 2999.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 2, 1921.)

1. Appeal and error ⇨1078(3)—Point raised by demurrer, but not mentioned in brief, regarded as abandoned.

A point raised by demurrer, but not mentioned in the brief on appeal, will be regarded as abandoned.

2. Husband and wife ⇨213—Wife executing deed with deceased husband as joint and several obligors may be sued alone.

A wife, who with her husband executed a deed as joint and several obligors, was severally liable, and could be sued alone after the husband's death for breach of covenants.

3. Courts ⇨7—Action for breach of warranty of title need not be brought in state where land situated.

An action for damages for breach of warranty of title in a deed need not be brought in the state in which the land is situated.

4. Covenants ⇨22—Covenant for quiet enjoyment of land assumed to run with land, in absence of statutes or judicial decisions to contrary.

In absence of a stipulation, the lex situs not lex loci contractus determines whether an express covenant for quiet enjoyment runs with the land, but in absence of statutes or decisions in the situs it must be assumed that the covenant runs with the land.

5. Evidence ⇨80(1)—Presumption is that covenant for quiet enjoyment of property in another state runs with land as in California.

In an action for breach of a covenant for quiet enjoyment of land situated in another state, the presumption, where no statute of such state is pleaded or called to the court's attention, is that the law of that state is similar to that of California (Civ. Code, § 1464), under which such a covenant runs with the land.

6. Courts ⇨7—Claim for breach of covenant for quiet enjoyment enforceable where grantor found, though covenant runs with land.

While a covenant for quiet enjoyment runs with the land, it is interrupted by and ceases on a breach thereof, and, where such breach occurs while the original grantee still holds the interest originally conveyed to him, the claim becomes a chose in action, transitory and enforceable in any jurisdiction in which grantor may be found.

7. Courts ⇨7—Only original grantee of land in foreign state may recover for breach of covenant for quiet enjoyment, irrespective of whether it runs with land.

The original grantee under a deed executed in California, conveying land situated in Washington, may recover for breaches of covenants of title and quiet enjoyment, irrespective of whether such covenants run with the land, though the laws of Washington (Rem. Code 1915, § 8748) declare such covenants to be express and hence substantially part of the deed, but an assignee or grantee of such original grantee, in the absence of a contract that such covenant should inure to his benefit, cannot recover for a breach occurring while he holds the title, unless the covenant runs with the land, there being no privity of contract, but only of estate, between him and the original grantor.

8. Covenants ⚡22—Covenants in deed of land situated in another state construed according to laws of that state.

Since the effect and construction of the deed must be determined by the laws of the state in which the lands it conveys are located, irrespective of where it was executed or grantors reside, covenants in a deed of real property situated in the state of Washington, reciting that grantor "has granted, bargained, sold and conveyed," etc., must be construed, and their scope measured by the law of Washington (Rem. Code 1915, § 8748), requiring that the words "bargain, sell and convey" be adjudged an express covenant that grantor was seized of an indefeasible estate in fee simple, free from incumbrances, and for quiet enjoyment, unless limited by express words in the deed, and providing that grantee and his assigns may recover for breaches as if such covenants were expressly inserted, thus reading into and making them part of the deed.

9. Covenants ⚡114(1)—Allegations held to sufficiently allege eviction, though not by actual dispossession.

Allegations that plaintiff grantee had not been permitted to peaceably occupy or enjoy the premises, nor receive the rents, but that named parties had lawful right to certain parts of the premises from which they had lawfully ousted plaintiff, sufficiently alleged eviction by assertion of paramount title constituting a breach of covenant, since eviction need not be by actual dispossession.

10. Covenants ⚡97—Failure to obtain possession by reason of superior title in third person is breach of covenant for quiet enjoyment.

Grantee's failure to obtain possession by reason of a superior title in a third person is a breach of covenant for quiet enjoyment.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tehama County; John F. Ellison, Judge.

Action by Charles F. Platner against Lillian Vincent. From a judgment of dismissal, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded, with instructions.

H. D. Jerrett and James T. Matlock, both of Red Bluff, for appellant.

L. W. Hughes, of Corning, for respondent.

SHURTLEFF, J. The amended complaint in this action contains two counts. The first alleges that on June 5, 1916, plaintiff was the owner, entitled to and in possession of a designated lodging house in San Francisco, under and by virtue of a certain lease, and on the same day was also the owner of, entitled to and in possession of the furniture therein; that on said day one C. H. Vincent and the defendant Lillian Vincent made their bargain and sale deed, which is set forth in hæc verba, conveying certain real property situate in the state of Washington to plaintiff, the operative words of which deed are, "has granted, bargained, sold and conveyed, and by these presents do grant, bargain, sell and convey," etc. It appears from this deed, it not being otherwise alleged, that the Vincents were residents of the county of Tehama, and that the deed was acknowledged by them in the county of Alameda, this state. It is further alleged that the consideration for the deed and the delivery thereof was said lease, and furniture of the value of $2,500, which lease and furniture were then and there (on June 5, 1916) delivered to said C. H. Vincent and the defendant Lillian Vincent; that said deed was recorded; that C. H. Vincent is dead, and that the defendant Lillian Vincent is the only grantor named in said deed now living; that plaintiff, on or about the 20th day of May, 1917, discovered for the first time that the title so conveyed to him was defective, and did, upon or about said last-mentioned date, notify the defendant that said title was defective, and then and there and at divers times thereafter until on or about the 24th day of February, 1918, made demand on defendant "for a settlement."

It is also alleged: That section 8748, Remington's Code, 1915, Laws of the state of Washington, provides as follows: That every grant, bargain, and sale deed for the conveyance of land in the state of Washington containing in substance and form the words "bargain, sell, and convey * * * shall convey to the grantee, his heirs or other legal representatives, an estate of inheritance in fee simple, and shall be adjudged an express covenant to the grantee, his heirs or other legal representatives," that the "grantor was seized of an indefeasible estate in fee simple, free from incumbrance, done or suffered from the grantor, except the rents and services that may be reserved, as also for quiet enjoyment against the grantor, his heirs and assigns, unless limited by express words contained in such deed." That by the words "grant, bargain, sell and convey," as contained in said deed, the Vincents covenanted to the plaintiff, his heirs and legal representatives, that they (Vincents) were seized of an indefeasible estate in fee simple, free from incumbrance, done or suffered from the grantor, except the rents and services that may be reserved. "That at the time of the execution and delivery of the said deed, the said C. H. Vincent and Lillian Vincent, the defendant herein, were not, nor were they or either of them, the true, lawful, or rightful owners or owner, nor were they or either of them lawfully seized in their own right of a good and indefeasible estate of inheritance in fee simple, nor had they or either of them good right, full power, or lawful authority to grant, bargain, sell, or convey the same in the manner and form as in said deed pretended and adopted, or in any manner."

The second count is similar to the first, with the exception that it omits the allegations which are in effect but a construction of the statute just quoted, and the negative allegations that the Vincents were not the owners, nor lawfully seized in fee simple, nor had the right to convey, in the manner and form adopted in said deed, the property in it described, and in addition, alleges:

"That by the words 'grant, bargain, sell and convey,' as contained in said deed, the grantor [defendant] covenanted to the grantee, his heirs and legal representatives, to wit, for quiet enjoyment against the grantor [defendant], her heirs and assigns, unless limited by express words (and there were none) contained in said deed; that the plaintiff has not been permitted at any time to peaceably occupy or enjoy said premises under the said deed, or indenture, mentioned and hereby (thereby) intended to be conveyed; nor has he been permitted to have or receive the rents, issues, and profits thereof, but, on the contrary, on the 5th day of June, 1916, one Estelle E. Cooke, at the time of making said deed, or indenture, had, and ever since has continued to have, lawful right to the premises [lot 8] as described in said deed, * * * and J. R. Haight and Floy Haight, his wife, had and ever since they continued to have, lawful right to the premises [lot 1] as described in said deed," and they and each of them "oust[ed] plaintiff therefrom, and still lawfully hold him out of the same."

Then follow an allegation of damages, and a prayer for judgment in the amount claimed. To this amended complaint the defendant demurred upon the following grounds, namely: That the court had no jurisdiction of the subject of the action, nor of the subject of the first or second alleged cause of action, because each of them related to "the question of the title and possession" of real property situate in the state of Washington, "and that the judgment prayed for * * * requires a determination of such question"; that the complaint as a whole, and each count thereof, fails to state a cause of action; that there is a defect of parties defendant in the omission to join the heirs of C. H. Vincent, deceased; that the first count is ambiguous and for the same reasons uncertain and unintelligible, in that "no facts are alleged therein showing that the defendant was not the owner and seized of a fee-simple title, and had a good right, full power, and lawful authority to bargain, sell and convey the lands therein described"; that the second cause of action is ambiguous and also for the same reasons uncertain and unintelligible, in that "it does not appear by what right, or claim of right, or in what manner Estelle E. Cooke or J. R. Haight and Floy Haight ousted plaintiff from the premises therein described, or interfered with plaintiff's quiet enjoyment of same."

The demurrer was sustained without leave to amend, whereupon a judgment of dismissal was entered, and it is from this judgment that plaintiff prosecutes this appeal.

[1, 2] Respondent in her brief does not mention the point of defect of parties raised by the demurrer, hence it will be regarded as abandoned, but we find no merit in it, for it appears from the amended complaint that the defendant and her husband executed the deed in question as joint and several obligors, from which it follows that defendant was severally liable and could be sued alone. Holzheier v. Hayes, 133 Cal. 456, 65 Pac. 968.

[3] The action sounds in damages, and if for any reason it becomes essential to investigate the title of the land described in the deed, such investigation is an incident to the main inquiry or complaint, which is not one to try title in the sense that requires the suit to be brought in a court of competent jurisdiction of the state in which the land is situate. As declared by the Supreme Court of Illinois (Hayes v. O'Brien, 149 Ill. 403, 37 N. E. 73, 23 L. R. A. 555), and with which we agree:

"Where the relief sought does not require the court to deal directly with the estate itself, the proceeding does not affect real estate. * * * The court, having the parties in interest all before it, may proceed, although the land to which the controversy relates may lie without the jurisdiction of the court."

Respondent does not seriously contest the soundness of the last-stated propositions so far as they are applicable to the first cause of action pleaded in the amended complaint, because it is grounded upon an alleged breach of a contract of seisin, which is admittedly a personal covenant and does not run with the land, and may be enforced wherever the covenantor may be found, but claims they do not apply to the second cause of action, which charges a breach of a covenant for quiet enjoyment, which covenant respondent affirms runs with the land, and for that reason an action for its breach can alone be brought in the proper court of the state wherein the land to which it relates is situate.

[4-7] In the absence from the deed of a stipulation providing therefor, the question whether an express covenant for quiet enjoyment runs with the land must, in our opinion, be determined by the lex situs rather than the lex loci contractus; to hold otherwise would not only give rise to possible irreconcilable confusion touching such a covenant in the state in which the land affected thereby is situate, but might be tantamount to reading into the statutes, of such state a conflicting law of a sister state, which cannot be done. If, however, there are no statutes or judicial decisions in the state wherein the land is located, determining the question, and none have been called to our attention in the instant case (unless the statute just quoted accomplishes that result, which we do not decide, but, if it does, it would merely confirm what follows), it must be assumed that in the state of Washington a covenant for quiet enjoyment runs with the land, for in the absence of a statute or agreement between the parties negating such transmission, such covenants "run with land in all jurisdictions." 11 Cyc. p. 1088. Moreover, no statute of Washington upon the subject having been pleaded or called to our attention, the presumption is that the law of that state upon the subject is similar to our own, namely, that such a covenant runs with the land. Civ. Code, § 1464. But while it is true that the covenant for quiet enjoyment runs with the land, it is interrupted by and ceases upon a breach thereof (11 Cyc. p. 1088; 15 C. J. 1248); and where, as here, the breach occurs while the original grantee still holds the interest originally conveyed to him by the grantor, the claim, assuming that it arises from the fact that the broken covenant runs with the land, becomes a chose in action and transitory and enforceable in any jurisdiction in which the grantor may be found (Roberts v. Dunsmuir, 75 Cal. 203, 16 Pac. 782), from which it follows that in this instance the superior court of the county of Tehama also had jurisdiction of the cause of action pleaded in the second count of the amended complaint. But we think such jurisdiction must be sustained for another and stronger reason. While it is true that each of plaintiff's two alleged causes of action respectively spring from a breach of a covenant, which the laws of Washington declare to be express, and hence, for all purposes, substantially part of the deed delivered to him by the Vincents, it is likewise true that the enforcement of neither of them is dependent upon the question as to whether it runs with land. In our opinion the cause of action of the original grantee, and such is the plaintiff, is upon the deed—the contract—and if plaintiff establishes the allegations of his complaint, he should recover, irrespective of whether the covenants involved run with the land. As to the grantee, each covenant is one of agreement, and not of some law declaring that it runs with the land. It is fallacious to contend that an express covenant for quiet enjoyment, such as the one involved here is declared to be by the laws of Washington, could not be enforced by the grantee of the deed unless under the laws of the state wherein enforcement is sought it runs with the land. Quite a different rule would prevail where an assignee or grantee of the original grantee seeks recovery for an alleged breach occurring while he held the title. In such a case there would be no privity of contract between the original grantor and the assignee, and hence the latter's right to enforce the covenant would rest upon privity of estate, and, in the absence of a contract providing that the covenant should inure to his benefit, his right for relief for its breach would be dependent upon the covenant running with the land. The early case of Lienow v. Ellis, 6 Mass. 331, upholds these views. It was an action by the assignee of the grantee upon a covenant, broken by the grantor, that the land conveyed by the deed was free of incumbrances. Chief Justice Parsons, speaking for the court, said:

"When the action of covenant is founded on privity of contract between the parties, their executors or administrators, it is transitory, and may be sued as a transitory action, but when it is founded on privity of estate, the action is then local, and must be sued in the county where the land lies. In the case before us, if the plaintiff can maintain an action of covenant upon the covenant on which he declares, he must maintain it as assignee of Bartlet, by virtue of his conveyance of the land: and his privity is a privity of estate, and not of contract."

[8] Having determined, therefore, that the defendant's objection to the jurisdiction cannot be sustained, we pass to the discussion of her contention that neither count of the amended complaint states a cause of action. All agree that the solution of this question depends upon the nature and extent of the covenants, if any, arising from the presence in the deed executed by the Vincents of the words "granted, bargained, sold and conveyed, and by these presents do grant, bargain, sell and convey," which involves the further inquiry whether the laws of California, where the deed was executed and the grantors resided, or the laws of Washington, where the land is situate, govern and are controlling in solving the problem. A determination in favor of the state of location of the land practically disposes of the proposition, because it then becomes a question of interpretation and application of the law of Washington, which fortunately, is free from difficulty. We are satisfied that upon the weight of authority, as well as upon reason, the effect and construction to be given a deed must be determined by the laws of the state in which the lands it conveys are located, irrespective of where it may have been executed, or the grantors reside.

In McGoon v. Scales, 9 Wall. (76 U. S.) 23, 27 (19 L. Ed. 545) it is said:

"It is a principle too firmly established to admit of dispute at this day, that to the law of the state in which land is situated must we look for the rules which govern its descent, alienation, and transfer, and for the effect and construction of conveyances."

And this is true, wherever they may be made.

In Thompson v. Kyle, 39 Fla. 582, 23 South. 12, 63 Am. St. Rep. 193, the court uses the following language:

"It is * * * almost universally held that so far as real estate or immovable property is concerned, we must look to the laws of the state where it is situated for the rules which govern its descent, alienation and transfer, and for the construction, validity and effect of conveyances thereof."

In Dalton v. Taliaferro, 101 Ill. App. 592, 596, it is said:

"We are of opinion that the meaning and validity of the words of grant, and of the words supposed to create covenants running with the land, must stand or fall together, and therefore must be governed by the same law. If a deed of land in Illinois be executed in Maine or Germany it would be unreasonable to say that while its sufficiency to transfer title must depend alone upon the laws of Illinois, yet we must resort to the laws of Maine or Germany to ascertain the existence and construction of covenants which are inseparable from the land, are annexed to the estate granted, can pass only with the grant of the land, and depend for their validity upon privity of estate between covenantor and covenantee. We therefore conclude that in a deed of conveyance of real estate, covenants running with the land are to be controlled and construed solely by the law of the state where the land is situated."

It is our opinion that the covenants upon which the amended complaint is predicated must be construed and their scope ascertained from, and measured by, the law of Washington, which, so far as applicable, is, to repeat, as follows: That the words "bargain, sell and convey" shall be adjudged an express covenant "to the grantee, his heirs or other legal representatives," that he the grantor, "was seized of an indefeasible estate in fee simple, free from incumbrances, done or suffered from the grantor * * * as also for quiet enjoyment against the grantor, his heirs and assigns, unless limited by express words contained in such deed, and the grantee * * * and assigns may, in any action, recover for breaches, as if such covenants were expressly inserted." It will be noted that the statute in plain terms declares that the covenants in and by it provided shall be express as distinguished from implied, which, in substance, reads them into the deed and makes them part thereof as completely and effectively as they would be were they in terms written therein, from which it follows that the respondent, by the execution of the deed set out in the amended complaint, expressly stipulated that she was seized of the property in it described, in fee simple, free from incumbrances, and for the quiet enjoyment thereof by the appellant.

[9] Respondent further contends that the second count of the amended complaint, charging a breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment, not only fails to state a cause of action, but is uncertain and ambiguous and is a statement of conclusions of law. Its material parts have already been stated, but we will repeat them:

"That the plaintiff has not been permitted at any time to peaceably occupy or enjoy said premises under the said deed, or indenture, * * * nor * * * permitted to have or receive the rents, issues, and profits thereof, but, on the contrary, * * * one Estelle E. Cooke, at the time of making said deed, or indenture, had, and ever since has continued to have, lawful right to the premises [lot 8] as described in said deed, or indenture, * * * and J. R. Haight and Floy Haight, his wife, had and ever since they continued to have, lawful right to the premises as described in said deed, or indenture [lot 1], * * * and said Estelle E. Cooke and said J. R. Haight and Floy Haight and each of them ousted the plaintiff therefrom, and still lawfully hold him out of the same."

We think this alleges such an eviction as will, if proven, constitute a breach of the covenant. It is well settled that eviction need not be by actual dispossession. McGary v. Hastings, 39 Cal. 360, 2 Am. Rep. 456. In this case the court said:

"The true rule deducible from the recent cases is that the covenant [for quiet enjoyment] is broken whenever there has been an involuntary loss of possession by reason of the hostile assertion of an irresistible paramount title. * * * It is enough that the true owner asserts his title and demands the possession. If it is his right to have possession, it certainly is the duty of the covenantee to surrender it to him. The covenant is for quiet possession, and against a rightful eviction. * * * Although there must be an eviction, it is not necessary that there should be an actual dispossession of the grantee."

Mr. Justice Shaw, now Chief Justice, speaking for the court, reaffirms this principle in McCormick v. Marcy, 165 Cal. 386, 132 Pac. 449, in these words:

"There is no breach of the covenant for quiet and peaceable possession of land until there has been an eviction by the true owner, or an assertion by him of his paramount right in such a manner that the holder through the covenantor is compelled to yield possession or buy the outstanding superior title"—citing cases.

[10] If the assertion of the paramount title is such that the grantee cannot avoid yielding to it, or by reason of such assertion is unable to secure possession, there is an eviction as complete as would attend removal from the land by force. Failure to obtain possession by reason of a superior title in a third person is, according to the weight of authority, a breach within the meaning of the covenant. 11 Cyc. 1120; Playter v. Cunningham, 21 Cal. 229.

From what precedes, it follows that the court erred in sustaining the demurrer, and that the judgment must be and it is reversed, and the cause remanded, with instructions to the lower court to overrule the demurrer and to grant the defendant a reasonable time within which to answer the amended complaint.

We concur: SHAW, C. J.; SLOANE, J.; LENNON, J.; WILBUR, J.; WASTE, J.; RICHARDS, Justice pro tem.

187 Cal. 490

Ex parte LIGGETT. (Cr. 2418.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 28, 1921.)

1. Drunkards ⇨2(1)—Hearing for commitment held outside of courtroom.

Under Pol. Code, § 2185c, prescribing the proceedings for the commitment of inebriates and authorizing the judge to fix the time and place for the hearing, which is similar to the provision of section 2168, relating to insanity proceedings, the court has the discretion to designate as a place for hearing a place other than the regular place for holding court as designated by law or by an order made and published as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 142.

2. Drunkards ⇨2(1)—Authority to hold hearing outside of courtroom is valid.

The provision authorizing the court to fix the place of a hearing and examination of a person for commitment as an inebriate at some place other than the regular courtroom is valid, since it is frequently for the best interests of the patient himself as well as of his attendants and witnesses that it be held at the place of his detention.

3. Jury ⇨19(1)—Not entitled to jury trial on hearing for commitment of drunkard.

Pol. Code, § 2174, giving the right to a jury trial in proceedings for examination and commitment as an insane person, does not apply to provisions under Pol. Code, § 2185c, authorizing a hearing for commitment of a person as an inebriate or narcotic addict.

4. Jury ⇨19(1)—Right not guaranteed in proceedings for commitment as drunkard.

The provision of Const. art. 1, § 7, that the right of trial by jury shall be secured to all and remain inviolate refers to the common-law right of trial by jury in ordinary civil and criminal cases, and does not give a right to a jury trial at a hearing and examination for commitment of a person as an inebriate or narcotic addict.

5. Drunkards ⇨2(1)—Affidavit held sufficient to give jurisdiction over hearing for commitment.

An affidavit that a man had been addicted to the excessive use of intoxicating liquors for more than five years last past and had been continuously intoxicated for the last six months shows that he is subject to dipsomania or inebriety, and is sufficient to give the court jurisdiction to proceed with a hearing for his commitment under Pol. Code, § 2185c.

In Bank.

Application for writ of habeas corpus by William M. Liggett, prayed to be directed to the Superintendent of Agnew State Hospital, to secure the release of petitioner from detention therein. Writ denied.

E. G. Ryker, of Oakland, for petitioner.

SHAW, C. J. The petitioner asks for a writ of habeas corpus to discharge him from detention in the Agnew State Hospital at Agnew, Cal., in pursuance of a commitment under section 2185c of the Political Code. He claims that his commitment is unlawful, and that the proceedings are void for the reasons about to be mentioned.

The above-named section authorizes the superior court to commit a person to said hospital for care and treatment upon finding that such person "is so far addicted to the intemperate use of narcotics or stimulants as to have lost the power of self-control, or is subject to dipsomania or inebriety."

The first objection of the petitioner to the validity of the proceedings is that the hearing, which was before the superior court of Alameda county, was held in a place in Oakland known as the "Emergency Hospital," and that there is no legal authority for holding a session of the superior court in any place other than the place designated by law or by an order of the superior court made and published as provided in section 142 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that no order designating such other place or publication thereof was made in the present case prior to the hearing.

[1] The objection is answered by the fact that section 2185c provides that, when such accused person is brought before the superior court and the judge has informed him of his rights to make a defense to the charge, "the judge must by order fix such time and place for the hearing and examination in open court as will give a reasonable opportunity for the production and examination of witnesses." The same provision is made by section 2168 of the Political Code with regard to the hearing of a proceeding to commit a person to a hospital for the insane. The two must be presumed to have the same meaning.

[2] We think this provision authorized the superior court to designate any place other than that fixed in pursuance of section 142 aforesaid, in its discretion. It has been customary for the courts to hold such hearings at places other than the courthouse for many years. In the nature of things it must often be more convenient and sometimes absolutely necessary to do so. Persons to be examined for insanity are sometimes physically unable to be taken to the courthouse without endangering their life or health. It is evident that this provision of the statute was inserted to give the court discretion to direct a hearing to be made so as to give a reasonable opportunity to the person to be examined and to the persons initiating the examination to produce and examine witnesses. It is often necessary to have the patient to some extent under restraint, so that he cannot attack or injure persons present. It would be much more convenient in such cases to have the examination conducted in the place where he is so restrained, or in some other place where similar facilities for restraint are ready for use. Frequently, also, the witnesses for the prosecution of the case are persons who are also confined in such hospital or in attendance there, and the order fixing such place for the hearing would be more convenient for every one else and fully as convenient for the patient to be examined. We think the law is valid, and that the court properly followed it in the present case.

[3] Within five days after the examination and commitment the petitioner demanded a trial by a jury, claiming the right to such trial under the provisions of section 2174 of the Political Code. This was denied, and the examination and commitment were made by the court without any submission of the matter to a jury. This does not invalidate the order of commitment. Section 2174 applies only to proceedings to adjudge a person insane for commitment as an insane person. The authority for committing one to an asylum for care and treatment who has lost the power of self-control because of his addiction to narcotics or stimulants or is subject to dipsomania or inebriety is found in section 2185c aforesaid. That section does not authorize or require the submission of the matter to a jury.

[4] We do not think that the constitutional provision that the right of trial by jury shall be secured to all and remain inviolate (section 1, art. 1) applies to the present proceeding. The right of trial by jury there referred to is the common-law right of trial by jury in ordinary civil and criminal cases.

[5] The petitioner claims that the affidavit was insufficient to give the court jurisdiction to proceed because it does not state the facts necessary to bring the case within the provisions of the aforesaid section. In this behalf he refers to the case of Henley v. Superior Court, 162 Cal. 240, 121 Pac. 921. That case holds that an affidavit which merely states that the person named "is so far addicted to the intemperate use of stimulants as to have lost the power of self-control," and states no other facts tending to show the truth of such allegation, is insufficient to give the court jurisdiction to proceed. That was a proceeding in prohibition, and the writ was issued in accordance with this conclusion. In the present case the affidavit not only contains the allegation above quoted, but proceeds to allege that Liggett has been addicted to the excessive use of intoxicating liquors for more than five years last past and has been continuously intoxicated for six months preceding the making of the affidavit. Whether the additional facts tend to show the truth of the first allegation or not, it cannot be denied that they do show that the patient to be examined is "subject to dipsomania or inebriety," and this is sufficient to bring him within the purview of the statute and give the court jurisdiction to proceed.

We think the record sufficiently shows, so far as a proceeding in habeas corpus is concerned, that a copy of the order fixing the time and place of hearing was actually served upon the petitioner, and that he was present at such hearing. We find no sufficient reason for any further consideration of the case.

The petition for a writ of habeas corpus is denied.

We concur: SHURTLEFF, J.; WILBUR, J.; SLOANE, J.; RICHARDS, Justice pro tem.; WASTE, J.; LENNON, J.

187 Cal. 437

Ex parte CULVER. (Cr. 2362.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 1, 1921.)

1. Habeas corpus ⇨96—Sufficiency of complaint before justice of the peace can be determined.

In habeas corpus proceedings the court can determine whether or not a complaint in a criminal proceeding in the justice's court states facts sufficient to constitute a public offense.

2. Habeas corpus ⇨96—Complaint before justice of the peace liberally construed.

In determining in habeas corpus proceedings the sufficiency of the complaint before a justice of the peace to charge a criminal offense, the greatest liberality of construction must be indulged and if the complaint states facts which constitute a crime, it is not invalid because other irrelevant facts are stated, or because the law violated by the alleged acts is inaccurately described.

3. Criminal law ⇨252(3), 304(9)—Court takes judicial notice of statutes, and they need not be alleged in complaint.

A court takes judicial notice of the statutes of a state, so that it is unnecessary that their titles or terms be set forth in a complaint before a justice of the peace charging a misdemeanor.

4. Criminal law ⚡252(3)—Stating wrong statute does not invalidate complaint.

If the facts stated in a complaint before a justice of the peace constitute a crime under a particular law, an allegation that they violate another and different law may be disregarded as immaterial.

5. Health ⚡24—Board can quarantine contacts with, and carriers of, contagious diseases.

Under Pol. Code, §§ 2979, 2979a, and the Public Health Act, the state board of health can order the quarantine of persons who have come in contact with cases and carriers of contagious diseases.

6. Health ⚡40—Removing quarantine placard is misdemeanor.

Under Public Health Act, §§ 13, 21, as amended by St. of 1911, pp. 565, 568, the removal of a quarantine placard affixed to a place of residence under the orders of the state board of health is a misdemeanor, so that a complaint, charging such removal states an offense, though it alleged the act to be a violation of a rule of the state board of health, which is a misdemeanor under Pen. Code, § 377a, regardless of whether it stated a violation of the latter act.

7. Health ⚡37—Person may be quarantined by confinement in place of residence.

The accepted method of quarantining a person under Public Health Act, § 13, as amended by St. 1911, pp. 565, 568, is by confining him to the house in which he is living, so that the quarantine of the person and of his residence are not distinguished in the statute, and the removal of a quarantine placard from such residence by a person other than the one quarantined is a misdemeanor.

8. Health ⚡40—Allegation quarantined person resided at place shows she was an occupant.

An allegation in a complaint, charging the unlawful removal of a quarantine placard, that the defendant's niece, who was the person quarantined, resided at the place mentioned, may, under the liberal rules of construction applied to complaints before a justice of the peace in habeas corpus proceedings, be interpreted as meaning that the niece was an occupant of the place.

In Bank.

Application by Laura Culver for writ of habeas corpus, prayed to be directed to the Sheriff of Alameda County to secure the release of the petitioner from custody after conviction of violating regulations of the public health authorities. Petitioner remanded to custody.

See, also, 195 Pac. 1055.

Chas. C. Boynton, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Ezra W. Decoto, Dist. Atty., of Oakland, and Frances Wilson Kidd, Deputy Dist. Atty., of Berkeley, for respondent.

LENNON, J. In the justice's court of the city of Berkeley, county of Alameda, petitioner, Laura Culver, was convicted on a complaint purporting to charge her with the commission of a misdemeanor. She was fined, with the alternative of imprisonment, and, accordingly, upon refusing to pay the fine, was taken into custody and imprisoned by the sheriff of Alameda county. Petitioner subsequently applied to this court for a writ of habeas corpus, and was released on bail pending a determination of this proceeding.

In his return to the writ the sheriff of Alameda county, the respondent herein, raised several objections to a consideration by this court of the merits of petitioner's application for the writ. However, inasmuch as respondent apparently abandoned reliance upon these preliminary objections at the oral argument and counsel for petitioner and respondent addressed their discussion solely to the merits of the case both at the oral argument and in the briefs filed subsequent to the oral argument, any opposition to a hearing on the merits must be held to have been withdrawn. The first point before this court is therefore the contention that the imprisonment of petitioner is unlawful for the reason that the complaint does not charge the commission of any act constituting a criminal offense.

The complaint herein alleges that: The state board of health issued an order directing the quarantine of petitioner's niece, who was a minor child residing at petitioner's home in Berkeley, for the reason that said child had come in contact with cases and carriers of diphtheria. Upon receiving this order of the state board, a police officer of the city of Berkeley affixed a placard on petitioner's premises reading:

"Diphtheria Contact

"These premises are declared to be in a state of quarantine. All persons are forbidden to leave or enter these premises or to remove any article therefrom without the permission of the Health Officer. Persons removing this notice will be prosecuted."

Petitioner removed the placard from the premises in the presence of the police officer. Such conduct, the complaint charges, constituted a misdemeanor under section 377a of the Penal Code, which provides:

"Every person who after notice shall violate, or who, upon the demand of any public health officer, shall refuse or neglect to conform to any rule, order or regulation prescribed by the state board of health respecting the quarantine, or disinfection of persons, animals, things or places, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor."

[1] It is true, as petitioner contends, that it is a settled rule in habeas corpus proceedings that a court may determine whether or not a complaint in a justice's court in a criminal proceeding states facts sufficient to constitute a public offense. Ex parte Kearny, 55 Cal. 212; Ex parte Greenall, 153 Cal. 767, 770, 96 Pac. 804; Matter of Ah Sing, 156 Cal. 349, 104 Pac. 448.

[2] However, the rule is also well established that in determining the sufficiency of such a complaint the greatest liberality of construction must be indulged; if the complaint states facts which constitute a crime, it will not be held insufficient because other facts are stated which are irrelevant or immaterial, or because the law violated by the alleged acts is inaccurately described therein. Ex parte Williams, 121 Cal. 330, 53 Pac. 706.

[3, 4] A court takes judicial notice of the statutes of the state and it is unnecessary that their titles or terms be set forth in the complaint. If the facts stated constitute a crime under a particular law, an allegation in a complaint that the acts in question are a violation of another and different law may be disregarded as immaterial, for it does not alter the nature of the acts charged nor prevent them from constituting a crime. Consequently, it is not essential that the acts alleged to have been committed by petitioner shall have been violative of a "rule, order or regulation prescribed by the state board of health," so as to amount to a misdemeanor under section 377a of the Penal Code. If the tearing down of the placard under the circumstances alleged in the complaint constituted a misdemeanor under any statute of the state, the complaint must be held to charge the commission of a public offense.

[5] There can be no doubt but that, by virtue of the broad power conferred by sections 2979 and 2979a of the Political Code and by the "Public Health Act," the state board of health has power to order the quarantine of persons who have come in contact with cases and carriers of contagious diseases "whenever in the judgment of the said board such action shall be deemed necessary to protect and preserve the public health."

[6] Section 13 of the so-called "Public Health Act" (Stats. 1907, p. 893; amended, Stats. 1911, pp. 565, 568), provides certain rules governing cases of quarantine. Rule 1 provides, among other things, that, with respect to quarantine, the local health authorities must follow all general and special rules, regulations, and orders of the state board of health. Rule 3 reads as follows:

"When any building, house, structure, or part thereof, or tent or other place, is quarantined because of a contagious, infectious or communicable disease, said local health boards or chief executive health officer shall cause to be firmly fastened, in the most conspicuous place upon such house, building, tent or other place, a placard or flag, upon which is printed the name of the disease, in plain and legible letters of at least two and one-half inches in length. This placard or flag must not be removed by any person except the health officer or his deputy and in no case until the premises have been thoroughly disinfected."

Section 21 of the said act provides that—

"Any person violating any of the provisions of this act * * * shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. * * *"

In the instant case, upon receiving an order from the state board of health directing that petitioner's niece be quarantined, the local authorities affixed to the place of residence of petitioner's niece a placard conforming to the provisions of rule 3, above quoted. If the quarantining of these premises was a proper act in pursuance of the order received from the state board of health, then petitioner's act in tearing down the placard was punishable as a misdemeanor under the "Public Health Act."

[7] In this connection petitioner points out the distinction between the quarantining of a place and quarantining a person. There may be cases in which buildings are quarantined, as distinguished from persons. For instance, where smallpox patients have been removed from a building to a pesthouse the building itself should be quarantined until disinfected, but this does not alter the fact that the ordinary method of quarantining persons is by confining them to their residences and by giving notice to the people outside and inside that there is to be no going out and coming in. It is perfectly apparent from a consideration of the quarantine rules incorporated in the "Public Health Act," section 13 (Stats. 1911, pp. 565, 568), that this statute recognizes that the method of quarantining a person is to quarantine the place in which he lives. Otherwise the quarantine is spoken of as an arrest of the person. Thus, rule 1, requiring quarantine in case of certain contagious diseases and a report thereof to be sent to the secretary of the state board of health, mentions only "cases" of quarantine. Rule 2, likewise, provides that—

Diseases "shall be isolated whenever in the opinion of the state board of health, its secretary, or the local board of health or health officer, isolation is necessary to protect the public health."

In other words, both sections provide for the isolation of the disease, without distinguishing between the quarantining of place or person. Rule 4 provides for the disinfection of certain parts of the house when persons have been quarantined therein. Rule 8 provides:

"Every person subject to quarantine, residing, or being, in a quarantined building, house, structure or tent, shall not go beyond the lot upon which such building, house, structure or tent is situated. * * *"

In fact, all the rules, from 1 to 8, inclusive, clearly disclose that the accepted method of quarantining a person is by confining him to the house in which he is living.

[8] Section 2979 of the Political Code provides that the state board may establish and maintain places of quarantine or isolation, but how can it be seriously contended that a mere order directing that a person be quarantined is intended to mean that that person shall be arrested and placed in such an isolation hospital, rather than be quarantined by being confined to his residence? Of course, taking possession of the person in the exercise of the powers of the state over health matters would be a method of quarantine, but obviously that cannot be said to be the only method of quarantining a person when the statute clearly indicates that when a place is quarantined the people therein are confined thereto and cannot leave. For instance, in the case at bar, if the state board of health had ordered the quarantining of the place of residence of the petitioner, it would thereby have subjected the proceedings to the very absurdity which petitioner contends for, namely, that the place was quarantined and the person was not. The word "quarantine" in defined in 32 Cyc. 1286, as follows:

"Quarantine as a verb" means "to keep persons, when suspected of having contracted or been exposed to an infectious disease, out of a community, or to confine them to a given place therein, and to prevent intercourse between them and the people generally of such community."

Now, the order of the state board of health was to quarantine the person of the petitioner's niece. This meant that she must be confined to a given place and kept out of the community. This was obviously accomplished by putting the appropriate notice upon the house which she occupied as required by statute. The allegation that the niece "resided" at the place mentioned may, under the liberal rules of construction above referred to, be interpreted in connection with the whole complaint as meaning that she was an "occupant" thereof.

It follows that the placard quarantining the premises was affixed in pursuance of the order of the state board of health, and that petitioner's act in tearing it down was a misdemeanor under the Public Health Act.

In view of the fact that the act was a violation of section 13 of the Public Health Act, it is unnecessary to pass upon the question raised by petitioner concerning the constitutionality of section 377a of the Penal Code.

The writ is discharged, and petitioner remanded.

We concur: SHAW, C. J.; WILBUR, J.; SLOANE, J.

187 Cal. 469

FEDERAL MUTUAL LIABILITY INS. CO.
v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al. (S. F. 9919.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 5, 1921.)

1. Master and servant — 405(5)—Minor compensation claimant shown to be member of deceased employee's family.

In a proceeding for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act for the death of an employee, evidence held to show that claimant, the child of an undivorced woman living with deceased as his wife, was a member of deceased's family in good faith and wholly supported by him, so as to justify an award.

2. Master and servant — 388—Child's right to compensation for death not dependent on legal liability for support.

Notwithstanding Civ. Code, §§ 205, 206, making a father legally liable for the support of a minor child, a child who received her support wholly from another man, with whom her undivorced mother was living, and was a member of his family in good faith at his death in his employment, is within Workmen's Compensation Act, § 14; the benefit of the act not depending on legal liability for support.

Shaw, C. J., dissenting.

In Bank.

Certiorari to review an order of the Industrial Accident Commission.

Proceeding by Bertha Fern Gnash for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act for the death of one William G. Thompson, opposed by W. C. Crowell, employer, and the Federal Mutual Liability Insurance Company, insurer. An order awarding compensation was made by the Industrial Accident Commission, and the insurer brings certiorari. Award affirmed.

Cooley, Crowley & Lachmund, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

A. E. Graupner, of San Francisco, for respondents.

LAWLOR, J. This is a proceeding in certiorari upon a petition by the Federal Mutual Liability Insurance Company to review the action of the Industrial Accident Commission in granting an award to one Bertha Fern Gnash as compensation for the death of one William G. Thompson.

Cassander K. Gnash and George Gnash, parents of Bertha Fern Gnash, the claimant, were married in Kansas in 1896 and later moved to California. The record shows that Gnash was a poor provider and that the members of his family were compelled to support themselves to a large extent. He was in the habit of going away and leaving them for weeks at a time, and finally left them permanently. After that Mrs. Gnash supported herself by various kinds of work until October, 1917, when she went to Yermo to do housework and cooking for the deceased, William G. Thompson, on his ranch. She took Bertha Gnash, then six years old, with her. Later the three moved to a mine near Baxter, and at about that time, according to the testimony, the relationship between Thompson and Mrs. Gnash changed. He stopped giving her wages and began paying the expenses of herself and Bertha. Mrs. Gnash continued to do the housework and cooking. In May, 1918, Mrs. Gnash, with Thompson's co-operation, started proceedings to secure a divorce from Thompson, which suit was never determined. From that time Thompson and Mrs. Gnash lived together openly as husband and wife. Mrs. Gnash used the name "Mrs. Thompson," and Bertha was called "Bertha Thompson." Thompson supported them entirely, giving the money to Mrs. Gnash, who bought what she wanted for Bertha. In February, 1920, they were living in Redlands, and Thompson was working for one W. C. Crowell as a carpenter. On February 19, 1920, he fell off a scaffold, sustaining injuries from which he died. Mrs. Gnash petitioned for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act (Acts 1917, p. 831). It was stipulated that the injuries which caused Thompson's death arose out of and in the course of his employment; that his average earnings were $4.50 per day; that he was working six days per week; that any benefits to be awarded should be computed upon that basis; and that W. C. Crowell, the employer, was insured against risks under the Compensation Act by the petitioner, Federal Mutual Liability Insurance Company.

Upon the hearing Mrs. Gnash testified she was Thompson's wife and that Gnash was dead. She gave the date of her marriage to Thompson as November 28, 1917, and described a judge who, she said, performed the ceremony. After the hearing she confessed to the referee that her relationship with Thompson was meretricious. The referee, in an affidavit signed by himself, forwarded the information to the Industrial Accident Commission, and Mrs. Gnash abandoned all claim against petitioner on her own behalf. Bertha Gnash was awarded compensation in the sum of $4,889.98; the Commission finding that she was "a member of his [Thompson's] family in good faith and wholly supported by him." A rehearing was had upon application of the petitioner. At the rehearing Mrs. Gnash testified that she had not been married to Thompson, and described the relationship as she had confessed it to the referee to have been. The Industrial Accident Commission affirmed its former finding that Bertha Gnash was a member of decedent's family and entitled to compensation. The award was affirmed, except that it was reduced to $4,001.40, the correct sum when computed at the stipulated rate of $4.50 per day. Petitioner thereupon brought this proceeding.

[1] 1. In support of the contention that the award should be annulled, petitioner advances two arguments. The first of these is that—

"Mrs. Gnash was an employee of Thompson in domestic service, and therefore neither she nor Bertha Fern Gnash was a member of his 'family or household,' within the meaning of the Compensation Act. * * * Mrs. Gnash went to work as a cook, and that fact being established, and no criminal or unlawful act being proved, it is presumed that this relationship of employer and employee continued between Thompson and Mrs. Gnash until his death."

It is insisted that the record refutes any claim that the relation of employer and employee was terminated; that Mrs. Gnash testified she went to the mine to work for Thompson as a cook; that Mrs. Gnash's married daughter, Mrs. Grace Hart, testified that Mrs. Gnash did Thompson's work for him and in return received her own support and that of Bertha Gnash; that the change in method of payment, or the fact of cohabitation between Thompson and Mrs. Gnash, did not alter the relation of employer and employee. Respondents assert that—

"The facts of the case, however, show that there came a time in the relationship between the employee [Thompson] and Mrs. Gnash when she ceased to be his employee and he ceased to be her employer, and when they began to cohabit. When the period of cohabitation began, wages ceased, and the employee commenced to support Mrs. Gnash and her child as members of his household and on a distinctly different relationship from that which existed at the time that Mrs. Gnash first went to the employee. * * * After they reached the mine, a different relationship commenced. There they began to cohabit, and the employee paid the expenses for the woman and the child, apparently without regard to the amount thereof. * * * In spite of the contentions of petitioner, the record distinctly shows beyond all doubt that Thompson and Mrs. Gnash lived together as man and wife, and that he supported Mrs. Gnash and her child as he would his own wife and daughter."

In our opinion the evidence sustains respondent's contention and the implied findings of the Industrial Accident Commission that at the time of decedent's death his relations with Mrs. Gnash were not those of an employer. It is true that Mrs. Gnash testified she went to the mine as a cook, and that her daughter testified Mrs. Gnash received her support from Thompson in return for her services. However, we think the evidence shows there was more of a change in their relationship than might be implied from the fact that Thompson stopped paying Mrs. Gnash wages, or, indeed, from the fact of the meretricious relationship. Mrs. Gnash testified:

"No, he never paid me wages after I went to the mining camp.

"Q. Out on the desert? A. Yes.

"Q. Did he pay the expenses? A. He paid the expenses.

"Q. To whom? A. To myself and my little girl. * * *

"Q. When did you first become known and call yourself Thompson? A. After we visited the lawyer's office to file the divorce suit. * * *

"Q. You never were married to Mr. Thompson? A. No.

"Q. Was he agreeable to having you use his name, Thompson? A. He asked me to on account of gossiping tongues.

"Q. What did Bertha call him; how did she address him?" And, addressing the child, she asked: "A. Daddy, didn't you?" Bertha Fern Gnash nods head affirmatively. * * *

"Q. Where was Guy Gnash living during 1919 and the first part of 1920? A. With Mr. Thompson and I.

"Q. Wherever you were? A. We were in Elsinore.

"Q. In Elsinore and Redlands? A. Yes.

"Q. He was living with you as one of the family? A. Yes. * * * No; it was after he was married; he and his wife lived here with us, on 115 Church, for a little while. * * *

"Q. Was he living at home? A. Yes.

"Q. With you? A. Yes.

"Q. Did you charge him board and lodging? A. Yes, surely; he paid his way."

Mrs. Gnash stated that her son did not contribute to her support or Bertha Gnash's "after Mr. Thompson started keeping us, supporting us, because it was not necessary." She further testified:

"Q. Did you and Mr. Thompson have any plans, any expectations of getting married? A. We surely did.

"Q. Had you discussed that with him? A. Yes.

"Q. And what did you intend to do? A. We intended to get married as soon as Mr. Maloney, after the suit was filed, but we just neglected sending in the rest of the money; in fact we bought some property which tied us up."

Guy Gnash, Mrs. Gnash's adult son, testified he met Thompson in 1917 on a train.

"Q. Was your mother then living with him? A. No, sir.

"Q. Was she working for him? A. Yes; I believe she was working for him. Yes; she was working for him. * * *

"Q. Was that the time [when they were at Afton] when your mother began living with Mr. Thompson? A. No. I don't think so.

"Q. When did she begin living with him? A. I think that's when they went to Elsinore.

"Q. She was working for him in Afton? A. She was working for him in Afton."

It thus appears that in the latter part of their association Thompson paid the expenses and supported Mrs. Gnash and Bertha Gnash; that it was at his request they assumed his name; that he was assisting Mrs. Gnash to secure a divorce; that he intended to marry her when the divorce was obtained; that they bought property together; that Mrs. Gnash's son lived "at home" with them as "one of the family"; and that the difference in the relationship between them while Mrs. Gnash was "working for" Thompson and while she was "living with him" was clearly recognized by Mrs. Gnash's son. It is idle to assume that when he spoke of his mother as "living with" Thompson he meant anything else than what the words import. In our opinion these facts shows that at the time of Thompson's death Mrs. Gnash was a member of his household and supported as such, and that the money Thompson gave her was not paid as wages but was given for herself and Bertha Gnash, as if spent by the head of a family for those in the household.

Moore Shipbuilding Corporation v. Industrial Accident Commission, 196 Pac. 257, 13 A. L. R. 676, was a case in which the facts were similar to those in the case at bar. There a woman was living with an employee who was killed, and with them lived the claimant, the woman's young daughter. In that case the court said:

"Again, the word 'household' is variously used to designate people, generally, who live together in the same house, including the family servants, and boarders; or it may be used as including only members of the family relation. It is probable that the two terms are coupled together in this statute to indicate that they are used synonymously, the 'family' to include only those of the household who are thus intimately associated, the 'household' to exclude those of the family not living in the home. There can be no doubt that Bauer, Mrs. Miller, and the little girl constituted a family or household. They were living together in all the interdependency * * * of man and wife and their legitimate offspring. The only thing to exclude Mrs. Miller from the benefit of this relation was lack of good faith."

We think the facts of the case at bar, as already brought out, show that the three people were living together as a family and were members of one household; since it is held in Moore Shipbuilding Corporation v. Industrial Accident Commission, supra, that people living together in such a relationship may constitute a household.

[2] 2. Petitioner's next contention is that Bertha Fern Gnash, being a legal dependent of her father, George Gnash, could not legally be a total dependent of the deceased, Will Thompson. This claim is based upon the fact that sections 205 and 206 of the Civil Code make a father legally liable for the support of a minor child, and that section 14, subdivision a, of the Compensation Act, raises a conclusive presumption that a child under the age of 18 is wholly dependent "upon the parent with whom he or they are living at the time of the death of such parent or for whose maintenance such parent was legally liable at the time of death."

Even if George Gnash is legally liable for the support of Bertha Gnash, we are not prepared to hold that this precludes her from becoming wholly a dependent on Thompson within the meaning of the Compensation Act. Section 14 of that act provides that—

"(a) The following shall be conclusively presumed to be wholly dependent for support upon a deceased employee: (1) A wife upon a husband with whom she was living at the time of his death, or for whose support such husband was legally liable at the time of his death. (2) A child or children under the age of eighteen years or over said age, but physically or mentally incapacitated from earning, upon the parent with whom he or they are living at the time of the death of such parent or for whose maintenance such parent was legally liable at the time of death, there being no surviving dependent parent.

"(b) In all other cases, questions of entire or partial dependency and questions as to who constitute dependents and the extent of their dependency shall be determined in accordance with the fact, as the fact may be at the time of the injury of the employee.

"(c) No person shall be considered a dependent of any deceased employee unless in good faith a member of the family or household of such employee. * * *

It will be noted that subdivision (a) does not provide generally, as contended by petitioner, that a child is conclusively presumed to be dependent on the parent who is legally liable for his support. That subdivision provides that when a child's parent is killed, and no dependent parent survives, the child is presumed to have been dependent on the deceased parent. Such a situation is not presented here, for, even if it had been Bertha Gnash's father who was killed still she had a dependent parent surviving—Mrs. Gnash (Civ. Code, §§ 155, 174, 175)—who admittedly has no claim under the Compensation Act because of Thompson's death. The case, therefore, falls within subdivision (b), which provides that in all other cases dependency shall be determined in accordance with the fact as it may exist at the time of the injury.

In Moore Shipbuilding Corporation v. Industrial Accident Commission, supra, there was a finding that Mrs. Miller's husband, the claimant's father, was dead. An examination of the record shows that this finding was made in the first hearing of the cause, in spite of the testimony of Mrs. Miller to the effect that at the time she was living with Bauer she knew she was then the wife of another man. Upon the rehearing, however, which was a hearing de novo, there was no such finding. In that case the effect of Miller's legal liability for the claimant's support was not discussed. However, the fact that Bauer was not legally liable for her support was considered, and the court said:

"The need of relief from the deprivation caused by the death of the employee and the questions of public policy involved rest upon the fact that the employee has in good faith taken into his home and assumed the support of one without other means of subsistence. The hardship to the individual dependent, and the incidental burden to the insurer or to society from the death of a breadwinner are no different whether the maintenance of the dependent has been voluntarily and gratuitously assumed, or legally imposed.

"As has been pointed out, the benefits of this law are not provided as an indemnity for negligent acts committed or as compensation for legal damages sustained, but is an economic insurance measure to prevent a sudden break in the contribution of the worker to society by his accidental death in the course of his employment. From this economic standpoint it makes no difference whether the workman's earnings are being distributed to those whose support he has voluntarily assumed, or to those who are legally entitled to such support. In either case they are the reliance of dependent members of society. The only difficulty is that where there is no legal dependent it is harder to determine that the contribution of support has been made so as to constitute the recipient a dependent in good faith. * * *

"There are three vital conditions required to establish dependency in this case under the Compensation Act: First, was Ida Miller actually dependent upon the decedent for her support; second, was she a member of his family or household; third, was the relation or connection sustained in good faith?"

It is clear both from the wording of the act and from that case that the benefit of the statute does not depend upon legal liability for support. As pointed out, there is no presumption that because Gnash was legally liable for Bertha Gnash's support she was wholly dependent upon him, within the meaning of the Compensation Act, and if she were in fact a dependent of Thompson, the effect of his death upon her is the same whether she had a father who was legally liable for her support or not. If she was in fact a dependent of Thompson, and was in good faith a member of his household, she is entitled to compensation, whether or not her father was living.

It was found by the Industrial Accident Commission that—

"Applicant Bertha Fern Gnash was at the time of the death of the employee in good faith a member of his household, and was totally dependent upon him for support at said time, within the terms of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act of 1917."

As we have shown, Mrs. Gnash was not an employee of Thompson at the time of his death, and the money paid for Bertha Gnash's support was not paid to Mrs. Gnash as wages. Concerning Bertha's position in Thompson's household, Mrs. Gnash testified:

"Have they [Mrs. Hart and her husband] made any gifts of money, clothes, or anything else to Bertha? A. Some clothes for Bertha since Mr. Thompson was killed.

"Q. Before Mr. Thompson was killed? A. No; not before; Mr. Thompson supported her. * * *

"Q. Did Mr. Thompson display any special affection for Bertha? A. Well, no; nothing more than a father, of course; he showed her more fatherly love than her own did, a whole lot, or ever did, as far as supporting her. * * *

"Q. Where did you get the money and the funds that you used to buy the clothing for Bertha and yourself since you were living with Mr. Thompson? A. From Mr. Thompson.

"Q. Did he understand that his money was being used to support Bertha that way? A. Yes.

"Q. To buy her clothing? A. Most assuredly.

"Q. Did he ever buy any school books? A. No, because books were furnished; he did not have to buy school books."

Bertha Gnash testified:

"Q. Do you know where you got your dresses and clothes that you wore; where did they come from? A. My father, Mr. Thompson.

"Q. What did you call Mr. Thompson? A. Father.

"Q. What is your name? A. Bertha Fern Thompson.

"Q. Was Mr. Thompson good to you? A. Yes."

Mrs. Grace Hart testified:

"Q. Do you know whether or not she [Bertha Gnash] has recognized Mr. Thompson, the deceased, as her father? A. Yes.

"Q. Did she look upon him as her father? A. She did.

"Q. Do you know whether she ever knew the difference? A. She never. * * *

"Q. Do you happen to know whether Mr. Gnash contributed anything to your mother for her support or for the support of Bertha since he has been away? A. No.

"Q. He has not? A. He has not."

Guy Gnash testified further:

"Q. Did you have occasion to observe how Mr. Thompson provided for your mother? A. He provided well for her.

"Q. Who else lived with them? A. Bertha Fern.

"Q. Did he provide for her? A. He did.

"Q. Did she consider him her father; did she treat him as though she thought he was her father? A. Yes; she did

"Q. What did she call him; what was her term? A. Sometimes she called him 'Dad.' * * *

"Q. You knew that your sister Bertha was called Bertha Fern Thompson? A. Yes."

This evidence shows clearly that Thompson treated Bertha as if she were his own child and that he provided for her as a father might. It is ample to support the finding of the Industrial Accident Commission that Bertha Fern Gnash was wholly dependent on Thompson and was a member of his household. There can be no question but that she regarded him as a father and that she was in good faith a member of his household.

Petitioner has cited Farrington v. Lachman and Jacobi, 1 I. A. C. (Part I) 116, a case wherein a father, whose children were being cared for by another, was killed, and the children were allowed compensation. It appears the mother of the children had died before the father. There being no surviving dependent parent, the case fell squarely within subdivision (a) of section 14 of the Compensation Act, and the children were to be conclusively presumed wholly dependent upon the father. Wilcut v. Cudahy Packing Company, 4 I. A. C. 308, a case of a deserted wife, also came within subdivision (a) of section 14, and in Aldinger v. Ransome Concrete Co., 1 I. A. C. (Part I) 151, the Commission found the applicant's mother to have been, as a fact, an employee of the deceased, with whom she was living, and that the mother and not the deceased supported the child. In the case at bar the claimant's mother was not an employee of the decedent, but, as we have pointed out, was a member of his household.

The award is affirmed.

We concur: SLOANE, J.; SHURTLEFF, J.; WILBUR, J.; LENNON, J.; WASTE, J.

SHAW, C. J. I dissent. I do not believe that persons living together in the relation shown in this case can justly or properly be considered as constituting a lawful family or household, within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act. This court has heretofore decided that such persons may be a lawful household, but I did not concur therein. On such a question of ordinary morality I cannot defer to or follow that decision.

187 Cal. 500

OBERKOTTER v. WOOLMAN. (L. A. 6787.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 9, 1921.)

1. Appeal and error ⇨422—Appeal not dismissed as one from order sustaining demurrer and not from judgment rendered.

An appeal will not be dismissed as one taken from an order sustaining demurrer, instead of from the judgment, though notice of appeal states that appeal was from judgment rendered on specified date, which was date on which demurrer was sustained, and though judgment of dismissal was not made until subsequent date, where there was but one judgment entered in the case, especially where notice correctly gave book, page, and date of the entry of the judgment.

2. Libel and slander ⇨80—Complaint held to state a cause of action for slander.

Complaint alleging that plaintiff was a skilled teacher, that defendant publicly announced that "we are going to drop" enumerated persons, including plaintiff, from the staff of school-teachers, and that "these changes have been recommended to the school board by" a named principal, "for the reason that he considers these positions, as they exist, weak spots in the public school system of instruction," that such statements were false, malicious, and unprivileged, so far as the plaintiff was concerned, and that the defendant thereby publicly accused the plaintiff of being unfit and incompetent to be employed in his profession, held to state a cause of action for slander, under Civ. Code, § 46, subds. 3, 5.

3. Libel and slander ⇨88—Complaint held to allege general and special damages.

In action for slander, allegation that the false, malicious, and unprivileged publication by defendant exposed plaintiff to hatred, contempt, ridicule, and obloquy, and were made by the defendant to so expose him, and that by reason thereof plaintiff has suffered great mental anguish, and has been greatly injured and prejudiced in his reputation as a school-teacher, and has lost and will continue to lose great gains and profits which would otherwise have accrued to him, in the sum of $55,000, held a sufficient allegation of general and special damages.

4. Limitation of actions ⇨127(7)—Amended complaint pleading slander, held not to change cause of action.

Where original complaint, filed within period of limitations under Code Civ. Proc. § 340, alleged that defendant communicated false and malicious words to a reporter of a certain newspaper, knowing and intending that they would be published therein, and that they were so published, amended complaint, alleging that defendant made false and unprivileged communication to such reporter, knowing and intending that it would be given further circulation through the public press, held not barred by limitations, though filed more than one year after alleged utterance, since the amended complaint did not change the cause of action; both complaints pleading a cause of action for slander, under Civ. Code, § 46.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; T. L. Lewis, El. A. Luce, and C. N. Andrews, Judges.

Action by Lewis M. Oberkotter against Claude Woolman. Judgment of dismissal, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

Wynne S. Staley and Marcus W. Robbins, both of San Diego, for appellant.

Stephen Connell and Richard M. Kew, both of San Diego, for respondent.

WASTE, J. The plaintiff brought this action to recover damages from the defendant for alleged slander. The demurrer to the second amended complaint was sustained, without leave to amend. Judgment dismissing the action followed, from which judgment this appeal was taken.

[1] The respondent makes a preliminary objection, and seeks a dismissal of the appeal upon the ground that it was taken from the order sustaining the demurrer, which is not appealable. The notice of appeal states that the plaintiff appeals from the judgment rendered on the 27th day of September, 1920. While the court sustained the demurrer on that date, the judgment of dismissal was not made until September 29th. It is this discrepancy upon which the respondent relies. Since it clearly appears that but one judgment was entered in the case, the defect is one which would not invalidate the appeal, were there no further reference to the judgment (Wilson v. Union Iron Works Dry Dock Co., 167 Cal. 539-541, 140 Pac. 250); but the notice of appeal gives the correct book, page, and date of entry in the judgment records of the court. There is no merit in the objection.

[2] The demurrer, which interposed the general ground of want of sufficient facts and the bar of the statute of limitations, should have been overruled. It is alleged in the complaint that the plaintiff was, and is, a teacher in colleges, academies, and graded schools, having the requisite skill and qualifications proper and necessary for the practice of his profession. He had always conducted himself with diligence, industry, and propriety, and had acquired and was acquiring gain and profits from the pursuit of his calling. At the time of the alleged slander he was the principal of one of the public schools of the city of San Diego. The defendant, who is alleged to have great influence by reason of his wealth, standing, and an official position, the exact nature of which is not clearly stated, intending to bring the plaintiff into public contempt, infamy, and disgrace among his neighbors and citizens generally, particularly all persons interested in the cause of public education in San Diego and other portions of the United States, and to cause it to be believed that the plaintiff was a person of bad character, and unfit and unqualified to be employed in his calling, business, and profession, and to cause the plaintiff to be deposed, and lose his employment, and to be deprived of his livelihood, and to prevent plaintiff from being employed as teacher, said and uttered to a reporter of a newspaper published in San Diego certain slanderous, unprivileged and uncalled-for statements, knowing and intending that the same would be given further circulation, through the public press of San Diego and elsewhere. The statement was as follows:

"We are going to drop at least three principals and one department head of the high school from the staff of city school-teachers at the close of the current school year. These are William D. Edwards, principal of the Brooklyn, Archibald M. Fosdick, principal of the Florence, and Lewis M. Oberkotter, principal of the Grant, and W. S. Staley, in charge of the commercial department of the high school. These changes have been recommended to the school board by Principal Guy V. Whaley, for the reason that he considers these positions, as they exist, weak spots in the public school system of instruction."

It is further alleged in the complaint that the charges and words uttered by the defendant were false, malicious, and unprivileged, so far as this plaintiff is concerned, and that the defendant thereby publicly accused the plaintiff of being unfit and incompetent to be employed in his profession as teacher, and intended to and did assert that he was not a fit and proper person to teach in the public schools of San Diego or elsewhere. Thus construed, the complaint states a cause of action. Ingraham v. Lyon, 105 Cal. 254-257, 38 Pac. 892; Schomberg v. Walker, 132 Cal. 224-227, 64 Pac. 290; Frolich v. McKiernan, 84 Cal. 177, 180, 24 Pac. 114. Slander, under our law, as applied to the facts of this case, is a false and unprivileged publication, other than libel, which tends to directly injure one in respect to his office, profession, or business, either by imputing to him general disqualification in those respects which the office or other occupation peculiarly requires, or by imputing something with reference to his office, profession, trade, or business that has a natural tendency to lessen its profit, or which by natural consequence causes actual damage. Civ. Code, § 46, subs. 3 and 5. Tested by this provision of the law, we think the accusation of the defendant that the plaintiff was about to be dropped from the staff of city school-teachers of the city of San Diego, for the reason that the city superintendent considered him a "weak spot in the public school system of instruction," tended naturally, necessarily and proximately to produce one, at least, of the results mentioned in section 46 of the Code, in that it imputed to plaintiff "a general disqualification" in those respects which the profession of teaching peculiarly requires. Swan v. Thompson, 124 Cal. 193, 199, 56 Pac. 878; Tonini v. Cevalco, 114 Cal. 266, 273, 46 Pac. 103; Bettner v. Hold, 70 Cal. 270, 275, 11 Pac. 713.

[3] The plaintiff also alleges that he has suffered actual damages. He avers that the false, malicious, and unprivileged publication by the defendant exposed him to hatred, contempt, ridicule, and obloquy, and were made by the defendant to so expose him, and that by reason of the slander he, the plaintiff, has suffered great mental anguish, and has been, and is, and from henceforth will be, greatly injured and prejudiced in his reputation as a school-teacher, and has lost, and will continue to lose and be deprived of, great gains and profits which would otherwise have accrued to him in his calling, occupation, and profession, to his damage in the sum of $55,000. The prayer of the complaint is for actual damages in that amount and for punitive recovery as well. Here was a sufficient allegation of general and special damages, which, if proved, would entitle the plaintiff to recover. Turner v. Hearst, 115 Cal. 394, 399, 47 Pac. 129. It requires no argument to show that the complaint, read as a whole, constitutes a cause of action. Waite v. San Fernando Pub. Co., 178 Cal. 303, 306, 173 Pac. 591.

[4] The respondent contends that the plaintiff's original complaint is one for libel; that the second amended complaint, filed more than one year after the making of the statement by the defendant, sets up a new cause of action, to wit, slander, which is barred by section 340 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that an action for slander must be commenced within one year after the alleged utterance. There is nothing in the contention. The only difference in the two statements of the cause of action lies in the fact that in the original complaint it is asserted that the defendant, knowing and intending that the false and malicious words would be published in a certain newspaper, communicated them to a reporter of that paper, and they were so published, the article quoting the words of the defendant being given in full, while in the second amended complaint it is alleged that the false and unprivileged communication was made to the same party, the defendant knowing and intending that it would be given further circulation through the public press, the exact words of the defendant being set out. As finally amended the complaint did not materially, or at all, change the cause of action. Frost v. Witter, 132 Cal. 421, 425, 64 Pac. 705, 84 Am. St. Rep. 53. It has at all times been one based on slander. Civ. Code, § 46. For the foregoing reasons the demurrer to the second amended complaint should have been overruled.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded to the lower court, with instructions to overrule the demurrer to the second amended complaint, with a reasonable time accorded to the defendant within which to answer.

We concur: SHAW, C. J.; LENNON, J.; SLOANE, J.; WILBUR, J.; SHURTLEFF, J.; RICHARDS, Judge pro tem.

187 Cal. 505

TORR v. UNITED RAILROADS OF SAN FRANCISCO. (S. F. 8936.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 9, 1921.
Rehearing Denied Jan. 5, 1922.)

1. Damages ☞38—Injured person may recover for decreased earning capacity.

Injured person was entitled to recover for decreased earning capacity due to injuries.

2. Damages ☞186 — Finding that school-teacher did not lose any amount which she would have otherwise earned by reason of injuries held not supported by evidence.

In action for injuries to school-teacher, finding that she did not lose any amount by reason of injuries which she would have earned at her profession if injuries had not been sustained held not supported by evidence.

3. Damages ☞132(15) — $550 verdict for school-teacher who sustained permanent injuries, making her unable to teach for months at a time, held inadequate.

Where school-teacher, with earning capacity of $120 per month, sustained permanent injuries to spine and innominate, rendering her unable to teach school for long periods of time during the five years between the accident and the time of the trial, and where by reason thereof she was unable to work as a school-teacher during the year immediately before the trial, and was unable to do much of anything, verdict of $550 for damages for other than medical services and surgical appliances held inadequate.

4. Appeal and error ☞1013 — Judgment reversed for inadequacy of verdict, where actual loss of earning capacity exceeds total award for all causes.

The trial court has almost unlimited discretion in fixing and determining the damages for pain and suffering and permanent injury, but where the actual loss of earning capacity exceeds the total award for all causes, the appellate court must conclude that the court acted upon an erroneous view of the laws as to measure of damages, and will reverse the judgment.

5. Appeal and error ☞1172(5) — Appellate court cannot reverse judgment as to portion fixing amount, and affirm portion fixing liability.

Where verdict for personal injuries is grossly inadequate, the appellate court cannot merely reverse that portion of the judgment fixing the amount and affirm that portion fixing the liability of the defendant, but must reverse the judgment that the case may be retried.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; D. C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by Eva Torr against the United Railroads of San Francisco, a corporation. From judgment for plaintiff giving her insufficient relief, and from an order denying motion for new trial, she appeals. Reversed.

J. J. Dunne, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Wm. M. Cannon, Wm. M. Abbott, and Kingsley Cannon, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. The plaintiff having been injured September 23, 1910, by the negligence of the defendant in starting its street car while she was alighting therefrom, brought this action May 24, 1911, to recover $21,214 for the injuries alleged to have been received by her. The case was tried by the court without a jury on July 2, 1915. Findings of fact were made on December 24, 1915, and judgment was rendered December 27, 1915, in plaintiff's favor for $1,100, $550 of which was for medical services and surgical appliances and $550 for other damages. Plaintiff, being dissatisfied with the amount of the judgment, moved for a new trial, and, upon her motion being denied, March 30, 1916, appealed to this court from the judgment and order denying the new trial. The court found her injuries to be as follows:

"Her right arm was sprained, her left innominate was displaced; her spine was injured, and she sustained a severe nervous shock. Said injuries rendered plaintiff sick, and caused her to suffer pain and mental suffering. The court finds that said injuries to said innominate and said spine are permanent in their nature.

"(3) That by reason of said injuries plaintiff was obliged to and did employ the services of physicians and surgeons to treat her, thereby incurring an indebtedness and expense in the sum of $325, and expended $106.50, making a total of $431.50, which sum was and is the reasonable value of the services so rendered by said physicians and surgeons in the treatment of said injuries; and was obliged to and did expend the sum of $35 for medicines and liniments, which sum was and is the reasonable value thereof; and was obliged to and did expend the sum of $6 for arch braces for her feet, the further sum of $6.75 for special shoes, and the further sum of $18 for corsets, garters, and straps, which sums were and are the reasonable value of said articles; and was obliged to and did expend the sum of at least $52.75 for massage treatments in treating said injuries, which sum was and is the reasonable value of the services rendered in giving such massage treatments.

"(4) That at and prior to the date of said injuries, plaintiff was a school-teacher by profession, and then was, and prior thereto had been, earning as said school-teacher, a salary in the sum of $120 a month; that plaintiff did not lose any amount whatever, by reason of said injuries, which she would have earned at her said profession if said injuries had not been sustained.

"(5) That by reason of said injuries, and the pain and suffering endured by plaintiff therefrom, in addition to said sum hereinabove set forth, plaintiff has sustained damages in the sum of $550." (Italics ours.)

The direct and cross-examination of the witnesses who testified with reference to plaintiff's injuries cover over 250 pages of the transcript, and it would therefore be impossible to discuss the evidence in detail within the reasonable limits of an opinion. All of these witnesses, with the exception of one physician, Dr. B. F. McElroy, called by the defendant as an expert, testified on behalf of the plaintiff. Dr. B. F. McElroy was one of the physicians and surgeons of the defendant company. He had made no examination of the plaintiff, and did not testify with reference to her condition. His testimony was directed to the proposition that the injuries complained of by the plaintiff might not be the result of the accident, but might result from flat feet caused by her occupation or from other causes. The court, however, found that the injuries to plaintiff's spine and hip were caused by the accident, and by the finding that all the expenses for medical attendance incurred by her were the result of the accident, evidently disregarded the testimony advanced by this physician to the effect that her difficulties might have been due to other causes.

There is no conflict in the testimony of the plaintiff's witnesses as to the nature and character of the injuries received by her, or as to her condition before and after the injury. All agree that before the accident plaintiff was a high-school teacher in normal health and in full physical and mental vigor, with good endurance; that at all times after the accident her face showed signs of suffering; she looked ill; her demeanor changed; and she was often moved to tears over trivial matters, and complained constantly of suffering great pain. Her walk and carriage were affected; she dragged one foot slightly; she carried her head twisted to one side; and the degree of motion of the spine was considerably limited.

[1, 2] The plaintiff was entitled to recover for her decreased earning capacity due to her injuries. Storrs v. L. A. Traction Co., 134 Cal. 91, 66 Pac. 72; Kline v. Santa Barbara, etc., Ry. Co., 150 Cal. 741, 90 Pac. 125; Campbell v. Bradbury, 179 Cal. 364, 176 Pac. 685. The trial court found that the earning capacity of the plaintiff was $120 a month, but also found:

"That plaintiff did not lose any amount whatever, by reason of said injuries, which she would have earned at her said profession if said injuries had not been sustained." (Italics ours.)

This finding is not supported by the evidence. The plaintiff testified that she was unable to teach school for long periods of time, and that she did not teach school because she was unable to do so. Plaintiff contends that her earning capacity was reduced from $1,200 per annum to $200 per annum, and that during the five years preceding the trial she had actually suffered a loss of $5,000 because of her inability to work. For one year immediately before the trial she did not work as a school-teacher and was unable to do much of anything. She practically earned nothing. It is evident that the plaintiff lost from this source alone much more than was allowed her for all her injuries. The court seems to have been of the opinion that her failure to secure employment was not due to her injuries. While as we have said, this finding is not sustained by the evidence, if we assume that the fact is as found by the court that she did not lose any employment in her profession as a teacher because of her injuries, it was still the duty of the defendant to compensate her for her loss of time and decreased earning capacity. The court found that she was sick as a result of the accident. Plaintiff testified that she was ill for months. At one time she was ill for four months and unable to teach. If this is true she should have been allowed $480 for this loss. She testified that at another time she was in bed for several weeks; that she spent Thanksgiving and Christmas vacation in bed; that from the spring of 1913 to the time of the trial, almost two years, she was unable to teach school; and that she had earned almost nothing during that period.

[3] In the face of this testimony the allowance by the court for all her injuries was barely sufficient to pay her for the time lost in going to and from her physician's office, and not enough in all to compensate her for the time lost while she was sick in bed. It is clear that the compensation awarded the plaintiff was wholly inadequate.

[4, 5] We purposely refrain from expressing a conclusion as to the amount due plaintiff because of her decreased earning power, and for her loss of time and employment and her two permanent injuries and the attendant pain and mental anxiety; that is a matter to be determined on a new trial.

It is enough for us to say that the judgment is wholly inadequate to compensate plaintiff for the injuries found by the court to have been suffered by her and established by uncontradicted and overwhelming proof. We have not overlooked the fact that the trial court has almost unlimited discretion in fixing and determining the damages for pain and suffering and permanent injury, but where the actual loss of earning capacity exceeds the total award for all causes, we must conclude that the court acted upon an erroneous view of the law as to the measure of damages. It is not contended that the judge was actuated by passion or prejudice, but we are not limited to a consideration of results arising from such causes. Where it is manifest that under the express findings of the court, and the creditable and uncontradicted evidence in explanation thereof, that the allowance of damages is grossly inadequate to compensate for the injury due to decreased earning capacity, we will reverse the judgment, just as we would if the trial judge had rendered a judgment for $900 on a promissory note of $1,000. The court having determined the legal responsibility of the defendant, and having found the nature and extent of the injuries, and the effect of such injuries being disclosed by the uncontradicted evidence upon which the finding is based, we have the simple case of a legal obligation of the defendant established in an amount in excess of that allowed by the trial court to compensate for the loss. The plaintiff asks to have us reverse only that portion of the judgment fixing the amount, and affirm that portion fixing the liability of the defendant. This may not be done. The judgment is an entirety, and the case should be retried.

Judgment reversed.

We concur: SHAW, C. J.; SLOANE, J.; SHURTLEFF, J.; WASTE, J.; LENNON, J.

187 Cal. 481

MINIFIE et al. v. ROWLEY et al.
(S. F. 9318.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 6, 1921.
Rehearing Denied Jan. 5, 1922.)

1. Partnership ⚡258(6)—Action on note to partnership maintainable by executors of partner last dying without joining executors of other decedent.

An action to recover money due a firm being one which, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1585, the surviving partner could maintain without joining the executors of the deceased partner, it could, under section 1582, after death of both partners, be so maintained by the executors of the partner last dying.

2. Limitation of actions ⚡163(4)—Bar removed by payment of interest constituting acknowledgment, evidenced by writing.

Code Civ. Proc. § 360, requiring acknowledgment or promise to be "contained in some writing signed by the party to be charged," to take the case out of the bar of the statute, does not require the new or continuing contract to consist of a written acknowledgment or promise, but acknowledgment may still be by act, as payment of interest; such acknowledgment, however, must be evidenced by writing, and is so evidenced where the payment is accompanied by letter of the debtor, stating inclosed check of a certain amount is in payment of interest due creditor for a certain period on a loan of a certain amount.

3. Limitation of actions ⚡102(2)—Statute does not run against debt of executor to testator.

The appointment of a debtor of testator as his executor, whereupon Code Civ. Proc. § 1447, provides that the executor shall be liable for the debt as for so much money in his hands, when the debt becomes due, makes him, by reason of his fiduciary relation, continue liable for the money, irrespective of the running of the statute against the debt itself.

4. Corporations ⚡174—Conditions for holding corporation's obligations those of a particular person stated.

Before obligations of a corporation can be legally recognized as those of a particular individual, it must not only be influenced and governed by him, but there must be such a unity of interest and ownership that the individuality or separateness of him and it has ceased; and the facts must be such that an adherence to the fiction of the separate existence of the corporation would, under the circumstances, sanction a fraud or promote injustice.

5. Corporations ⚡174—Unity of interest and ownership such as to warrant holding corporation's obligations those of an individual.

That an individual has always been the owner and holder of all of its stock, excepting enough shares to qualify others to act as directors, not exceeding one to each, has always controlled the board and always been the representative of and the only person interested in the corporation, is enough to constitute the virtual identity of him and it, essential to hold its obligations his.

6. Corporations ⚡174—Debt in form that of corporations but in reality that of individual owning corporation treated as his to prevent inequitable result.

The fraud, to prevent which obligations of a corporation will be held those of an individual virtually identical with it because of unity of interest and ownership, need not be actual fraud, but it is enough that the dealings were in form with the corporation but in reality with the individual and that refusal to recognize this fact will bring about inequitable results; and so enough that the individual being indebted to testator gave a renewal note in the name of the corporation, and afterwards became executor of testator, so that treating the debt as his he, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1447, would not be relieved of liability by the subsequent running of the statute, whereas treating it as the debt of the corporation it would have become barred by limitations.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Action by Charles G. Minifie and another, executors of Samuel Jones, deceased, against Forrest S. Rowley and another. Judgment for defendants on the sustaining of demur-ners to the complaint, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed, with directions.

Percy E. Towne, Metson, Drew & Mackenzie and Heller, Powers & Ehrman, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

Mastick & Partridge and H. F. Chadbourne, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

LENNON, J. Demurrers to the complaint in the present action were sustained without leave to amend and a judgment was rendered in favor of defendants, from which plaintiffs appeal.

In the complaint, which is under attack, it is alleged that on July 8, 1907, defendant Forrest S. Rowley was indebted to the partnership of Jones & Givens in the sum of $10,000, the indebtedness being evidenced by two promissory notes of said defendant for the sum of $5,000 each, dated July 8, 1907. On January 3, 1910, Forrest S. Rowley, "for the purpose of renewing said notes of July 8, 1907, and for the purpose of continuing in existence the evidence of said indebtedness," delivered to said Jones & Givens a certain promissory note, executed by the Rowley Investment Company, for $10,000, due one day after date and bearing interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum from date until paid. For several years the Rowley Investment Company paid the interest on the note, making its last payment on January 6, 1914, by a check accompanied by a letter reading:

"San Francisco, Cal., January 6, 1914.

"Jones & Givens, 8th Floor Crocker Bldg., San Francisco, Calif.—Gentlemen: Herewith check 8889—Amount 100.00 in payment 3 months interest due you on $10,000 loan. That is to say interest from October 3, 1913, to January 3, 1914.

"Very truly yours,

"[Signed]

"The Rowley Investment Co. (Inc.)"

In 1913, Charles S. Givens, one of the members of the partnership which he'd the $10,000 note, died, and Samuel Jones, as surviving partner of the said firm of Jones & Givens, continued in possession of the partnership funds, securities, and assets, and engaged in the liquidation of the affairs of said copartnership. Prior to the completion of the liquidation, and also prior to the conclusion of the administration of the estate of Charles S. Givens, deceased, the surviving partner, Samuel Jones, died, on May 1, 1915. Subsequently plaintiffs, Charles G. Minifie and Ralph T. Jones, and defendant Forrest S. Rowley were appointed and qualified as executors of the will of Samuel Jones. The $10,000 note and the interest thereon falling due after January 3, 1914, remained unpaid. The present action for the amount of said note, and interest, was commenced January 20, 1919, by Charles G. Minifie and Ralph T. Jones, as executors of the will of Samuel Jones, deceased, against the Rowley Investment Company and Forrest S. Rowley, who refused to join as plaintiff.

[1] Both defendants demurred to the complaint upon the same grounds, eight in number. The first ground relied upon was that of misjoinder of parties in this respect: That the executors of the will of Samuel Jones, the last surviving partner, brought the action without joining, either as plaintiffs or defendants, the executors of the will of Charles S. Givens, the other deceased partner. The first question to be considered is, therefore, whether the executors of the will of the deceased partner, Charles S. Givens, were necessary parties to the action.

As against a surviving partner, the administrator or executor of a deceased partner has, under the provisions of our Code of Civil Procedure, no power to handle the property or settle the affairs of the partnership, for the right to the possession, control, and disposition of the partnership property vests in the surviving partner, who has full authority to consummate all acts necessary to liquidate the affairs of the partnership. Code Civ. Proc. § 1585; Berson v. Ewing, 84 Cal. 89, 23 Pac. 1112; Cooley v. Miller & Lux, 168 Cal. 120, 142 Pac. 83; Raisch v. Warren, 18 Cal. App. 655, 665, 124 Pac. 95. While the Code thus specifically provides for the control of the partnership property as long as some member of the firm survives, there is no law expressly applying in the event that all of the partners die before the liquidation of the partnership affairs has been completed, which is the situation here presented. It is, however, unnecessary in this case to determine what the rights of the representatives of the estates of the respective partners may be in such a situation in regard to the management and disposition of the partnership property. Without deciding that question, it is clear that under the general law the executors of the will of the last surviving partner are entitled to bring the present action for the recovery of partnership property without joining the executors of the will of the deceased partner, Charles S. Givens. In actions upon claims for or against the partnership, the surviving partner may sue or be sued alone and in such actions by or against the surviving partner the executors or administrators of a deceased partner are not necessary parties. Corson v. Berson, 86 Cal. 433, 25 Pac. 7. Section 1582 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides:

"Actions for the recovery of any property, real or personal, or for the possession thereof, or to quiet title thereto, or to determine any adverse claim thereon, and all actions founded upon contracts, may be maintained by and against executors and administrators in all cases in which the same might have been maintained by or against their respective testators or intestates."

There is no law expressly or impliedly altering the operation of section 1582, Code of Civil Procedure, in cases where the decedent is a surviving partner. Therefore, since the present action for the recovery of the money alleged to be due the partnership was one which might have been maintained by the surviving partner, Samuel Jones, during his lifetime without joining the executors or administrators of his deceased partner, the right and duty of instituting this action passed to and devolved upon the executors of the will of said Samuel Jones.

[2] Although the note sued upon matured January 4, 1910, and the present action was brought January 20, 1919, the demurrers cannot be sustained upon the grounds that the action is barred by the provisions of either section 337 or section 343 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Under section 337 of the Code of Civil Procedure the note would have been barred on January 4, 1914, four years from the date of maturity; but subsequent to that date, on January 6, 1914, the Rowley Investment Company made a payment of interest on the note, accompanied by a letter evidencing the said payment, which is quoted above. It is doubtful whether the letter in question contained a distinct, unqualified, unconditional recognition of the obligation as due at the date of the writing so as to amount, in and of itself, to an acknowledgment or promise sufficient to take the case out of the operation of the statute of limitations under the provisions of section 360, Code of Civil Procedure, as that section has been interpreted by this court. Biddel v. Brizzolara, 56 Cal. 382; Pierce v. Merrill, 128 Cal. 476, 61 Pac. 67, 79 Am. St. Rep. 63; Powell v. Petch, 166 Cal. 329, 136 Pac. 55. However, it is unnecessary for the letter itself to amount to a written promise or acknowledgment of the debt as due, for it accompanied a payment of interest.

Section 360 of the Code of Civil Procedure is as follows:

"No acknowledgment or promise is sufficient evidence of a new or continuing contract, by which to take the case out of the operation of this title, unless the same is contained in some writing, signed by the party to be charged thereby."

The effect of this provision is not to require that the new or continuing contract must consist of a written acknowledgment or promise. There may be an acknowledgment by conduct, as well as by words. In the case of a part payment, for instance, of either principal or interest the conduct itself has always been deemed, unless accompanied by qualifications, an unequivocal acknowledgment of a subsisting contract or liability from which a new contract to pay the debt must be inferred. Barron v. Kennedy, 17 Cal. 574, 577. Section 360 of the Code of Civil Procedure makes no attempt to regulate the character of the acknowledgment itself; its sole purpose is to alter the form of the evidence by preventing parol proof of the acknowledgment or promise whether the latter be in the form of words or acts. Pena v. Vance, 21 Cal. 142; Concannon v. Smith, 134 Cal. 14, 20, 66 Pac. 40. Therefore, where an act of payment after the statutory period is evidenced by a clear and unqualified written memorandum, the acknowledgment is "contained in some writing" within the meaning of the Code section even though the writing itself does not contain a distinct recognition of a subsisting liability. The acknowledgment consists of the act of payment, from which a new contract is inferred. The new contract arose, therefore, on January 6, 1914, and that fact removed the case from the operation of the statute of limitations in so far as the bar attaching on January 4, 1914, is concerned. Notwithstanding this circumstance, however, the action was not brought within time unless there are other facts which prevented the bar of the statute of limitations from attaching, or removed the bar if any did attach, between January 6, 1914, the date of the making of the new promise, and January 20, 1919, the date on which the present complaint was filed.

[3] On June 3, 1915, defendant Forrest S. Rowley was appointed an executor of the will of Samuel Jones, the last surviving partner of the firm to which the debt herein sued upon is alleged to have been due. "The naming of a person as executor does not thereby discharge him from any just claim which the testator has against him, but the claim must be included in the inventory, and the executor is liable for the same, as for so much money in his hands, when the debt or demand becomes due." Code Civ. Proc., § 1447. As a necessary consequence, if defendant Forrest S. Rowley owed the $10,000 here in controversy on June 3, 1915, when he became executor, he became chargeable with that sum as for so much money in his hands and continued liable therefor, irrespective of the running of the period of the statute of limitations against the debt itself, by reason of the change in the character of his obligation due to his intervening fiduciary capacity. Treweek v. Howard, 105 Cal. 434, 39 Pac. 20. It is apparent from what has previously been said that this $10,000 debt was not barred on June 3, 1915; the sole question is, therefore, whether the defendant Forrest S. Rowley was individually liable upon that debt. While the $10,000 note was signed, and interest paid, according to the complaint, not by defendant Forrest S. Rowley, but by the Rowley Investment Company, nevertheless plaintiffs claim that the facts alleged in the complaint are sufficient to justify a disregard of the corporate entity of the Rowley Investment Company and compel a recognition of the liability of Forrest S. Rowley on the note.

[4] Before the acts and obligations of a corporation can be legally recognized as those of a particular person, and vice versa, the following combination of circumstances must be made to appear: First, that the corporation is not only influenced and governed by that person, but that there is such a unity of interest and ownership that the individuality, or separateness, of the said person and corporation has ceased; second, that the facts are such that an adherence to the fiction of the separate existence of the corporation would, under the particular circumstances, sanction a fraud or promote injustice. Erkenbrecher v. Grant, 200 Pac. 641; Llewellyn Iron Works v. Abbott-Kinney Co., 172 Cal. 210, 155 Pac. 986. The complaint in the present action must comply with these tests if it is to be upheld upon the theory of the identity of the Rowley Investment Company with the defendant Forrest S. Rowley.

[5] The allegations of the complaint are, in part, to the effect that defendant Rowley is and at all times since September, 1908, has been the owner and holder of all the subscribed, issued, and outstanding capital stock of the said corporation, excepting only a sufficient number of shares necessary to qualify other persons to act as directors, not exceeding one share to each of such persons; that he at all times mentioned controlled the board of directors thereof; that at all times mentioned he was the representative of and only person interested in the said corporation. There is, therefore, an adequate observance of the first requirement above set forth, for plaintiffs do not merely aver that the Rowley Investment Company was an instrumentality which was used for the individual benefit of the defendant Rowley, but, in substance and effect, allege that the corporation was but the double, or "alter ego" of the defendant Rowley. That is to say, they allege facts showing the virtual identity of the two defendants.

[6] With regard to the second requisite, it must be conceded that the allegations of the complaint are not as definite as might be desired and the interests of clarity would doubtless be subserved by an amendment in this respect. Nevertheless, the complaint is not fatally defective, the allegations being sufficient to reveal a situation justifying a disregard of the corporate entity. It is not necessary, as defendants contend, that the complaint allege actual fraud; it is sufficient if the facts set forth disclose that the dealings were in form with a corporation but in reality with an individual and that a refusal to recognize this fact will bring about inequitable results. Erkenbrecher v. Grant, supra; Colonial Trust Co. v. Montello Brick Works, 172 Fed. 310, 97 C. C. A. 144; Civ. Code, § 3528. Upon this phase of the case it is alleged in the complaint that the defendant Rowley was indebted to the partnership in the sum of $10,000, evidenced by his individual promissory notes. For the purpose of renewing these notes he made and delivered to the creditor a new note, signed by the Rowley Investment Company, a corporation, which was at that time and continued to be but the "alter ego" of the said defendant Rowley, there being no dealings between the partnership and the corporation as distinct from the individual Rowley. Having subsequently become an executor of the will of one of the partners, defendant Rowley now seeks to avoid the incidents of his fiduciary relationship solely by reliance upon the fiction of the independent existence of an organization which was in effect nothing more than a form assumed by him in his business dealings. The case is, therefore, distinguishable from the case of Erkenbrecher v. Grant, supra, recently decided by this court, for in that case, as stated in the opinion, the dealings in the corporate form were wholly devoid of inequitable results, whereas in the instant case the assumption of that form will result in the avoidance of a legal obligation, unless equity intervenes to prevent this injustice. This equity does by penetrating the fiction of the independent existence of the corporation.

The discussion and disposition of this last point disposes of the remaining grounds of the demurrer. If the identity of Forrest Rowley and the Rowley Investment Company is recognized, then there is no uncertainty, or unintelligibility, or ambiguity in the allegation to the effect that the note executed by the corporation was made, executed, and delivered by defendant Rowley, and there is no misjoinder of parties defendant. Likewise, in view of what has been said, we see no merit in the general demurrer.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the court below to enter an order overruling the demurrers.

We concur: SHAW, C. J.; SLOANE, J.; WILBUR, J.; WASTE, J.; RICHARDS, Justice pro tem.

54 Cal. App. 636

MCGILLIVRAY CONST. CO. v. HOSKINS.
(Civ. 2299.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 24, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 22, 1921.)

1. Appeal and error $\Leftrightarrow$ 931(9)—On appeal on judgment roll presumed that findings were waived.

Where appeal is taken on the judgment roll alone, it must be presumed, in support of the judgment, that findings of fact and conclusions of law were waived.

2. Mandamus $\Leftrightarrow$ 154(7)—Allegation of demand not necessary where demand would have been futile.

Where complaint in mandamus alleges that defendant refused to include in estimate of excavations work upon which the action was based, and answer denies that plaintiff was entitled to have such work so included, a demand would have been futile, and the complaint objected to on appeal will not be held insufficient, in that it did not allege that demand was made upon defendant to make the required estimate.

3. Highways $\Leftrightarrow$ 113(4)—Contract held to contemplate compensation for excavation below subgrading.

A contract for construction of a concrete highway for a county providing for certain compensation per cubic yard for all grading held to contemplate compensation for necessary excavation below the subgrade where oil was encountered, though the specifications provided specially for payment for excavating ditches.

4. Highways $\Leftrightarrow$ 113(4)—Decision of engineer held not to bar recovery for excavation below subgrade.

Under a contract for construction of concrete road for a county, providing that the opinion of the county engineer should be final and binding on any questions arising as to the meaning or intent of the contract, a decision of the engineer that certain work should be done without compensation, as being incidental to other work, will not prevent recovery therefor, the reason for such provision in the contract being only to require the contractor to perform the work in accordance with the engineer's decision in order to avoid delay.

5. Mandamus $\Leftrightarrow$ 93—Proper to compel county engineer to include in estimate work done by contractor.

Mandamus is a proper remedy to compel the county surveyor to include proper work in estimate to be submitted to board of supervisors concerning work done by contractor at unit price in constructing roads under Pol. Code § 2643, subd. 11.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; G. W. Nicol, Judge.

Action by the McGillivray Construction Company against J. H. Hoskins. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. J. Brown and Hawkins & Hawkins, all of Modesto, for appellant.

Stanley Moore, of San Francisco, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. This appeal is from a judgment directing the issuance of a writ of mandate requiring the defendant to make a true and correct final estimate of excavations made by the plaintiff under a contract for the construction of a concrete highway for Stanislaus county.

[1] Appellant assigns as error that the court failed to file findings of fact and conclusions of law. The appeal is taken upon the judgment roll alone, and therefore, in support of the judgment, it is presumed that findings were waived. Mulcahy v. Glazier, 51 Cal. 627; Baker v. Baker, 139 Cal. 626, 73 Pac. 469; Ladd v. Myers, 4 Cal. App. 352, 87 Pac. 1110; Hutton v. Newhouse, 41 Cal. App. 689, 183 Pac. 276.

[2] It is contended that the complaint is insufficient, in that it does not allege that prior to the commencement of the action a demand was made upon the defendant to make the required estimate. The complaint alleges that the defendant refused to include in his estimate the work upon which the action is based. The answer denies that the plaintiff was entitled to have such work so included, and this appeal is founded on the same contention. Under such circumstances a demand would have been futile, and this court would not be justified in holding that there has been a miscarriage of justice because of failure to make a futile demand. Moreing v. Shields, 28 Cal. App. 513, 152 Pac. 964; Moore v. Superior Court, 20 Cal. App. 299, 128 Pac. 946; Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. v. Chase County Com'rs., 49 Kan. 399, 30 Pac. 456; Gamble v. First Judicial Dist. Ct., 27 Nev. 233, 74 Pac. 530; State ex rel. Weinberg v. P. B. & M. Co., 21 Wash. 451, 58 Pac. 584, 47 L. R. A. 208; State v. Baushausen, 49 Neb. 558, 68 N. W. 950; City of Austin v. Cahill, 99 Tex. 172, 88 S. W. 542, 89 S. W. 552.

[3] The contract provides, in so far as pertinent to the issues tried, that plaintiff shall be paid for the work as follows:

"Proposition B. Approximately 7.483 miles of Portland cement concrete road not including the grading for a lump sum of $66,935.

"Proposition C. All excavation of every description without classification including all incidental work for the unit price of 60 c. per cubic yard."

Among the specifications, under the head "Grading," are the following:

"(a) Grading shall include the removing of all material, filling, refilling, trimming and shaping, or such other work as may be necessary to bring the surface of the roadway to conform with the adopted subgrade and cross-section.

"(b) All brush, roots, trees or vegetation lying between the gutters must be grubbed out and removed as directed by the county engineer."

"(d) All soft and unsuitable material shall be removed and the space refilled with suitable material."

"(e) Ditches shall be excavated by the contractor in such places and of such dimensions as the engineer may direct, and he shall be paid for such work at the contract price for excavation."

"(f) The entire roadway shall be ploughed or broken up as directed by the engineer to secure a bond between new and old material."

"(i) Computation of quantities shall be made by the method of average end areas and all measurements of work to be paid for shall be made in excavation."

"(j) The contract price per cubic yard of excavation shall include the excavation, loading, transportation, and deposit of material in accordance with these specifications, and also all grubbing and clearing, ditching and all other work incidental to the grading."

"(o) Whenever oil is encountered during the grading, all lumps must be neatly piled by the side of the right of way and must not be placed in the grade."

The complaint alleges that—

"Oil was encountered and excavated below the finished subgrade in a considerable portion of the roadway for said highway, and the excavating done by applicant in the removal of said oil, and necessary in order to remove the same, amounted to 28,204.6 cubic yards, * * * that all of the work under said contract was completed by the applicant on March 20, 1918, and said work was done to the satisfaction of said Hoskins."

The judgment recites that under and by the terms of the contract "petitioner was required to excavate and remove oil cake encountered below the subgrade" to the amount of 10,319 cubic yards and "was entitled to be paid therefor at the rate of 60 cents per cubic yard."

Appellant contends that "the removal of the oil cakes was work incidental to the grading," and that therefore the plaintiff is entitled to no compensation for the excavation necessary to its removal. It is not claimed that such work was unnecessary in the preparation of a proper subgrade on which to lay the concrete. Proposition B provides for the payment of a lump sum for the construction of the "concrete road not including the grading." The implication necessarily follows that compensation is to be received for the grading. Proposition C provides the measure of such compensation, 60 cents per cubic yard for "all excavation of every description without classification including all incidental work." No language could be clearer. It does not appear why excavations below the subgrade are any more incidental to the grading than those above.

It is next argued that since the specifications provide specially for payment to the contractor at the agreed price per yard for excavating ditches "the idea that payment was to be made for any of the other incidentals mentioned under the heading of 'grading'" is thereby excluded under "the rule expressio unius est exclusio alterius." The specifications, however, do not purport to fix the compensation to be received and the reference therein to payment for excavating ditches cannot reasonably be held to limit the express provision of the contract that payment shall be made for "all excavation of every description." It is more probable that the provision was inserted in the specifications to guard against any controversy as to whether the term "excavation" included the construction of ditches.

Article 9 of the contract provides:

"Should it appear that the work hereby intended to be done, or any of the matters relative thereto, are not sufficiently detailed or explained in the said plans, drawings, profiles, cross-sections and specifications when taken together, the contractor shall apply to the engineer for such further explanation as may be necessary, and shall conform to the same as part of this contract, so far as may be consistent with the original specifications; and in the event of any doubt or question arising respecting the true meaning of the said plans, drawings, profiles, cross-sections and specifications, and each and every difference respecting the same shall be finally determined by the said engineer, and it is understood that no advantage will be taken by either party hereto of any discrepancy that may be found in any plan or specification."

In the specifications it is provided:

"Bidders are cautioned to examine carefully the plans and specifications and form of proposal. If in doubt as to their meaning, the bidder should apply to the county engineer for explanation. If any questions arise as to the meaning or intent thereof after the bids are opened, the opinion of the county engineer shall be final and binding. Forms of proposal will be furnished by the county engineer or the county clerk."

[4] Appellant urges that, under the foregoing provisions of the contract, the decision of the engineer that the contract does not provide for payment on account of excavations below the subgrade is conclusive. The contract, however, does not evince any intention to make the engineer an arbitrator as to the amount due thereunder or as to whether payment shall be made for any item of work done. His decision is made final on questions arising during the progress of the work as to what is required by the contract and in what manner it is to be done. This is necessarily so, because it would not be practicable to cease operations and resort to a lawsuit every time a difference of opinion might arise. But when the contractor has followed the decision of the engineer and performed the contract in accordance with that decision, then it becomes a question of law whether the former is entitled to compensation for any particular item of work done.

"Where the architect or engineer, acting under an erroneous construction of the contract, without authority to construe that instrument, excludes work which should have been included in his estimate, or includes work which should have been excluded, the error will be corrected. * * * So also the estimates or the classifications are not binding where the contract fixes certain classifications of work, and the architect or engineer ignores such provisions in the contract." 9 C. J. 827; Lewis v. Chicago, S. F. & C. Ry. Co. (C. C.) 49 Fed. 708; Williams v. Chicago, etc., Ry. Co., 112 Mo. 463, 20 S. W. 631, 34 Am. St. Rep. 403.

"The jurisdiction of the engineer relates to disputes arising in the performance of the work which might prevent the work from progressing unless determined on the spot. * * * The clause cannot be interpreted so as to deprive the parties of their rights to a judicial construction of the contract, so far as such construction involves matters of law relating to the present right of the plaintiff to maintain suit, and relating to the question whether the plaintiff has received such compensation as he was legally entitled to under the provisions of the contract." Gammino v. Inhabitants of Town of Dedham, 164 Fed. 593, 90 C. C. A. 465.

See, also, Mercantile Trust Co. v. Hensey, 205 U. S. 298, 27 Sup. Ct. 535, 51 L. Ed. 811, 10 Ann. Cas. 572; Wren v. City of Indianapolis, 96 Ind. 206; Aetna Indemnity Co. v. Waters, 110 Md. 673, 73 Atl. 712; Derby Desk Co. v. Conners, 204 Mass. 461, 90 N. E. 543.

[5] Section 2643 of the Political Code, subdivision 11, relative to work of the character here involved, provides:

"* * * Upon the completion of the work, the county surveyor must examine the same, and if completed in accordance with the specifications thereof, he must submit to the board of supervisors a certificate over his signature and official seal to the effect that such work by the contractor therefor has been completed in accordance with the specifications therefor, and recommending its acceptance. The board shall thereupon audit the same and direct its payment out of the proper fund or funds."

On the engineer's failure to include in his estimate work for which the contractor is entitled to compensation, mandamus is the proper remedy. Conn v. Board of Commissioners, 151 Ind. 517, 51 N. E. 1062; Wren v. City of Indianapolis, 96 Ind. 206.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

54 Cal. App. 643

BATES et al. v. HOSKINS. (Civ. 2300.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 24, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court. Dec. 22, 1921.)

1. Highways §113(4)—Road contractor held entitled to compensation for certain excavation.

Under a contract for the construction of concrete roads for a county, providing compensation of a certain amount per cubic yard for excavation, held that contractor was entitled to compensation for excavation, ordered by the engineer as necessary, made in filled sections between header boards placed along the side to hold the concrete in place as it was poured.

2. Appeal and error §907(2)—Presumed that evidence supports judgment.

In the absence of evidence and findings, it must be presumed on appeal that the evidence supports the judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; G. W. Nicol, Judge.

Action by Charles D. Bates, A. Borland, and R. B. Ayer, copartners doing business under the firm name and style of Bates, Borland & Ayer, against J. H. Hoskins. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. J. Brown and Hawkins & Hawkins, all of Modesto, for appellant.

Stanley Moore, of San Francisco, for respondents.

FINCH, P. J. The defendant appeals from a judgment directing the issuance of a writ of mandate requiring him to make a true and correct final estimate of excavations made by the plaintiffs under a contract for the construction of a concrete highway in Stanislaus county.

The contract in question and the issues involved are the same as those discussed in the case of McGillivray Construction Co. v. Hoskins, 202 Pac. 677, this day decided by this court, with the additional question whether the plaintiff is entitled to compensation for excavations made, in filled sections, between the header boards placed along the sides to hold the concrete in place as it was poured.

[1, 2] The complaint alleges that—

"In order to make dikes, remove the same, and bring the grade to a perfect subgrade, as was ordered by said J. H. Hoskins, and as provided in the specifications covering said contract, there was necessarily excavated by the applicants 20,203.05 cubic yards of material."

In the judgment it is recited that—

"In order to bring the grade of said highway to be constructed under said contract to a perfect subgrade, the petitioners excavated and removed between header boards in filled sections of said highway 8,585.73 cubic yards; and that said 8,585.73 cubic yards was excavated and removed by petitioners under and by virtue of the terms of said contract, and petitioners are entitled to be paid for the removal thereof at the rate of 60 cents per cubic yard."

It thus appears that the court did not allow anything for the yardage included in the building of dikes or the removal thereof, but only for excavations between the header boards. In his oral argument counsel for respondent states that—

In the filled sections "the engineer compelled the contractor to first level up the width of the roadway from crown to crown; that is, from the height of the shoulder on either side the contractor was supposed to first make the entire space between the two shoulders level, then he was supposed to build a system of cross-dikes, so that the level surface would be divided into checks, and then the contractor was required to fill those checks with water and to soak the water down, with the purpose of having the moisture from the top meet the moisture which was below. Thereafter he was to remove those dikes, and thereafter still he was to excavate the space in that level from crown to crown, or outer shoulder to outer shoulder. He was supposed to excavate out of that space that was between header boards," the excavation to be made after the fill had been "rolled in a firm hard condition."

While the record does not show the facts thus stated, in the absence of the evidence and findings, it must be presumed that the evidence supports the judgment. Under such circumstances, the decision of the engineer as to what work was necessary under the contract as the work progressed being conclusive, the contractors were entitled to compensation for the excavation in question.

Since all other matters involved in this appeal are considered in the opinion filed in McGillivray Construction Co. v. Hoskins, supra, it is unnecessary to discuss them here.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

55 Cal. App. 1

SCHILLING v. HAYES et al. (Civ. 3734.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Nov. 1, 1921.)

1. Municipal corporations $\S$ 706(5)—Evidence held to show injuries caused by concurrent negligence of drivers of two automobiles.

In an action for injuries from an automobile, in front of which plaintiff stepped to avoid another car, evidence held to show that both automobiles were operated at excessive speed, and that plaintiff occupied a position of safety but for the negligent act of the driver of the car, which forced him to move.

2. Trial $\S$ 395(2)—Finding as to concurrent negligence of drivers of two automobiles held not erroneous.

In an action for injuries to a pedestrian struck by an automobile in front of which he stepped to avoid another car, where the court found that both drivers so negligently and carelessly managed, operated, and controlled their respective automobiles as aforesaid, and at such a high and negligent rate of speed" that a collision between them was imminent, and that plaintiff, to avoid being run into by them, prudently jumped from the place in which he was standing, but was knocked down by one of them by reason of their drivers' negligence, individually and concurrently, held not erroneous, though there was no preceding finding as to defendants' negligence, to which the words "as aforesaid" could refer, the finding being full and complete in showing the concurrent negligent acts of defendants, which were the proximate cause of the injury.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. P. Wood, Judge.

Action by Alva Schilling against V. M. Hayes, another, and Harry J. Bristol. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant Bristol appeals. Affirmed.

H. C. Millsap and N. J. Kendall, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Erwin P. Werner, Werner & Brown, and Isaac Pacht, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHAW, J. Action to recover damages alleged to have been sustained as the result of defendants' concurrent negligence in the operation of their automobiles. The case was tried without a jury by the court, which gave judgment for plaintiff, from which defendant Bristol appeals.

Appellant attacks the findings upon the ground of insufficiency of the evidence. The evidence clearly tends to show the following facts: The accident occurred at a point in Lake Shore avenue, extending north and south, near its intersection with Santa Ynez street, which extends east and west. A street car was operated on Lake Shore avenue, and at the time in question plaintiff, at the usual stopping place of the cars, was standing near the west track to board an approaching south-bound car on the west track, which at the time was distant about 150 feet. At the same time an automobile, at a speed of some 30 miles per hour, was operated by defendant Bristol in an easterly direction on Santa Ynez street, having a grade at that point of 6 or 7 per cent., and, reaching the intersecting street, it turned sharply to the right in a southerly direction into Lake Shore avenue, the left front wheel of the automobile crossing the westerly rail of the street railway track near where plaintiff was standing. In order to escape collision therewith, he stepped 2 or 3 feet to the east, at which time he was instantly struck by the car of defendant Hayes, which, operated southerly on Lake Shore avenue at a speed of some 40 miles per hour, darted around the street car and collided with plaintiff. There is testimony to the effect that a collision between the two automobiles, as well as between the street car and the Bristol automobile, appeared to be inevitable.

[1] That both automobiles were, under the circumstances, being operated at a high and excessive rate of speed, admits of little question. That plaintiff occupied a position of safety but for the negligent act of the driver of the Bristol car would seem likewise clear. By such negligence he was forced to change his position to a point where, by reason of the negligence of the driver of the Hayes car, it collided with him, causing the injuries complained of. The testimony of C. C. Moore, who appears to have been a wholly disinterested witness and who happened to be in the vicinity, discloses that he saw the Bristol car coming down the hill at an excessive speed, and saw he could not beat the street car to the intersection of Lake Shore and Santa Ynez if the street car did not slow up. He came so near to plaintiff that he was compelled to jump in order to keep from getting hit by the automobile, and about that time the Hayes machine shot past the street car and struck Schilling. And, further, that the Bristol automobile was traveling at least 30 miles an hour. Plaintiff's testimony is to the effect that if he had not moved, the Bristol automobile would have struck him, and that immediately upon stepping aside he was struck by the Hayes car and rendered unconscious. And Mrs. Lottie Hayes, an occupant of the Hayes car, testified that—

"As we approached the intersection of Santa Ynez and Lake Shore Boulevard, a collision with the Bristol taxicab appeared to me to be inevitable."

[2] The court, after a finding to the effect that Bristol was operating his automobile easterly along Santa Ynez street and into Lake Shore avenue, and defendant Hayes was operating her automobile southerly along Lake Shore avenue at and across its intersection with Santa Ynez street, at which time plaintiff was a pedestrian at said intersection of said streets made a finding as follows:

"That said defendants Harry J. Bristol and V. M. Hayes then and there so negligently and carelessly managed, operated, and controlled their respective automobiles as aforesaid, and at such a high and negligent rate of speed, that by reason of said negligence and carelessness on the part of said defendants Harry J. Bristol and V. M. Hayes, and each of them, a collision between them then and there became and was imminent; that by reason of the aforesaid negligence and carelessness of the defendants * * * and each of them the plaintiff was about to be run into by the said automobiles of the defendants; * * * that to avoid being run into by the said automobiles the plaintiff prudently jumped from the place in which he was standing; * * * that by reason of the said negligence of the defendants, * * * and each of them, individually and concurrently, and by reason of said collision of said automobile of the defendant V. M. Hayes with the plaintiff so negligently occasioned as aforesaid, the plaintiff was knocked down and suffered injuries."

Conceding, as claimed by appellant, that there is no preceding finding as to negligence on the part of defendants to which the words "as aforesaid," appearing in the first part of the finding quoted, can have reference, nevertheless the finding is in itself full and complete in showing the concurrent acts of defendants constituting the negligence and which was the proximate cause of the injury, namely, the high rate of speed at which, under the circumstances, both defendants were operating their cars at a crossing, and where electric cars were accustomed to stop for the purpose of taking on and letting off passengers. There is no merit in appellant's contention.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

54 Cal. App. 683

ALLRED v. SHEEHAN. (Civ. 3906.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Oct. 28, 1921. Rehearing Denied Nov. 25, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 27, 1921.)

1. Pleading $\S$ 350(3)—On defendant's motion for judgment on pleadings, allegations of complaint deemed true.

On defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings, all the material allegations of plaintiff's complaint must be deemed true.

2. Vendor and purchaser $\S$ 328—Complaint held to state cause of action for damages for breach of contract.

Allegations that plaintiff sold a lot, with improvements being constructed, to defendant, that a written memorandum of sale, fully set out in the complaint, was duly made, executed, and delivered, that the parties agreed on the terms of sale of a house plaintiff was constructing on the premises, and defendant paid a deposit thereon, which was to be returned if all work and material were not satisfactory to defendant on completion, that certain work was to be done in the house to meet defendant's demands as specified in the contract, and the house painted, and fixtures, wall paper, hard wood floors, etc., installed to suit defendant, that all such conditions were duly performed, and the work completed as called for by the contract, but that defendant repudiated it, stating he did not like the way the house was completed, stated a cause of action for damages for breach of contract.

3. Pleading ⚡350(3)—On motion for judgment on pleadings, court cannot pass on allegations of answer.

On consideration of defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings, in an action for breach of contract, the court cannot pass on denials contained in the answer as to the execution of the contract or any other material matter alleged therein.

4. Contracts ⚡282—Dissatisfaction must be reasonable.

An agreement to complete a building according to specifications is to be construed as one to furnish such a thing as ought reasonably to satisfy the buyer, and not as one permitting him to express dissatisfaction merely for the purpose of repudiating his contract.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by C. S. Allred against Howard J. Sheehan. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

I. M. Peckham, of San Francisco, for appellant.

J. J. Lermen, of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued in damages for breach of contract in the sum of $950. Defendant answered, setting up a counterclaim for $250. The complaint alleged that on October 8, 1919, plaintiff sold to defendant a certain lot of real estate, with improvements which were then being constructed thereon and that a written memorandum of sale was thereupon duly made, executed, and delivered by both parties. This memorandum was set out in full in the complaint. It appears therefrom that the parties agreed upon the terms of sale of a six-room house which plaintiff was constructing upon the premises; that defendant paid plaintiff $250 deposit thereon; that this deposit was to be returned to defendant if all work and material were not satisfactory to him on completion; that certain work was to be done in the house to meet the demands of the defendant as specified in the contract; and that the house was to be painted on both the outside and the inside in colors to suit defendant; fixtures and wall-paper were to be selected by defendant and installed to suit defendant; hard wood floors, tiling, and a shower bath to suit defendant were to be installed. The complaint alleged that all these conditions were duly performed, and that the work was completed as called for by the contract, but that the defendant, on the 2d day of December, 1919, repudiated the contract and wrote the plaintiff a letter stating that he did not like the way the house was completed.

Defendant answered putting in issue some of the allegations of the complaint, particularly the execution of the contract and the completion of the work called for by the contract. A separate defense was set out in the answer alleging that defendant paid plaintiff $250 on the 8th day of October, 1919, with the understanding and agreement that the whole would be returned to defendant on demand unless the work and material in the improvements to the house were satisfactory to defendant on completion. It was then alleged "that all of said work and material was not satisfactory." The answer closed with a prayer that plaintiff take nothing, but that defendant have judgment on his counterclaim for the sum of $250.

Thereafter defendant moved for judgment on the pleadings upon the ground that, under the admissions and allegations of plaintiff in the pleadings on file, defendant was entitled to judgment in the sum of $250. This motion was granted, and from the judgment following plaintiff appeals.

[1-4] On defendant's motion for judgment upon the pleadings all the material allegations of plaintiff's complaint must be deemed true. That the complaint stated a cause of action cannot be denied. The pleading of the written contract for the sale of the property, the due performance by plaintiff of all conditions on his part to be performed thereunder, the repudiation thereof by defendant, and the damages caused thereby to plaintiff, was in sufficient form. On consideration of the motion for judgment on the pleadings the court could not pass upon the denials contained in the answer as to the execution of the contract, or any other material matter alleged therein. The contract called for the completion of the building in accordance with specifications in the contract. Such an agreement is to be construed as one to furnish such a thing as ought reasonably to satisfy the buyer, and not as one permitting him to express dissatisfaction merely for the purpose of repudiating his contract. Tiffany v. Pac. Sewer Pipe Co., 180 Cal. 700, 702, 182 Pac. 428, 6 A. L. R. 1493; Bryan Elevator Co. v. Law, 31 Cal. App. 204, 215, 160 Pac. 170.

The trial court treated the counterclaim of defendant as a cross-complaint, and gave judgment for the defendant thereon. This having been set up as a separate answer and defense to plaintiff's complaint, all the allegations contained therein must have been deemed denied. There is nothing in plaintiff's complaint which can be construed as an admission of the essential allegations of this counterclaim.

Judgment reversed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

54 Cal. App. 510

GLOBE INDEMNITY CO. v. HENDERSON.
(Civ. 3967.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Oct. 10, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 8, 1921.)

1. Master and servant 405(6)—Evidence held not to support findings for compensation insurer against wrongdoer.

In an action by a general contractor's insurer against an independent contractor, whose negligence was alleged to have caused injuries to general contractor's employee, evidence that the employee had received compensation in specified amount from the insurer, and that named physician was treating employee upon the request of the insurer, held insufficient to sustain findings that after the accident the insurer furnished employee with hospital and medical expenses, and had been, previous to, and was at time of trial, paying him workmen's compensation.

2. Appeal and error 1011(1)—Findings on conflicting testimony conclusive.

The appellate court is bound by the trial court's findings of fact on conflicting testimony.

3. Evidence 18—Court will take judicial notice that trusses, being hoisted into place by gin pole 37½ feet long, were very heavy load.

Where trusses being hoisted into place with gin pole 37½ feet high, supported by four guy lines, when constructed, were 60 feet from tip to tip, 12 feet high, and where the dimensions of the cross sections, when planks have been nailed together, were 8 by 10 inches, the court, in action involving question as to whether contractor exercised due care in securing gin pole, will take judicial notice that each one of the trusses was a very heavy load.

4. Negligence 20—Gin pole for lifting heavy weights dangerous instrumentality.

A contractor, lifting heavy trusses into place with a gin pole 37½ feet high, is required to exercise great care to secure the pole, though Civ. Code, § 1714, makes every one liable for want of ordinary care, since to stand a pole of great weight, 37½ feet long, perpendicularly, is to maintain a very dangerous instrumentality, and great care being required when the danger is great.

5. Negligence 134(4)—Evidence held to show negligence in maintaining gin pole.

In an action against an independent contractor, lifting trusses into place with gin pole 37½ feet high, for injuries sustained when the supporting guy line tore loose and the pole toppled over, evidence held to sustain finding that the pole was negligently secured.

On Rehearing before the Supreme Court.

6. Master and servant 389—Measure of compensation insurer's recovery against wrongdoer stated.

In an action by an employee and a compensation insurance carrier against a third party, whose negligence caused injuries, in which the appellate court affirmed judgment for the employee, but reversed judgment for insurance carrier and directed a retrial as to certain issues, the amount awarded insurance carrier on retrial should not exceed the amount awarded employee nor the amount insurer has paid or has become obligated to pay for the benefit of the employee as insurance carrier, and the judgment for insurance carrier should provide that any payment made by third party to either employee or insurance carrier should be credited on both judgments.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Joseph S. Koford, Judge.

Action by the Globe Indemnity Company and George L. Masow against H. B. Henderson. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Judgment for last-named plaintiff affirmed, and judgment for first-named plaintiff reversed, with directions.

L. Gonsalves, of Oakland, for appellant.

Earle Warren, of Oakland, and Hadsell, Sweet & Ingalls, of San Francisco, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiffs recovered a judgment against the defendant in the sum of $2,500 for damages, and the defendant has appealed, bringing up the judgment roll and a bill of exceptions.

Morris & Muller, as general contractors, were engaged in erecting a brick garage on the southeast corner of Broadway and Twenty-Fourth streets in Oakland. George L. Masow, one of the plaintiffs, was working for the contractors as a carpenter, and at the time of the accident hereinafter mentioned was standing on some planking which rested on the rafters. The defendant, H. B. Henderson, as an independent contractor, was engaged in hoisting the rafters into place. The rafters, more properly called trusses, were made of wood, and after each one had been constructed it was about 60 feet long from tip to tip, about 12 feet high, and, when the planks had been nailed together, the dimensions of a cross section were 8x10 inches. The weight of one of these trusses was such that the defendant was using a gin pole 37 feet 6 inches high, supported by four guy lines. While one of the trusses was being raised into place one of the guy lines tore loose, the gin pole toppled over, and the plaintiff Masow was injured, and for the injuries so received he brought this suit to recover damages.

[1] In their complaint the plaintiffs aver that the Globe Indemnity Company is a New York corporation doing business in California, and as such was the insurance carrier of Morris & Muller; that after the accident the Globe Indemnity Company furnished Masow with hospital and medical expenses, and has been and now is paying him workmen's compensation. The court found all of said allegations to be true. The appellant in his brief attacks each of those findings as not being supported by the evidence. In reply to appellant's contention the respondent states that the evidence shows that since the accident the plaintiff has received compensation from the Globe Indemnity Company amounting to about $1,100, exclusive of his doctor and hospital expenses, and that Dr. Shade treated Masow, acting upon the request of the Globe Indemnity Company. Such testimony, standing alone, is not sufficient to support the allegations regarding the Globe Indemnity Company, and the judgment in favor of that company is not supported by the evidence.

[2] The appellant claims that the plaintiff Masow was guilty of contributory negligence. This claim rests upon the assertion that a short time before the accident Masow saw the gin pole swerving, and, from that fact, he should have assumed that the pole was not properly anchored. In another place in the testimony Masow testified:

"I did not observe anything in connection with the erection of the boom until it came across the trusses. Up to that time I did not know that anything was wrong with the manner in which the boom was erected, or the manner in which the boom was being held."

In view of this testimony it is patent that the most that can be said is that the evidence on the subject of contributory negligence was conflicting. However, this court is bound by the finding of the trial court in the face of conflicting testimony.

It is further claimed by the appellant that it was not shown by the plaintiffs that the injury to Masow was the result of the falling of the gin pole. In this behalf the defendant asserts that when the gin pole fell it did not strike the plank on which the plaintiff Masow was standing. There is some evidence supporting that reasoning. Be that as it may, another witness testified:

"I believe plaintiff Masow was standing on the second purline; * * * after Mr. Masow had fallen the gin pole was resting on the second purline."

The situation, therefore, is another instance of conflicting testimony, and the conflict was for the trial court, and not for this court

[3-5] The defendant makes the further claim that under the facts pleaded and proved he was not negligent. In this behalf he takes the position that it was his duty to exercise ordinary care (Civ. Code, § 1714), and that he did so. The record does not show the weight of the gin pole, neither does it show the weight of the trusses which it was engaged to lift up into place, but we have set forth above the dimensions of the trusses, and we may add that the same were constructed out of pine timber, and this court will take judicial notice that each one of the trusses was a very heavy load. To raise such a weight required a very strong gin pole, and therefore a gin pole of great weight. To stand a pole of great weight, 37 feet 6 inches long, perpendicularly is to maintain a very dangerous instrumentality. When the danger is great the care should be great. Foley v. Northern California Power Co., 14 Cal. App. 401, 407, 112 Pac. 467; Spear v. United Railroads, 16 Cal. App. 637, 663, 117 Pac. 956. Now, the evidence shows that the defendant had anchored his gin pole by four guy lines. That one end of each guy line was fastened to the top of the pole, and that the other end of line 3 and the other end of line 4 were fastened to pegs driven into the foundation soil. Exhibit A is a diagram. The diagram shows that the guy lines were not fastened at right angles such as north, south, east, and west, but that lines 1 and 2 were fastened on Webster street, line 4 was fastened on the opposite side of the building lot, and line 3 was fastened in Twenty-Fourth street, but in such a location that the straining strength was practically the same as though it were on the same side of the building as line 4. It is clear that with lines so fastened the tendency of the pole to lean toward Twenty-Fourth street, or from Twenty-Fourth street, was not sufficiently guarded against. Again it does not require the ability of an engineer to note that if the top of the gin pole were allowed to swerve in any direction the result would be that there would be a strain on the opposite guy line approximately equal to the weight of the truss. If one anchorage was not entirely sufficient the same guy line should have been anchored two or three times, and if such fastening was not sufficient, additional guy lines should have been attached to guard completely against any leaning of the gin pole. The trial court made a finding that the gin pole was negligently and carelessly secured, and in view of the foregoing facts we are not at all inclined to question the soundness of that finding.

The judgment in favor of George L. Masow is affirmed, and the judgment in favor of the Globe Indemnity Company is reversed, with directions for the trial court to retry the issues contained in findings 1, 2, and 8, and thereafter to render such judgment for or against the Globe Indemnity Company as may be supported by the law and facts.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

Opinion of Supreme Court in Bank Denying Hearing

PER CURIAM. [6] The petition for a rehearing in this court is denied. We deem it proper to say, however, that upon the retrial, if judgment is given in favor of the plaintiff Globe Indemnity Company, it must not exceed the amount already adjudged to plaintiff Masow, with interest, less any payments made thereon in the meantime, nor be in excess of the amount said company has paid, or has become obliged to pay for the benefit of Masow, as insurance carrier for Morris & Muller, and the judgment should also provide that any payment made by defendant to either of the plaintiffs shall be credited on both judgments.

SHAW, C. J., and LENNON, WASTE, WILBUR, SLOANE, and SHURTLEFF, JJ., and RICHARDS, Judge pro tem., concur.

187 Cal. 543

REYNOLDS v. CHURCHILL CO.
(Sac. 3014.)(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 13, 1921.
Rehearing Denied Jan. 12, 1922.)

1. Judgment $\hookrightarrow$ 702, 713(2)—In mandamus proceedings against surveyor general, determination held conclusive on state and on petitioner as to latter's right to purchase land under certificate of purchase; binding as to matters that might have been presented.

In mandamus proceedings against the surveyor general of the state to compel the issuance of a patent to lands owned by the state under Pol. Code, §§ 3493m-3493t, the determination is conclusive on the state and on petitioner as to his right to purchase, not only as to his claims set forth therein, but as to any other claims which might have been presented.

2. Judgment $\hookrightarrow$ 729—Recital in judgment in mandamus held not a withdrawal from the entire judgment of matters determined.

Where, during a contest between plaintiff and defendant for the right to purchase state lands, defendant corporation brought mandamus proceedings to compel issuance of a patent to it notwithstanding the pendency of the contest, a recital in the judgment in the mandamus proceedings "that the rights of the contestants are not foreclosed by our decision therein" held not to affect the whole judgment which determined contestants' rights to purchase the land, and the exclusion of the judgment and record when offered in the trial of the contest was erroneous.

3. Public lands $\hookrightarrow$ 61(2)—Swamp and overflowed land is subject to sale even if unsegregated.

Under Pol. Code, § 3493m, swamp and overflowed land is subject to sale even if unsegregated.

4. Navigable waters $\hookrightarrow$ 1(6)—Little Klamath Lake not shown to be navigable.

Little Klamath Lake not being one of the bodies of water declared navigable by Pol. Code, § 2349, held, that the District Court of Appeal erred in declaring it to be such, in a contest between claimants of the right to purchase part of its bed as swamp lands.

5. Public lands $\hookrightarrow$ 61(1)—Evidence held insufficient to show as a matter of law that land was not swamp and overflowed land.

Evidence held insufficient to show as a matter of law that land was not swamp and overflowed land.

6. Public lands $\hookrightarrow$ 61(6)—State is not a party to contest between parties as to right to purchase swamp or overflowed land from state.

Although under Pol. Code, § 3416, the surveyor general of the state must issue a patent to swamp or overflowed lands to the successful party in a contest concerning the right to purchase such lands from the state, the state is not a party to the contest, and is not estopped by judgment of the court to which the contest is referred in pursuance of section 3414.

7. Public lands $\hookrightarrow$ 61(6)—Character of lands held not in issue.

In a contest between parties as to the right to purchase swamp and overflowed land of the state, where both parties claimed that the land was swamp and overflowed land, that question is not an issue in the contest, and evidence bearing on it was ineffectual and immaterial.

8. Judgment $\hookrightarrow$ 702—State not bound by judgment in contest between claimants of swamp land.

In a contest between claimants of the right to purchase alleged swamp lands, the state, not being a party, is not bound by the judgment.

9. Judgment $\hookrightarrow$ 702—Decision as to character of land in action between contestants for right to purchase from the state cannot prejudice rights of the United States, not a party.

A decision as to the character of land, in a contest between two parties as to the right of purchasing the land from the state as swamp and overflowed land, is not binding on the rights of the United States derived in pursuance of St. 1905, p. 4, ceding certain sovereign lands to the United States, where the United States was not a party to the proceeding.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Siskiyou County; James F. Lodge, Judge.

Proceeding by Robert B. Reynolds against the Churchill Company in the office of the surveyor general of the state, and by him referred to the superior court, in accordance with Pol. Code, §§ 3414, 3415. From a judgment holding valid a certificate of purchase under which defendant claims, and ordering that a patent issue to him upon payment of fees provided by law, plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions.

C. E. McLaughlin, of Sacramento, and Leon Samuels, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Tapscott & Tapscott, of Yreka, for respondent.

William V. Cowan and Johnson & Lennon, all of Sacramento, amici curiæ.

WILBUR, J. This is a contest instituted by the plaintiff in the office of the surveyor general of the state and by him referred by proper order to the superior court of the county of Siskiyou, as provided in sections 3414, 3415, Political Code. The plaintiff claims the right to purchase the land involved by reason of applications made in the office of the surveyor general in 1917 and contests the prior application and certificate of defendant's assignor. The defendant claims the right to purchase the land under and by virtue of an application filed in the office of the county surveyor of the county of Siskiyou in 1872 and certificate of purchase issued therefor October 4, 1874. The court rendered judgment against the plaintiff, and held valid the certificate of purchase under which defendant claims, and ordered that a patent issue to the defendant upon payment of the fees provided by law. The plaintiff appeals.

During pendency of this contest the defendant petitioned this court for a writ of mandamus to compel the issuance of a patent to it, notwithstanding the pendency of this contest. Churchill Co. v. Kingsbury, 178 Cal. 554, 174 Pac. 329. In that original proceeding the facts were stipulated, as to the character of the land, and the petitioner's application and certificate therefor. The proceeding was dismissed.

Upon the trial of this contest the plaintiff offered in evidence the proceedings in the mandamus case, and defendant's objection thereto was sustained.

The appellant claims that the respondent is concluded by the judgment of dismissal in the mandamus case, and we will consider this point first.

The history of the respondent's claims is fully set forth in the opinion in Churchill Co. v. Kingsbury, supra. The proceeding was dismissed because the court concluded that under the stipulated facts the land in question was a part of the bed of Little Klamath Lake, which was stipulated to be a navigable body of water, and hence that the land was owned by the state in its sovereign and not in its proprietary capacity, and that the sale thereof was not authorized by the act of 1893, relied upon by the petitioner as validating its prior certificate of purchase (Stats. 1893, p. 341, subsequently codified [1907] as sections 3493m to 3493t). The petitioner in the mandamus case claimed that the land was sovereign land uncovered by recession, and that the statute of 1893 validated the certificate. The surveyor general, on the other hand, claimed that the lands were swamp and overflowed lands. The court determined the matter of fact in accordance with the petitioner's contention, but held that the statute of 1893 did not validate the petitioner's certificate of purchase, for the reason that the land in question was not uncovered by the recession of the lake within the meaning of the law of 1893 relied on by petitioner therein.

In this contest both parties alleged in their pleadings that the land was swamp and overflowed land, and so stipulated as well. The defendant also introduced evidence which it claims established the fact that the land was swamp and overflowed land, and the trial court found as a fact that the land was notoriously swamp and overflowed land. On appeal the District Court of Appeal, Third District, held that, notwithstanding the stipulation of the parties, it would take judicial notice of the fact that the land was sovereign land of the state, as shown by the government surveys of record in the office of the United States surveyor general of this state, and the United States General Land Office. Both parties filed petitions for transfer to this court, and the attorney general also upon leave filed a similar petition, all contending that the land is swamp and overflowed land. The case has been briefed and argued in this court. The respondent and the Attorney General both claim that the mandamus proceeding is not res adjudicata in this proceeding and both seek to distinguish the facts in proof herein and as stipulated therein.

[1] We have reached the conclusion that the mandamus proceedings are conclusive of the rights of the respondent to purchase the land under its certificate of purchase. In the mandamus proceedings the surveyor general of the state of California represented the state, and the judgment in the case as to the validity of the defendant's certificate of purchase is binding upon the state of California and upon the petitioner in mandamus. It was so held in Bernhard v. Wall, 194 Pac. 1040. In that case an applicant for the purchase of public land had been successful in a mandamus proceeding. This court, in discussing the effect of the judgment in mandamus, said:

"That judgment was an adjudication that the Parkinson foreclosure was valid, and that the tax deed was invalid. It was conclusive, not only of the matters actually alleged in opposition to the writ, but also of any fact which might have been alleged and proven in that proceeding to show that Bernhard was not entitled to the relief given by the judgment (Crew v. Pratt, 119 Cal. 149, 51 Pac. 38). It follows, therefore, that if the tax deed on the Foster assessment would have been a defense to the mandamus proceeding, it would have been the surveyor general's duty to plead it therein, and, failing to do so, he would be forever estopped to claim that it was a defense. Unquestionably that judgment was a final adjudication of the right of Bernhard, binding on the surveyor general in his official capacity. He is the state official in charge of all matters pertaining to the disposal of the public lands of the state. He is ex officio register of the state land office (Pol. Code, § 497). His duties in relation to public lands are prescribed in sections 3395 to 3573, inclusive, of the Political Code. In any proceeding against him to compel him to perform an official duty in disposing of the public land, he represents the state, and the judgment rendered in such proceeding is in all respects binding and conclusive against the state to the same extent that it binds the officer in his official conduct with respect to the matter decided. Such a judgment bars the state from afterwards setting up to the contrary of what is there adjudicated. * * * It therefore follows that the right of Bernhard to have his application to purchase and his deposit of money accepted on the 11th day of May, 1903, was conclusively determined by that judgment, not only as against the surveyor general, but also as against the state. The state and all its officers were thereby estopped to deny such right, or to claim that thereafter in disregard of that right, it had regularly or lawfully disposed of the land to other and subsequent applicants, or that it could so dispose of it, so long as Bernhard's right continued."

The same rule with reference to the effect of a judgment as against the state in mandamus would apply with equal force to the rights of the petitioner. The petitioner would be bound by the judgment not only as to its claims set forth therein, but any others which might have been presented. Let us now consider the issues therein presented and determined and the effect of the judgment. It was there stated:

"The petitioner relies upon the terms of the act of March 24, 1893, providing for the sale of lands uncovered by the recession or drainage of the waters of inland lakes and unsegregated swamp and overflowed lands. Stats. 1893, p. 341. * * * Since the act authorizes the sale both of sovereign lands and of unsegregated swamp and overflowed lands, it might not be necessary for the petitioner to maintain that the lands in question fall within one of these classes rather than the other. It does, however, take the stand that the land is, in fact, sovereign land of the state, and in this, we think, it is clearly right. * * * The agreed facts in this case show that the land in controversy is a part of the bed of Little Klamath Lake, a navigable body of water. * * * The lake consists of the body of water contained within the banks as they exist at the stage of ordinary high water. * * *

"As we have seen, the lands in question are not swamp and overflowed, and the petitioner can, therefore, prevail only by bringing them within the first class described in section 3493m, viz., 'lands now uncovered or which may hereafter be uncovered by the recession or drainage of the waters of inland lakes, and inuring to the state by virtue of her sovereignty.' * * * The lands are still covered by the waters of the lake during the greater part of each year. * * *

"It follows that the petitioner has not established his right to any relief." (Italics ours.) Churchill Co. v. Kingsbury, supra.

[2] The question of the nature and character of these lands and the right of the petitioner under its application to purchase being directly involved in the proceeding, it is evident that the decision of this court that the lands were not swamp and overflowed lands is binding upon the petitioner as well as the state so far as the petitioner's right to purchase the land is concerned. The respondent and the attorney general, however, contend that this court expressly left the parties to this contest to have their rights determined in this proceeding. This contention is based upon the concluding sentences of the opinion in Churchill Co. v. Kingsbury, supra, which reads as follows:

"It appears from the answer that various contests between this petitioner and opposing applicants for purchase of portions of the lands are pending in the superior court, pursuant to reference by the surveyor general. Pol. Code, § 3414. It should perhaps be said that the rights of the contestants are not foreclosed by our decision herein, which is, of course, based upon the facts as stipulated by the parties to this proceeding.

"The alternative writ is discharged, and the proceeding dismissed."

The respondent claims that in the proceedings then pending in the county of Siskiyou both parties were "contestants" and therefore the opinion must be construed as reserving the rights of both parties. It may be true as an abstract proposition that both parties herein are, in a sense, contestants in the trial of a contest of this character. Both are affirmatively seeking to have their right to purchase the land from the state established by the decree. But the question here is not the significance of the term "contestant" in the abstract, but is, what was intended by this court in the opinion in question when it used the term "contestants"? If the court had declined to consider petitioner's claim for the reason that a contest was then pending in which that claim would be presented and determined and had, for that reason, dismissed the proceedings with the statement that its judgment was without prejudice to the rights of the contestants in the then pending contest respondent's position would be correct beyond peradventure. No such condition, however, is presented by the record. The obvious and avowed purpose of the mandamus proceeding was to determine the validity of the petitioner's certificate of purchase, and that because expressly validated by the Legislature it was not open to contest.

The court considered the claims of the petitioner in that regard and passed upon them. The decision, therefore, is binding on the petitioner unless the statement of the court with reference to the effect of the decision upon the contest entirely changes the legal effect of the judgment. It is clear from the nature and the character of the decision, and well as the context that the term "contestant," as used in this opinion, was intended to refer to the rights of those who were contesting the claims of the petitioner, and that the court did not intend to change the usual effect of the whole opinion and judgment by this clause relating to contestants. This is indicated by the language used:

"It should perhaps be said that the rights of the contestants are not foreclosed by our decision herein, which is, of course, based upon the facts as stipulated by the parties to this proceeding." (Italics ours.)

The court is merely calling attention to the self-evident proposition that the other applicants for the land were not bound by the stipulation entered into between the surveyor general and the Churchill Company, "parties to the proceeding."

It follows from the foregoing that the trial court was in error in excluding the judgment and record in the mandamus proceeding, which record was conclusive against the Churchill Company. The trial court should have rendered judgment declaring that the Churchill Company had no right of purchase.

[3] No question is raised as to the sufficiency of the plaintiff's application. The question as to whether the land in question is segregated is discussed at length by the parties, but is immaterial, so far at least as plaintiff's claims are concerned. If the land is swamp and overflowed land, it is subject to sale, even if unsegregated, under the provisions of section 3493m, Political Code (McGill v. Cowan, 179 Cal. 429, 177 Pac. 290), and the appellant is entitled to have his application therefor granted, upon the elimination of the respondent's prior claim.

[4] In view of the conclusion of the District Court of Appeal in this case that the land is not swamp and overflowed land, but is sovereign land, and hence not subject to sale (Churchill Co. v. Kingsbury, supra), it is proper to state our view on that subject, although the parties all contend that the land is swamp and overflowed land and not sovereign land. The District Court of Appeal was of the opinion that the government surveys of 1873, of which it took judicial notice, established the character of the land as sovereign land. So far as the record in this case is concerned, it is not shown that Little Klamath Lake is a navigable body of water. It is not one of the bodies of water so declared by statute (section 2349, Pol. Code), and whether actually navigable is not shown in the evidence, although the fact was stipulated in Churchill Co. v. Kingsbury, supra. The district court held that it appeared from the government maps above referred to that the meander line indicating the easterly shore of Little Klamath Lake was east of the land in question and that the land, therefore, was a part of the lake bed, and that this map established that the land in question was a part of the submerged land of a navigable lake and therefore belonged to the state by virtue of its sovereignty. On this basis it was held that the patent of the land issued by the Secretary of the Interior to the state of California for these lands as swamp and overflowed land was not binding upon the state of California, for the reason that the land had all along belonged to the state by virtue of its sovereignty, and that the action of the officer of the United States could not affect the title of the state.

[5] It is clear that the District Court of Appeal was in error in its conclusion. The meander line was evidently run for the purpose of establishing the boundaries of the upland or agricultural land and not for the purpose of delimiting the boundaries of the lake. It does not purport on the face of the map to be the easterly boundary of the lake. On the contrary, to the west of this meander line is shown a large body of land indicated as tule or swamp and overflowed land; the acreage of each quarter section and subdivision is indicated on the map and preceded by the letter "S," which indicates swamp and overflowed land. In the margin of the map of township 48 north, range 3 east, M. D. M., is an estimate of the amount of swamp and overflowed lands appearing upon the township map of 3,798 acres, which corresponds with the quarter sections and subdivisions shown upon the map as swamp and overflowed land. The same is true as to the map of township 47, range 3 east, M. D. M., where the acreage of swamp and overflowed land is estimated on the map as 2,063 acres. On each map this acreage is indicated as swamp and overflowed land and is separated from the body of water designated as Little Klamath Lake by a heavy diagonal line, and the land in question lies between the meander line on the east and this diagonal line on the west. The field notes of the survey show that this diagonal line is the eastern boundary of the open water of the lake as distinguished from the land in question east thereof, which is covered with a dense growth of tules. We do not think that this court can declare as a matter of law, from facts of which it takes judicial notice, that the land is not swamp and overflowed land.

[6, 7] This contest is one over the relative rights of the parties to purchase swamp and overflowed lands. Their applications are only for land of that character. The surveyor general of the state was of the opinion that the land was swamp and overflowed land, and for the purpose of having the relative rights to purchase such land determined referred the contest to the superior court. The proceeding was not intended to determine the character of the land; the parties foreclosed inquiry on that subject by admitting the land to be swamp and overflowed land, as indeed they were bound to do, in order to secure the rights for which they were respectively contending. This was also the contention of the surveyor general, who stood ready to issue his certificate of purchase or patent as swamp and overflowed land as soon as the relative priority of the parties was determined, while it is made the duty of the surveyor general of the state to issue his patent or certificate to the successful party in the contest. Section 3416, Pol. Code; Laugenour v. Shanklin, 57 Cal. 71, 75, 76; Lobree v. Mullan, 70 Cal. 150, 11 Pac. 685; People v. Morris, 77 Cal. 204, 207, 19 Pac. 378; McFaul v. Pfan Kuch, 98 Cal. 400, 402, 403, 33 Pac. 397; Youle v. Thomas, 146 Cal. 537, 541, 80 Pac. 714. The state, however, is not a party to the contest, and is not represented therein (Cunningham v. Crowley, 51 Cal. 128, 132, 133; Polk v. Sleeper, 158 Cal. 632, 636, 637, 112 Pac. 179; People v. California Fish Co., 166 Cal. 576, 611, 138 Pac. 79), and is no more estopped by a judgment in such a contest than by the issuance of a patent by the surveyor general without a contest. As was stated in People v. California Fish Co., supra, concerning a patent of sovereign lands issued after such a contest:

"Some of the patents in controversy in this series of cases were issued after and in pursuance of a land contest in the courts, under section 3414 of the Political Code, as to the right of opposing claimants to purchase the land under the law. Such a contest does not estop the state from claiming and showing that the land was reserved, or that it was and is dedicated to public use. The judgment in such a case merely determines which, if either, of the claimants is a qualified purchaser (not whether the law authorizes a sale of the particular land, but which had the better right) and that the one found to be qualified and having the prior claim is entitled to purchase. The state is not a party thereto and public rights are not adjudicated or concluded thereby (Polk v. Sleeper, 158 Cal. 637 [112 Pac. 179]). * * *

In the case of Polk v. Sleeper, supra, 158 Cal. page 637, 112 Pac. 182, a land contest brought under sections 3415 to 3417, Political Code, before the superior court, it was said:

"The only parties concerned in the action are the parties who properly become parties to the contest in the surveyor general's office and whose rights have been referred by that officer to the courts for adjudication, and prior to the amendment of section 3415 of the Political Code, in 1907, no other person could intervene in an action commenced under said reference. This was definitely settled in Youle v. Thomas, 146 Cal. 537 [80 Pac. 714], and reaffirmed in Youle v. Thomas, 150 Cal. 676 [91 Pac. 584]. The amendment of 1907 authorizes such an intervention only by one legally qualified to purchase from the state public lands of the same character, who after the order of reference, presents his own application to purchase the land or a portion thereof, to the surveyor general. The only questions involved in the action are those affecting the relative rights of the parties thereto. The state is in no sense a party to the action. * * *" (Italics ours.)

[8] In this case we have the peculiar situation that this court in Churchill Co. v. Kingsbury, supra, upon a stipulation entered into by the Attorney General representing the surveyor general, has declared the lands in question to be sovereign lands, notwithstanding the contention of the surveyor general to the contrary. The Attorney General, in his brief filed herein, states that that stipulation, which was based upon "a careful reading of all the published reports which counsel was able to find from Fremont's narrative, 1843, to the last report of the reclamation service," but that none of these reports revealed the facts now disclosed for the first time by the testimony of certain witnesses in this case, called by the Churchill Company, which had theretofore claimed the land to be sovereign land, to the effect that there is a relatively high embankment between the open water of the lake and the tule land, which bank is sooner uncovered by the evaporation of the water than the land farther east, and that this relatively high bank is cut by numerous channels, through which the water enters from the open water of the lake to overflow the tule land. We are not called upon to consider the effect of this evidence or whether it was sufficient to sustain the finding of the trial court that this land was swamp and overflowed land. That question was not an issue in the contest, and the introduction of such evidence was therefore wholly ineffectual and immaterial.

[9] The Attorney General appears herein as a friend of the court upon the theory that a decision herein that the land in question is sovereign land might prejudice the rights of the state as against the United States, growing out of a statute passed by our state Legislature in 1905 (Stats. 1905, p. 4), ceding certain sovereign lands in Little Klamath Lake to the United States for reclamation purposes. Our decision on this contest cannot, of course, be binding upon the United States, which is not a party to this proceeding.

The judgment is reversed, with instructions to the trial court to proceed in accordance with this opinion.

We concur: SHAW, C. J.; SLOANE, J.; LENNON, J.; WASTE, J.; SHURTLEFF, J.; RICHARDS, Justice pro tem.

187 Cal. 555

FRANKLIN v. CHURCHILL CO.
(Sac. 3011.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 13, 1921.
Rehearing Denied Jan. 12, 1922.)

Judgment 707—Refusal of mandamus to compel issuance of patent to public lands is not binding upon party contesting in another suit the right of petitioner to purchase.

The refusal of mandamus to compel the surveyor general to issue a patent to public lands holding that the land was sovereign is not binding on one not a party thereto who is contesting the right of the petitioner for mandamus to purchase the lands.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Siskiyou County; James F. Lodge, Judge.

Contest instituted by W. B. Franklin against the Churchill Company in the office of the surveyor general of the state, and by him referred to the superior court, in accordance with Pol. Code, §§ 3414, 3415. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Jacob P. Wetzel, of San Francisco, for appellant.

A. E. Bolton, of San Francisco, and Tapscott & Tapscott, of Yreka, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. This case is a companion case to Reynolds v. Churchill Co. (Sac. 3014) 202 Pac. 865, this day decided. The record of the two cases is somewhat different, owing to the fact that in the trial court the attorney representing Franklin claimed throughout the proceedings that the Supreme Court had definitely determined in Churchill Co. v. Kingsbury, 178 Cal. 554, 174 Pac. 329, that the lands were sovereign lands, and that therefore neither party had the right to purchase the same from the state of California. His supplemental complaint based upon the judgment of the Supreme Court in the mandamus case of Churchill Co. v. Kingsbury, supra, was not permitted to be filed. By this supplemental complaint the plaintiff in effect contended that the judgment in the mandamus case was conclusive against the defendant and incidentally admitted that it was conclusive against himself. In the latter position he was in error. Acting upon this belief, the plaintiff declined to offer any evidence in the case and contented himself with the record he had made by the motion for leave to file the supplemental complaint and by other motions and proceedings which need not be specifically pointed out. The judgment of the court being in favor of the Churchill Company, the plaintiff appeals to this court. While the more orderly process was that adopted in Reynolds v. Churchill Co., namely, to proceed with the trial of the case and offer in evidence the judgment in the mandamus case (Churchill Co. v. Kingsbury, supra), it is clear that the appellant's position was sufficiently made known to the court and that the court decided against his contention and that he had no intention of abandoning his claims to the land except upon the theory that the trial court was bound to hold the land to be sovereign land.

In view of appellant's contention in regard to the conclusiveness of the judgment in the mandamus case, the judgment of the trial court should be reversed, and the case remanded for subsequent proceedings in accordance herewith. If, upon a new trial, the plaintiff concedes, as he did on the former trial, that the land is sovereign land, the court should decree that he is not entitled to purchase the land, and upon presentation of the judgment in Churchill Co. v. Kingsbury must also decide against the defendant for the reason stated in Reynolds v. Churchill Co., supra.

Judgment reversed.

We concur: SHAW, C. J.; SLOANE, J.; LENNON, J.; SHURTLEFF, J.

187 Cal. 523

DOWD v. ATLAS TAXICAB & AUTO SERVICE CO. et al. (two cases).
(S. F. 9463, 9465.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 12, 1921.)

1. Trial ⇐253(9) — Instruction on contributory negligence of passengers in a taxicab driven at unlawful speed held erroneous, as ignoring facts.

Instructions in action for injury to taxicab passengers, from driving at excessive speed, in effect charging them with contributory negligence, if they knew the machine was being driven at an unlawful speed, but continued voluntarily to ride therein, having the opportunity to leave it, but not doing so, or, if having such knowledge in time to have objected and to have left the machine, or to have its speed decreased prior to the accident, they made no objection and no effort to be permitted to leave, are erroneous, as eliminating the question of what a reasonable person would do under the circumstances, and also consideration of the shown unsuccessful attempts of the passengers to attract the driver's attention by hammering on the window with their fists and calling to him.

2. Carriers ⇐321(21) — The words, "by a preponderance of the evidence," properly stricken from instruction as to carrier's burden of rebutting prima facie showing of negligence.

The words, "by a preponderance of the evidence," are properly stricken from the requested instruction in a passenger's action for injury that, to rebut the plaintiff's prima facie case from his showing that the taxicab was overturned, defendant must make a certain showing.

3. Carriers ⇐316(1) — Inference and not presumption that overturning of taxicab, injuring passenger, was from driver's negligence.

It is an "inference," and not a "presumption," from the showing of the overturning of a taxicab injuring a passenger that it occurred through the negligence of the driver.

In Bank.

Appeals from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Two actions, one by Katherine Dowd, the other by Sibyl E. Dowd, both against the Atlas Taxicab & Auto Service Company, a partnership, and the members thereof. Judgments for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

Ed. F. Jared, S. C. Wright, and Mervyn R. Dowd, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

Ford & Johnson, Geo. K. Ford, and Elliott Johnson, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

RICHARDS, Justice pro tem. These two actions arose out of injuries received by the plaintiff in each through the overturning of a taxicab of the defendants while the plaintiffs were passengers therein. The accident occurred in the city of San Francisco at an early hour in the morning of January 1, 1919. The defendants were at the time co-partners, owning and operating through their employees certain taxicabs for hire within said city. The plaintiffs, with other members of their family and friends, the party numbering seven in all, entered one of these taxicabs driven by an employee of said defendants, and hired by one of the members of said party, other than said plaintiffs, for the purpose of conveying them from a point on O'Farrell street, near Powell, to their respective homes. The taxicab in question was an inclosed limousine, the seat of the driver being on the outside of its glass inclosure. After being driven for a considerable distance along and across the streets of said city, the taxicab skidded upon a wet and slippery portion of Market street at or near the point of its intersection with Grove street, and was overturned, and each of the plaintiffs was severely injured. They commenced these separate actions to recover damages by reason of their said injuries, and each alleged in her complaint that said accident, with resultant injuries, occurred through the negligence of the employee of the defendant operating said taxicab, which consisted in his having carelessly driven and operated the same at an unlawful and excessive rate of speed, by reason of which, without fault on the part of the plaintiffs, the taxicab turned over, and the plaintiffs were thereby seriously injured. The defendants, in their answer in each case, denied the alleged or any acts of negligence on the part of their said employee, and by way of affirmative defense alleged that the said accident and plaintiffs' consequent injuries were the result of contributory negligence of each of the plaintiffs in said actions. The causes were, by agreement of the parties, tried together before the court, sitting with a jury, which in each case returned a verdict in favor of the defendants. Motions for new trial were made and denied in each case, and appeals taken from the judgments respectively rendered and entered therein, said appeals having, by agreement, been presented together upon identical records and briefs.

[1] The first and main contention of the appellant in each of said cases is that the trial court committed prejudicial error in giving to the jury the following two instructions:

"If you find in this case that the automobile in which plaintiff was riding was driven at a rate of speed prohibited by law, and that plaintiff knew of the fact, but nevertheless voluntarily continued to ride in the automobile (and that she had opportunity to leave the machine and did not do so), and if you further find that the accident was proximately caused or contributed to by reason of the speed that the automobile was driven, then I instruct you that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover any damages, and your verdict must be in favor of defendant.

"If you find the automobile in which plaintiff was riding prior to the happening of the accident was being driven at an unlawful rate of speed, and if you further find that plaintiff knew that fact in time to have objected and to have left the automobile, or to have the speed decreased to a lawful rate prior to the happening of the accident, and you further find that plaintiff made no objection and made no effort to be permitted to leave the automobile, and if you further find that the accident was proximately caused or contributed to by such unlawful rate of speed, then I instruct you that plaintiff is not entitled to recover in this action, and your verdict must be in favor of the defendant."

It must be conceded that the foregoing instructions, if erroneous, constituted prejudicial error for which a reversal of each of these judgments would be ordered. They are each predicated upon the premise that the defendants' employee was driving said taxicab at an unlawful rate of speed during much of the way from the point where the plaintiffs became his passengers to the place where the accident occurred, and at the very time of its occurrence. The practically undisputed evidence in each of these cases shows this to have been the fact. The plaintiffs therefore would have been entitled to recover damages for their injuries suffered in said accident unless they were each found by the jury to have been guilty of contributory negligence. The trial court charged the jury in the first of these instructions in substance that, if the plaintiff in each case knew the fact that the automobile in which said plaintiff was riding was being driven at a rate of speed prohibited by law, but nevertheless continued voluntarily to ride therein, having the opportunity to leave the machine, but not doing so, she would not be entitled to recover damages, and their verdict must be for the defendants. In the second of said instructions the court charged the jury in substance that, if the plaintiff knew, prior to the happening of the accident, that the automobile in which she was riding was being driven at an unlawful rate of speed, and knew that fact in time to have objected and to have left the automobile or to have the speed thereof decreased to a lawful rate prior to the happening of the accident, but made no objection and made no effort to be permitted to leave the automobile, she would not be entitled to recover damages and their verdict must be for the defendants.

Each of said instructions, in our opinion, constitutes an erroneous statement of the law. These plaintiffs were each passengers for hire in the taxicab owned by the defendants, and driven under their directions by their employee, who was in control of the operation, route and speed of said vehicle, subject only to the general direction of the plaintiffs as to their respective destinations. It was the primary duty of the defendants herein to furnish a competent driver of the taxicabs they were furnishing to passengers for hire, and it was the primary duty of such driver to exercise, with respect to the safety of said passengers, the highest degree of care. There is no evidence herein other than that deducible from the fact immediately preceding and attending this accident that the driver was incompetent or that he was not at all times up to the moment of such accident in full control of the machine, nor are the instructions criticised herein predicated upon any such assumption.

In the case of Little v. Hackett, 116 U. S. 366, 6 Sup. Ct. 391, 29 L. Ed. 652, Mr. Justice Field, after an exhaustive review of the cases upon the subject up to the time of his decision, states what would seem to be the reasonable rule respecting the duty and responsibility of passengers for hire in public conveyances.

"There is no distinction in principle whether the passengers be on a public conveyance like a railroad train or an omnibus, or be on a hack hired from a public stand in the street for a drive. Those on a hack do not become responsible for the negligence of the driver if they exercise no control over him further than to indicate the route they wish to travel or the places to which they wish to go. If he is their agent so that his negligence can be imputed to them to prevent their recovery against a third party, he must be their agent in all other respects, so far as the management of the carriage is concerned, and responsibility to third parties would attach to them for injuries caused by his negligence in the course of his employment. But, as we have already stated, responsibility cannot, within any recognized rules of law, be fastened upon one who has in no way interfered with and controlled in the matter causing the injury. From the simple fact of hiring the carriage or riding in it no such liability can arise. The party hiring or riding must in some way have co-operated in producing the injury complained of before he incurs any liability for it. 'If the law were otherwise,' as said by Mr. Justice Depue in his elaborate opinion in the latest case in New Jersey, 'not only the hirer of the coach, but also all the passengers in it, would be under a constraint to mount the box and superintend the conduct of the driver in the management and control of his team, or be put for remedy exclusively to an action against the irresponsible driver or equally irresponsible owner of a coach taken, it may be, from a coach stand, for the consequences of an injury which was the product of the co-operating wrongful acts of the driver and of a third person, and that, too, though the passengers were ignorant of the character of the driver, and of the responsibility of the owner of the team, and strangers to the route over which they were to be carried.' New York, Lake Erie & Western Railroad v. Steinbrenner, 47 N. J. L. (18 Vroom), 161, 171."

In the case of Southern Pacific Co. v. Wright, 248 Fed. 261, 160 C. C. A. 339, the court lays down what would seem to be the general rule governing the duties of passengers for hire in circumstances of the character of those involved in the instant case as follows:

"Generally it is the duty of the passenger to sit still and say nothing. It is his duty because any other course is fraught with danger. Interference, by laying hold of an operating lever, or by exclamation, or even by direction or inquiry, is generally to be deprecated; in the long run, the greater safety lies in letting the driver alone."

In the case of Bernhardt v. City & S. Ry. Co., 263 Fed. 1009, 49 App. D. C. 265, the general rule is thus stated in a case in many of its aspects identical with the case at bar:

"It seems to us that where, for instance, a person hires a taxicab to convey him from his residence to a depot or some other point, he is not required, save under exceptional circumstances, to be on the lookout for danger, at the risk of being charged with contributory negligence in case of accident if he fails to do so. The primary duty of caring for the safety of the vehicle and passenger rests upon the driver, and unless the danger is known to the passenger he may rely upon the assumption that the driver will exercise proper care and caution. But, if the passenger knows that the driver is incompetent or careless, or that he is not aware of a danger known to the passenger, and is not taking proper precautions, it is his duty to notify the driver of the peril, and it may devolve upon him to insist that the driver shall stop the vehicle and allow him to alight, or take some other suitable action for his own protection. If the passenger fails in any of these respects, he may be chargeable with contributory negligence. Anthony v. Kiefner, 96 Kan. 194, 200, 150 Pac. 524, L. R. A. 1915F, 876, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 264."

In the case of Thompson v. Los Angeles, etc., Ry. Co., 165 Cal. 748, 134 Pac. 709, the general principle set forth in the foregoing cases is recognized and restated as follows:

"That the chauffeur operating the automobile was guilty of negligence in running upon the track along which the motorcar was approaching in plain view is too clear for discussion, and is, indeed, conceded by the respondent. But the fact that he was negligent does not, of course, conclude the plaintiff on the issue of her contributory negligence. She was a passenger for hire. The chauffeur was not employed by her, and she did not undertake to direct the manner in which the automobile should be operated. The negligence of the chauffeur is not to be imputed to her. Little v. Hackett, 116 U. S. 366, 29 L. Ed. 652, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 391; Bresce v. Los Angeles Traction Co., 149 Cal. 131, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1059, 85 Pac. 152; Fujise v. Los Angeles Ry. Co., 12 Cal. App. 207, 218, 107 Pac. 317. It is, of course, true that a passenger in a vehicle operated by another is bound to exercise ordinary care for his own safety. If such passenger is aware that the operator is carelessly rushing into danger, it may be incumbent upon him to take proper steps for his own safety. But here there was evidence that Mrs. Thompson was a stranger in San Diego, that she did not know that the road crossed a railway track, and that she was not aware of the approaching car. Under these circumstances it certainly cannot be said, as matter of law, that she was negligent in failing to call the attention of the chauffeur to the danger of the situation. Nor was the evidence such as to compel the conclusion that the chauffeur was manifestly incompetent and inattentive to his duties to such a degree as to impose upon the plaintiff any greater obligation of watchfulness than that which would otherwise have been hers."

In the case at bar there is the added element that the undisputed evidence shows, and the court in its said instructions assumes, that the plaintiffs knew that the automobile in which they were riding was being driven at a rate of speed prohibited by law, and the question which arises is whether mere knowledge of this fact is to be held to cast upon the plaintiffs the duty of objecting to the conduct of the driver in so operating the machine to the extent of either refusing to continue to ride in the automobile or of having the speed decreased to a lawful rate prior to the happening of the accident. The trial court so charged the jury in these instructions, and in so doing omitted, we think, an essential element noted and referred to in the foregoing cases, and particularly emphasized in the case of Thompson v. Los Angeles, etc., Ry. Co., supra. That element consisted in the right of the plaintiffs to have their and each of their duty in the premises measured by the rule of ordinary care. Knowing that the vehicle was being driven at an unlawful rate of speed, they were only bound to take such proper precautions for their own safety as a reasonable person under similar conditions would take. They were not bound to leave the machine unless such act would be the act of a reasonable person. It might well be that for a passenger to attempt to leave a taxicab being driven at an unlawful rate of speed would be a most unreasonable and reckless act. Neither were they bound to attract or distract the attention of the driver simply because he was proceeding at an unlawful rate of speed, unless the taking of steps to that end would, under the circumstances, have been the act of a reasonable person; since it might well be that so to do would involve greater danger than would arise from proceeding at said rate of speed.

The instructions of the court made no allowance for these alternatives, but bound the plaintiffs upon their mere knowledge that the driver was proceeding at an unlawful rate of speed to either leave the machine or compel a reduction of the speed, regardless of whether either of these things could be done or attempted with reasonable safety, and under penalty of losing their right to recovery in the event of an accident caused by such excessive speed. The result of the adoption of the rule embodied in these instructions would be that of imposing upon every passenger in a public conveyance, whether a railroad train, a street car, or a motor vehicle, the duty, whenever they deemed it was proceeding at an unlawful or excessive rate of speed, of leaving the conveyance, or of pulling the bell cord signaling the motorman, attracting the attention of the driver, or taking such other steps as were available to either leave the vehicle or to compel the engineer, the motorman, or driver to bring the vehicle to a standstill, or at least work a reduction in its speed. No such duty is, in our opinion, imposed upon passengers for hire in a public conveyance, and it follows that these instructions of the trial court, in so far as they attempted to impose such duty, were erroneous.

These instructions were also erroneous for another reason made plain by the evidence in the case, which shows that these plaintiffs, becoming nervous over the rate of speed and zigzagging motion with which the machine was proceeding, began making efforts by hammering on the window with their hands and calling aloud in an effort to attract the attention of the driver and cause him to lessen the speed of the machine. It was for the jury to determine the sufficiency of these efforts to absolve the plaintiffs of responsibility under proper instructions of the court. These instructions leave no room for such interpretation, since in effect they charge the jury that the plaintiffs, knowing that the speed of the car was excessive, must either have left the car or succeeded in compelling a reduction in its speed. They did not do the former, and their effort to do the latter, however reasonable, being unsuccessful, would, under these instructions, avail them nothing. Under the foregoing authorities this cannot be the law.

[2, 3] The appellants further contend that the trial court erred in modifying a requested instruction and in giving said instruction to the jury in its modified form. The instruction as asked by the appellants read as follows:

"I charge you that upon a trial of this character it is only necessary for the plaintiffs, in order to establish a prima facie case, to prove the overturning of the taxicab and the injuries caused thereby. Having done this, they may rest, for the presumption is that the overturning occurred through the negligence of the driver, and the burden of proving that there has been no negligence is then cast upon the defendants. In order to rebut this presumption of negligence the defendants must show by a preponderance of evidence that the overturning was a result of an inevitable casualty, or of some cause which human care and foresight could not prevent. The law holds the defendants responsible for the slightest negligence. It is incumbent upon the defendants to explain how the overturning of the automobile occurred, and, if they fail to do this, the presumption of negligence remains."

The court modified this instruction by changing the word "presumption" where it appears therein to the word "inference," and by striking out the words "by a preponderance of evidence." The instructions as thus modified and then given by the court read as follows:

"I charge you that upon a trial of this character it is only necessary for the plaintiffs, in order to establish a prima facie case, to prove the overturning of the taxicab and the injuries caused thereby. Having done this, they may rest, for the inference then arises that the overturning occurred through the negligence of the driver, and the burden of proving that there has been no negligence is then cast upon the defendants. In order to rebut this presumption of negligence the defendants must show that the overturning was a result of an inevitable casualty, or of some cause which human care or foresight could not prevent. The law holds the defendants responsible for the slightest negligence. It is incumbent upon the defendants to explain how the overturning of the automobile occurred, and, if they fail to do this, the inference of negligence remains."

The trial court committed no error in making the modification above noted in the plaintiffs' requested instruction, and in giving such instruction in its modified form. The instruction as requested by the plaintiffs differs from the instruction approved by this court in the case of Bonneau v. North Shore R. R. Co., 152 Cal. 406, 93 Pac. 106, 125 Am. St. Rep. 68, upon which the plaintiffs rely, by the insertion therein of the words "by a preponderance of evidence," which words the trial court properly struck from said instruction. Valente v. Sierra Ry. Co., 151 Cal. 534, 91 Pac. 481; Learned v. Penn. Rapid Trans. Co., 193 Pac. 591. The trial court also properly modified the plaintiffs' requested instruction by the substitution of the word "inference" for "presumption" therein. O'Connor v. Mennie, 169 Cal. 217, 146 Pac. 674; Onell v. Chappell, 38 Cal. App. 376, 176 Pac. 370; Thomas v. Visalia Electric R. R. Co., 169 Cal. 658, 147 Pac. 972; Davis v. Hearst, 160 Cal. 143, 116 Pac. 530. We think the instruction as modified by the trial court, and given in such modified form to the jury, embraced a correct statement of the law.

The judgment in each case is reversed.

We concur: SHAW, C. J.; LENNON, J.; SLOANE, J.; SHURTLEFF, J.; WASTE, J.

WILBUR, J. I concur. In view of a new trial, however, I think that it should be stated that the defendant cannot predicate a charge of contributory negligence upon a failure of the plaintiffs to object to the driving of the car at an excessive speed which caused the accident. In such case the proximate cause of the accident is the negligence of the driver in driving at an excessive speed, and not the failure of the passenger to remonstrate with him for his negligence in so driving. Nor is the failure of a passenger to leave the car because of such excessive speed an act of contributory negligence. The passenger had a right to rely upon the duty of the driver to exercise the highest degree of care for his protection. This obligation was contractual and continuing, and the passenger was not obliged to rescind the contract of carriage because of the misconduct of the carrier, but could rely upon the continuing obligation of the carrier to exercise due care for his protection; and such reliance is not an act of negligence.

187 Cal. 533

TULARE WATER CO. v. STATE WATER COMMISSION et al. (two cases).
(S. F. Nos. 9842, 9845.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 12, 1921.)

1. Waters and water courses — 133—Commission cannot arbitrarily deny application for appropriation.

The State Water Commission cannot, under St. 1913, p. 1012, arbitrarily deny an application made in conformity to the law for the appropriation of water that is subject to appropriation, the positive right to such permit being granted by section 17, no permission at all being required by prior law (Civ. Code, §§ 1410-1422).

2. Waters and water courses — 133—Commission without jurisdiction to finally determine existence of water subject to appropriation.

While St. 1913, p. 1012, authorizes an investigation by the State Water Commission when application is made for a permit to appropriate water, and the exercise of some degree of discretion as to the sufficiency of the application and as to the existence of water subject to appropriation, such Commission is without jurisdiction to finally determine the existence or nonexistence of water subject to appropriation, and in such a case its denial of an application, if held to be a judicial determination of the right, would leave the petitioner without remedy, as no appeal is provided for, and certiorari would only go to the regularity of the proceeding, and not the merits of the ruling.

3. Constitutional law — 318—Waters and water courses — 128—Arbitrary action in refusing permit to appropriate water denial of due process of law.

To conclude the rights of would-be appropriators of water by the extrajudicial, and perhaps arbitrary, action of a state board of water commissioners under St. 1913, p. 1012, would be to deprive such applicant of a valuable property right without due process of law.

4. Mandamus ☞87—Proper remedy to compel reasonable exercise of discretionary powers by Water Commission.

Mandamus is a proper remedy to compel a reasonable exercise by the State Water Commission of such discretionary powers as are granted it by St. 1913, p. 1012, when an application is made for a permit to appropriate water for the purpose of irrigating agricultural lands, although the obligation of the Commission to perform depends upon the determination of the existence of certain prerequisite facts.

5. Mandamus ☞163—Allegations taken as true on demurrer.

Allegations of petition for writ of mandate must be taken as true on demurrer.

In Bank.

Appeals from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George E. Crothers, Judge.

Petition by the Tulare Water Company for a writ of mandate against the State Water Commission of the State of California and others to compel granting of permit to appropriate waters, and also certiorari to review and annul action of the same defendants in denying petitioner's application for leave to make a water appropriation. Judgments for defendants in each case, and petitioner appeals. Judgment in proceeding for writ of mandate reversed, with directions, and judgment in proceeding for writ of review affirmed.

Edward F. Treadwell, of San Francisco (Berkeley B. Blake, of Sacramento, and Forrest A. Cobb, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

L. D. Bohnett, of San Jose, for respondents.

SLOANE, J. The petitioner, Tulare Water Company, appellant in these actions, applied to the State Water Commission for a permit to appropriate water of the Kern river for the purpose of irrigating agricultural lands.

The application was in due form and in conformity with the provisions of the act of 1913 creating a Water Commission and providing for the presenting and granting of permission to make such appropriations (Stats. 1913, p. 1012).

The application was denied without a hearing by the commissioners, and the petitioner thereupon instituted a proceeding in mandamus before the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco to compel the granting of such permit.

A demurrer was sustained to the petition for writ of mandate, without leave to amend, and judgment was made and entered for the defendants. Petitioner thereupon took an appeal from this judgment to the District Court of Appeal of the First Appellate District.

Being uncertain as to its remedy, petitioner also instituted a proceeding in the superior court for a writ of certiorari to review and annul the action of the Water Commission in denying without a hearing its application for leave to make its water appropriation.

This petition was likewise denied upon the sustaining of demurrer thereto, and an appeal was taken to the Court of Appeal from this judgment also.

Both appeals come to this court upon an order granting a hearing after judgment in the District Court of Appeal in favor of petitioner in the mandamus case and in favor of respondent on the writ of review.

As both appeals involve a general construction of the powers and duties of the Water Commission under the act of 1913, we will consider them together.

The first contention of the petitioner is that upon the presentation of an application in due form and in compliance with the rules of the Water Commission it became the duty of the Commission as a ministerial act to issue a permit for the appropriation asked for, and that the issuance of such permission may be enforced by mandamus; and, secondly, that if the Commission has any judicial function in the matter, there was a refusal to exercise it in passing upon the application presented, and its action in the matter is subject to review by certiorari as being in excess of its jurisdiction.

Section 17 of the Water Commission Act provides that—

"Any person, firm, association or corporation may apply for and secure from the state water commission, in conformity with this act and in conformity with reasonable rules and regulations adopted from time to time by the state water commission, a permit for any unappropriated water or for water which having been appropriated or used flows back into a stream, lake or other body of water within this state. * * *"

Section 15 provides that—

"The State Water Commission shall allow, under the provisions of this act, the appropriation of unappropriated water or of the use thereof, or of water or the use thereof which may hereafter cease to be appropriated, or which may hereafter be declared to be unappropriated, or which, having been used under claim of riparian proprietorship or appropriation finds its way back into a stream, lake or other body of water and also such water as is declared by section 11 of this act to be subject to appropriation."

Section 11 defines with greater particularity what waters are subject to appropriation, including riparian waters that have not been applied to riparian lands within a specified time.

Petitioner claims a full compliance with all the requirements of the act and of the rules and regulations of the Commission in preparing and presenting its application, and no point is made by respondents of any omission in this respect.

It must be assumed, then, on the pleadings, that the petitioner complied with, and has in the pending matter pleaded, all the conditions required to entitle it to a permit to appropriate such quantity of the waters of the Kern river as it could put to beneficial use for the purposes alleged, and which was at the time unappropriated.

If any discretion was vested in the Commission, or any matter submitted for judicial consideration, it was to determine whether there was any unappropriated water in the Kern river at that time subject to this proposed appropriation.

[1] The Commission surely does not possess and could not be invested with power to arbitrarily deny an application made in conformity to the law for the appropriation of water that was subject to appropriation.

The purpose of the act is clearly to permit any person or corporation desiring to make any of the enumerated beneficial uses of waters of the state, not otherwise utilized, to avail itself of this right of appropriation.

Under the law in force prior to the adoption of this act (Civ. Code, §§ 1410-1422) no permission was required for the appropriation of waters of the state. All that was required to create a preferential right to such water was to actually appropriate it to some authorized beneficial use, or to make a water filing to be followed with due diligence by an actual user.

The obvious aim of the Water Commission Act was not to abolish, but to regulate and administer, this privilege.

The positive right to such permit is granted by section 17 of the act to any person who makes application as provided by the act and the rules of the Commission. The mode and manner of making the application is prescribed. But what is the jurisdiction granted to the Commission in determining the status of the water supply or the priority of rights thereto and in ascertaining if the water claimed is subject to appropriation?

The Commission is authorized by section 10—

"to investigate for the purpose of this act all streams, stream systems, portions of stream systems, lakes, or other bodies of water, and to take testimony in regard to the rights to water or the use of water thereon or therein, and ascertain whether or not such water, or any portion thereof, or the use of said water or any portion thereof, heretofore filed upon or attempted to be appropriated by any person, firm, association, or corporation, is appropriated under the laws of this state."

[2] While it appears from the provisions above quoted that the act is intended to authorize an investigation, and the exercise of some degree of discretion by the Water Commission as to the sufficiency of the application, and as to the existence of water subject to appropriation, no formal hearing is prescribed, and no authority granted to judicially determine the fact as to unappropriated water, or to adjudicate conflicting claims that might exist thereto. Even if a hearing could be required, the Commission is without jurisdiction to finally determine the existence or nonexistence of water subject to appropriation, and in such a case its denial of an application, if held to be a judicial determination of the right, would leave the petitioner without remedy, as no appeal is provided for, and certiorari would only go to the regularity of the proceeding, and not to the merits of the ruling.

[3] In view of the several other powers and duties devolving upon the Water Commission under this act in the supervision of the distribution of water subject to appropriation, and in determining the rights and obligations of interested parties, in which hearings of a judicial nature are provided for with much particularity, and provision is made for review of action of the Water Commission by the courts, it is fair to conclude that it was not intended to grant to the Commission in the matter of this preliminary permit to file upon unappropriated water more than a supervisory discretion in the matter of granting such permits. At any rate, it is manifestly impracticable for the Water Commission to authoritatively determine that there is not water in a given stream subject to appropriation. What is unappropriated water is a constantly fluctuating question, depending upon the seasonal flow of the stream, the annual rainfall, the forfeiture of prior appropriations, and default in the use of riparian rights. To conclude the rights of would-be appropriators, by the extrajudicial, and perhaps arbitrary, action of a board of water commissioners, would be to deprive such applicant of a valuable property right without due process of law.

[4] Under such conditions mandamus is a proper remedy to compel a reasonable exercise of such discretionary powers as are granted by the act. It is well settled that mandamus will issue to correct an abuse of discretion, if the case is otherwise proper. Wood v. Strother, 76 Cal. 545, 18 Pac. 766, 9 Am. St. Rep. 249; Ex parte Bradley, 7 Wall. 377, 19 L. Ed. 214; State v. Lafayette County, 41 Mo. 226; Village of Glencoe v. People, 78 Ill. 382; People v. Superior Court, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 285; Hammel v. Neylan, 31 Cal. App. 22, 159 Pac. 618.

As in all cases of ministerial duty, the obligation to perform depends upon the determination of the existence of certain prerequisite facts, but, where such facts exist, the duty is mandatory.

Mere authority to decide as to the existence of a given fact does not necessarily take the official or board so deciding beyond the reach of a writ of mandate, especially where there is no remedy by appeal.

This doctrine is well stated in a note to Weeden v. Town Council, 98 Am. Dec. 375, citing in its support Rex v. Justices, 1 W. Black, 606, and Commonwealth v. Justices, 2 Va. Cas. 9, and is as follows:

"For instance the law may confer a right upon a person or tribunal, judicial or otherwise, which, on being shown that these acts were done, is directed to concede the right, or to issue some evidence of it. In such cases it is manifest that some intelligence and judgment must be employed in determining whether the designated facts exist. But the examining person or tribunal may capriciously determine that the acts have not been performed, and withhold the right, or the evidence of it. If there is no remedy by resort to some appellate proceeding, the courts must either investigate the questions involved, and by mandamus compel appropriate action, or suffer the injured party to be capriciously denied a right to which he shows himself unquestionably entitled, and we think that all fair minded courts will compel the requisite action by mandamus."

The same rule is recognized in Wood v. Strother, supra. The action was a proceeding in mandamus to compel the auditor of San Francisco to countersign a street assessment warrant under an act which required that before signing he "shall examine the contract, the steps taken previous thereto, and the record of assessments, and must be satisfied that the proceedings have been legal and fair." The argument against the writ was that the statute requires the auditor to examine the proceedings, and satisfy himself that they are legal before signing, and that, if he has examined them and become satisfied that they are not legal, the most that can be said is that he has committed an error in a matter confided to his discretion, and that the function of the writ is not to review such exercise of discretion. The opinion, however, after reviewing many authorities on the subject, says:

"In view of the foregoing cases, it seems a mere perversion of language to say that the writ will never issue to control judicial action or to compel a tribunal to act in a particular way. It is by no means intended to assert that the writ could issue in this state in all the cases above referred to. The propriety of the issuance of the writ in any case must depend upon whether, under the law of the state where the litigation arises, the determination was intended to be final, and, if not, upon whether the system of practice furnishes any other adequate remedy. These things might be different in different states; but the cases cited serve to show that the formulas above mentioned are not universally and literally true, and that it is dangerous to reason from them as if they were so.

"In every case the tribunal that is to act must determine in the first instance whether the case is a proper one for its action. And in our opinion the true tests are whether its determination is intended by law to be final, and, if not, whether there is any other 'plain, speedy, and adequate remedy.' If the determination of the tribunal was intended to be final, it is plain that it cannot be disturbed, either on mandamus or in any other way. If it was not intended to be final, but there is another 'plain, speedy, and adequate remedy,' the writ cannot issue; for it was not designed to usurp the place of other remedies. But if the determination was not intended to be final, and there is no other adequate remedy, the writ must issue. Otherwise there would be an admitted wrong without a remedy. The writ issues in such case to prevent a failure of justice. And this is its ancient office. In the language of Lord Mansfield: 'It was introduced to prevent disorder from a failure of justice and defect of police. Therefore it ought to be used upon all occasions where the law has established no specific remedy, and where, in justice and good government, there ought to be one.'"

Stockton Railroad Co. v. Stockton, 51 Cal. 328, 338, was a proceeding by mandamus to compel the delivery to petitioner of certain bonds. It was urged by respondent that under the statute governing the matter the bonds could not be issued until the common council certified to certain facts. This the council refused to do on account of alleged failures to comply with the conditions. Niles, J., writing the opinion in the case, says:

"On this theory the common council might forever defeat the delivery of the bonds, by declining to be satisfied, even though it appeared by the most convincing proofs that the road in every minute particular had been constructed and stocked in the manner and within the time prescribed by the statute. We had a similar question before us in the case of the People v. Supervisors of Alameda, 45 Cal. 395. In that case a petition, signed by the requisite number of qualified electors, had been presented to the board of supervisors, requesting that an election be called on the question of removing the county seat. The board refused to order an election, and an alternative writ of mandate was issued out of this court. The proceedings for the removal of the county seat were had under section 3976 et seq. of the Political Code; and in its answer to the suit the board set up as one of its defenses that, under the statute, it was its duty to determine whether the petition was signed by the requisite number of qualified electors, and it was not satisfied from the proofs offered in support of the petition that it was so signed, and for that, among other reasons, had declined to order an election. We struck out this portion of the answer, as constituting no defense, and ordered an issue to be tried whether, in point of fact, the petition was signed by the requisite number of qualified electors. Our view of the law then was, and yet is, that if an official duty is to be performed on the happening of an event, the officer cannot arbitrarily or capriciously refuse to perform it, after the event has happened, on the plea that he is not satisfied that it has happened. If the fact exists, and is established by sufficient proofs, it is his legal duty to be satisfied, and to act accordingly."

In Iglin v. Hoppin, 156 Cal. 484, 105 Pac. 582, a case quite similar in its facts to the one before us, it was there sought by mandamus to compel the supervisors of Yolo county to subscribe a specific order theretofore given by them denying the application of petitioner to have certain lands in a reclamation district, set off into an independent district, and to enter an order granting the petition. A general demurrer was sustained on the ground that exclusive jurisdiction to determine the facts upon which the order was made was vested by the Legislature in the supervisors, and that their action could not be reviewed by mandamus proceedings. The opinion holds that upon the facts pleaded and taken as admitted on the demurrer the petitioners were entitled to relief by mandamus.

In Puterbaugh v. Wadham, 162 Cal. 611, 123 Pac. 804, this court has said:

"It is undoubtedly true that the writ of mandamus is not a writ of error, and that, generally speaking, it is not available for the purpose of altering or varying in any particular the finding of a judicial or quasi judicial body or officer acting within its or his appropriate jurisdiction; but where the facts are not disputed, and the only matter to be determined is the duty of the body or officer under the law, the court will define such duty and enforce not only its performance, but the carrying out of the obligations of the respondent body or officer in a particular manner."

To the same effect is the decision in Harrelson v. San Joaquin Irr. Dist., 20 Cal. App. 324, 128 Pac. 1010.

[5] These citations are at least sufficient authority for holding in the matter before us that the trial court was in error in sustaining the demurrer to the petition for writ of mandate. All the allegations of the petition must be taken as true on demurrer, and such petition alleged all the facts required to entitle the petitioners to the relief demanded.

The judgment is reversed as to the proceeding for writ of mandate, with direction to the trial court to overrule the demurrer and hear the cause on the merits.

As to the petition for writ of review, there being no judicial powers vested in the Water Commission, so far as applies to the matter before us, the judgment thereon is affirmed.

We concur: WILBUR, J.; LENNON, J.; SHURTLEFF, J.

SHAW, C. J. (concurring). I concur in the opinion of Mr. Justice SLOANE, so far as it deals with the question of the appeal from the judgment of the court below denying a writ of mandate, being the appeal S. F. No. 9842.

I think, however, that something more may properly be said on the question whether or not the Water Commission, in exercising the power conferred upon it by the sections of the statute particularly considered in the opinion, may, under some circumstances, act in a judicial capacity. It is obvious that, if it does so it will be taking property of one person and giving it to another; in other words, that it will be exercising powers which cannot be exercised except by courts authorized by the Constitution.

Section 1 of article 6 of the Constitution declares that—

"The judicial power of the state shall be vested in the Senate, sitting as a court of impeachment, in a Supreme Court, District Courts of Appeal, superior courts and such inferior courts as the Legislature may establish in any incorporated city or town, township, county, or city and county."

If the Water Commission is acting judicially, it is doing so because it is determining the rights and titles of individuals to private real property, and in that capacity it would be acting as a court as fully as a court of general jurisdiction would be acting when it adjudicates the title to real property. Quinchard v. Board, 113 Cal. 669, 45 Pac. 856; People v. Board, 122 Cal. 424, 55 Pac. 131; Rhode Island v. Mass., 37 U. S. (11 Pet.) 718, 9 L. Ed. 697; Prentis v. Atlantic, etc., Co., 211 U. S. 226, 29 Sup. Ct. 67, 53 L. Ed. 150; Marin, etc., Co. v. R. R. Comm., 171 Cal. 712, 154 Pac. 864, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 114.

The effect of section 1, art. 6, aforesaid, is to vest in the courts therein mentioned the entire judicial power of the state. It is not within the power of the Legislature to vest in any other body any general judicial power to establish and declare the right and title to private property. The Water Commission is not one of the superior courts of the state and could not be made such court or be given the powers thereof, and it is not an inferior court with jurisdiction limited to incorporated cities, or towns, townships, counties, or cities and counties. On the contrary, its jurisdiction is state-wide. Consequently it is not a court which comes within the purview of said section 1 and it is not within the power of the Legislature to give that Commission such judicial power. Western, etc., Co. v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 413, 156 Pac. 491, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 390; Pacific, etc., Co. v. Pillsbury, 171 Cal. 322, 153 Pac. 24. There is no other section of the Constitution which purports to confer power upon the Legislature to invest such commissions with judicial powers of this nature. Certain judicial powers may be invested in the Industrial Accident Commission and in the Railroad Commission, but, with these exceptions, all the general judicial power of the state must be vested in the courts named in the Constitution and in such inferior courts of local jurisdiction as may be established under said section 1.

For this reason I am of the opinion that the act confers no judicial power upon the Water Commission, and, if it purported to do and so far as it may purport to do so, it would be and is without effect. The consequence is that any award is assumed to make in the exercise of such purported judicial power would be absolutely void, and that certiorari would not lie to review its action in that regard.

187 Cal. 510

COLDWELL v. BOARD OF PUBLIC WORKS OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (S. F. 9694.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 9, 1921.)

1. Records — 14—Estimates, plans, etc., prepared by subordinates of city engineer, open to inspection as "other matters in the office of any officer," but not as "public records."

Estimates, plans, drawings, maps, and other data prepared by the assistants and subordinates of the city engineer of the city and county of San Francisco, to be submitted to him for his approval, in connection with the construction of a municipal water supply system of which the engineer had charge as an officer of the board of public works, are not, before such approval by the engineer, "public records" open to inspection by any citizen of the state, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1888, 1892, 1893, 1894, and Pol. Code, § 1032, and Charter of the City and County of San Francisco, art. 6, § 6, and article 16, § 16, but may be inspected as "other matters in the office of any officer," within Pol. Code, § 1032, notwithstanding tentative character thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Public Record.]

2. Records — 14 — That city engineer had communicated matters to city attorney did not affect citizen's right of inspection.

Under Pol. Code, § 1032, the public had a right to inspect public records or other matters in the office of the city engineer, though city engineer had communicated them to the city attorney, notwithstanding Code Civ. Proc. § 1881, subds. 2 and 5, relating to confidential communications.

3. Records — 14—Data in city engineer's office, having once been inspected by some citizens, could not be withheld from inspection of others as confidential matters.

Where data prepared by city engineer's office in connection with construction of city waterworks system had been inspected by some citizens, the right of another citizen to inspect it could not be denied on the ground that it was confidential; the matter having lost its confidential character by the previous inspection.

In Bank.

Appeals from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George E. Crothers, Judge.

Petition for writ of mandamus by Colbert Coldwell against the Board of Public Works of the City and County of San Francisco and others. From judgment granting petition with certain exceptions, the defendants appeal, and from such judgment, and also from order denying his motion to vacate and set aside the judgment entered and to amend the conclusions of law contained in the court's findings, the petitioner appeals. Affirmed as modified.

Robert B. Gaylord, of San Francisco, for appellant.

George Lull, City Atty., Robert M. Searls, Special Atty., both of San Francisco, for respondents.

LAWLOR, J. This is an appeal by both petitioner, Colbert Coldwell, and defendants, the board of public works of the city and county of San Francisco, the individual members thereof, and M. M. O'Shaughnessy, the city engineer, from a judgment granting, with certain exceptions, a petition to the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco for a writ of mandate to compel the defendants to allow petitioner to view and take copies of certain documents and data in the office of the city engineer of the city and county of San Francisco, and by the petitioner from an order of the court denying petitioner's motion to vacate and set aside the judgment entered and to amend the conclusions of law contained in the court's findings. As the same questions are involved in both appeals, they may be considered together.

The petition alleged that the city and county of San Francisco was engaged in the acquisition and construction of a municipal water supply with engineering works at Hetch Hetchy, in the state of California; that in connection with the Hetch Hetchy project the board of public works and M. M. O'Shaughnessy as city engineer had done a large amount of work; that the board of public works had in its possession a large number of plans, specifications, reports, contracts, estimates, certificates, receipts, surveys, field notes, maps, plats, profiles, and other papers relating to the Hetch Hetchy project, which included records of certain specified structures, drill borings, and a proposed section of the dam; that petitioner, a citizen of the city and county of San Francisco, desired to inform himself and others with regard to the work; that he desired to investigate the records of the Hetch Hetchy project, including both those generally described and those specifically described; that he had made demand on the defendants that he be given access to and inspection of the records mentioned, which demand had been refused; and petitioner prayed that defendants be ordered to allow petitioner to inspect all the records mentioned, with the privilege of taking notes, copies and other data therefrom.

In their answer, the defendants alleged that—

"There are in the office of the city engineer a large number of incomplete and unapproved maps, plans, estimates, studies, reports, and memoranda relating more or less directly to the Hetch Hetchy project, some of which have been prepared or are in the course of preparation by the city engineer's assistants, some of which have been left there by employees of previous administrations, but none of which have been finally approved by the city engineer or filed with the board of public works or made a part of any public or official transaction. As to the last-described maps, plans, estimates, studies, reports and memoranda, defendants allege that the city engineer has not had the opportunity of passing on such data either in the way of approval or disapproval; that as at present constituted, said data is of the kind and type which may be modified, corrected or destroyed at the will of the city engineer or the assistant in charge of the same; that they have not been made the basis of and are not records of any public or official acts or transactions; that they are not public records, public books, public writings, public documents or public matters; that the interests of the public and the Hetch Hetchy project require that said data be kept and withheld from inspection by the petitioner or his agents"; that defendants deny that "until the city engineer completes, approves, and files said data or other matter with the board of public works, that the same passes into the possession, custody, or control of the board of public works, or becomes a part of any public record whatever. Defendants deny that they, or either or any of them, have ever refused or still refuse to petitioner or his representatives or agents access to that portion of the hereinabove described data which is a matter of public record, and allege that all such data or matter which constitutes part of the public records of the city and county of San Francisco has at all times been, and is still open to said petitioner."

Then followed certain allegations that it was necessary to keep private the information concerning the work on the Hetch Hetchy project until the plans for it had been approved, and impugning the motives of petitioner in seeking the information he wanted, and that "part of the data in the city engineer's office to which access is sought by petitioner consist of confidential reports, estimates and data collected and compiled by assistants and other engineers employed for that purpose, and held for use in pending litigation and investigations affecting the Hetch Hetchy project; that it would be extremely detrimental to the interests of said project and the interests of the people and citizens of the city and county of San Francisco if such data should be given publicity"; and that in refusing inspection of the data asked by petitioner, defendant city engineer was acting under authority and instruction from the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco.

The court found that all the allegations of the petition were true, except those of paragraph X, which concerned the making of a demand for inspection by petitioner, his agents and representatives. In that connection the court found in detail that petitioner had demanded of defendants that he, his agents and representatives, be given access to and inspection of all the records mentioned, with the privilege of taking copies, notes, and data therefrom, but that the defendants had refused such demand, except that petitioner had been accorded the right to inspect the detailed specifications of the tunnel aqueduct between Early Intake and Moccasin creek, including the record of certain drill borings and the city engineer's estimate thereon, and other records which defendants admitted constituted public records. It was also found that the purpose of the petitioner was not to mislead or prejudice the public mind against the Hetch Hetchy project, and that it was not the petitioner's motive to find in the records to which access was sought a basis for unfair or sinister criticism of the Hetch Hetchy project; that there was data consisting of confidential reports, estimates, and data prepared for use in pending litigation, which it would be detrimental to the interests of the people of the city and county of San Francisco to disclose prior to the time at which it would become necessary to use it in connection with the litigation; that the city engineer had permitted all of the records and other matters mentioned in the petition to be examined by an investigating committee from the Civic League of Improvement Clubs, and that they had been examined by such committee; that the board of supervisors had instructed the city engineer to refuse inspection to petitioner, as alleged in the answer.

The conclusions of law were to the effect that petitioner was entitled to a writ of mandate as prayed, "except that such writ shall not decree to said petitioner the right to inspect or take copies, notes or data from any of the confidential reports, estimates or data, collected or compiled by assistants or other engineers employed for that purpose for the use of the city attorney of the city and county of San Francisco, or other attorney at law acting for said city and county, in advising the defendants in respect to their official rights and action or for use by said attorneys or either of them in legal proceedings * * * to which proceedings the defendants or any of them in their official capacity, or the city and county of San Francisco are or may be parties litigant; except further from said writ any advice given in reference to such privileged data by the city attorney or other attorney in the course of his professional employment as attorney for said city and county of San Francisco, or for said defendants in their official capacities."

Defendants state:

"We may summarize the description of this data by saying that it consists of maps, plans, estimates and studies in the possession and control of the city engineer and his assistants upon which no official judgment or action had been taken at the date of the petition. It was and is defendants' contention that a public record is not made every time a public employee puts his pencil on paper; that it must be a record of some official act and not merely a tentative study or design concerning which no official action has been taken either in the way of approval or rejection;" that "the data to which access is sought is not required by law to be kept, has not been approved by the city engineer, has not been filed with the board of public works, has not been made a part or basis of any public transaction. For the most part it consists of preliminary maps lacking detailed drawings and working plans necessary to make it available for use even if officially approved and filed. The line of demarcation between public records and documents and data or memoranda in the course of preparation must, of course, be drawn somewhere," and that "the tentative conclusion of an assistant may or may not be correct, and until the city engineer finally passes upon it, it does not become a record of the opinion of his office."

Petitioner's contention is:

That "the fundamental issue on this appeal is not the right of these petitioners to inspect the Hetch Hetchy records. The question is whether the citizens of San Francisco, in their capacity as citizens and distinguished from their corporate entity, have a right to see these records, whether they have a right to go behind the conclusions of the city engineer and whether they have the right to see the work for which their money was paid." That "we believe that any document prepared in a public office within the scope of the duties of that office, for the purpose of conducting public business and the expense of which is borne by the municipality, belongs to the municipality. That it is a matter of public interest and that the citizens of the municipality by virtue of their citizenship are entitled to inspect that document and draw from it such conclusions as they choose. We submit that it is immaterial whether one branch of a particular department has transmitted the document to another or not, and that it is immaterial whether in the course of days or months or years, the head of the subordinate department has, or has not, seen fit to stamp it with his mental approval. It makes no difference whether it is a correct or erroneous document; it is a document which belongs to the public, and if it belongs to the public, the citizens have the right to inspect it," and that "the real rule, however, is that a document prepared by a public official or his subordinate in the course of duty and at public expense, is a public document and every citizen has the right to inspect it."

Section 1888, Code of Civil Procedure, is as follows:

"Public writings are: (1) The written acts or records of acts of the sovereign authority, of official bodies and tribunals, and of public officers, legislative, judicial, and executive. * * * (2) Public records, kept in this state, of private writings."

Section 1892 provides that—

"Every citizen has a right to inspect and take a copy of any public writing of this state, except as otherwise expressly provided by statute."

And section 1893 that—

"Every public officer having the custody of a public writing, which a citizen has a right to inspect, is bound to give him, on demand, a certified copy of it, on payment of the legal fees therefor."

Section 1894 provides in part that—

"Public writings are divided into four classes: * * * (3) Other official documents; (4) public records, kept in this state, of private writings."

Section 1032 of the Political Code provides that—

"The public records and other matters in the office of any officer are at all times, during office hours, open to the inspection of any citizen of this state."

Section 6 of article 6 of the charter of the city and county of San Francisco is as follows:

"The board [of public works] shall keep and preserve a record of all its proceedings, and copies of all plans, specifications, reports, contracts, estimates, certificates, receipts, surveys, field notes, maps, plats, profiles, and of all papers pertaining to the transactions of the board."

Section 13 of article 16 provides that—

"All books and records of every office and department shall be open to the inspection of any citizen at any time during business hours, * * * but the records of the police department shall not be subject to such inspection except permission be given by the police commissioner or by the chief of police."

On appeal the defendants waived the objection they made in the court below on the score of petitioner's motives, so even if the motives of a citizen have any place in the consideration of such a question, the point is eliminated here.

Although there is no express finding that all documents to which access is sought are public records or "other matters" which the public is entitled to inspect, such a finding is to be implied from the conclusion of law that petitioner is entitled to inspect all of them, with the exception of those which were prepared for the use of the city attorney in litigation. An examination of the authorities shows that there is no single test which can be applied to determine what are and what are not "public records." In Barrickman v. Lyman, 155 Ky. 710, 160 S. W. 267, the distinction was held to rest on whether or not the documents were required by law to be kept. In the case of Kyburg v. Perkins, 6 Cal. 674, cited by petitioner, it was said that—

"To entitle a book to the character of an official register it is not necessary that it be required by an express statute to be kept."

And as pointed out, petitioner insists that all documents, prepared by public officials at public expense, are public documents.

In Musket v. Department of Public Service of the City of Los Angeles, 35 Cal. App. 630, 170 Pac. 653, petitioner, a taxpayer, brought an action to compel the defendant department of public service to allow him to inspect certain books of account, records, papers, and documents connected with an electric heat, light, and power system which the city was operating. The inspection was allowed over the objection of defendants that the documents were not public records. In that case it was said:

"The appellants, it is true, are by the charter of Los Angeles made officers of the municipality; but the books and papers which respondent seeks to examine are not made official documents merely because they are kept under the direction of city officials. Their character is fixed by the considerations which we have already advanced."

The considerations advanced to determine whether or not the documents were public records were as follows:

"Returning to the language of sections 1894 and 1888 of the Code, it is plain that the books and papers mentioned in the petition are not described in either subdivisions 1, 2 or 4 of section 1894, or subdivision 2 of section 1888. If the sections cover them at all they must fall within the language of the one remaining subdivision of each; in other words, consolidating the language of those subdivisions, they must answer this description: They must be 'official documents' other than laws or judicial records, and must be the 'written acts or records of the acts * * * of official bodies' or 'tribunals' or 'of public officers * * * of this state.'"

In that case it was held that the documents were public records, although the city in operating the electric system was engaging in a private enterprise as a proprietor. It appears from that case that the only means of deciding whether or not a document is a public writing is by determining whether or not it falls within the statutory definition.

In Egan v. Board of Water Supply of the City of New York, 205 N. Y. 147, 98 N. E. 467, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 280, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 56, petitioner asked for and was allowed inspection of certain correspondence which would tend to show why the board had failed to grant a contract to the lowest bidder. The court said in part:

"It may not be denied that there are papers concerning governmental matters which are properly treated as secret and confidential, such for example as diplomatic correspondence and letters and dispatches in the detective police service."

[1] In the case at bar the record shows that the city engineer, as an officer of the board of public works, is in charge of the Hetch Hetchy project, and that he is assisted by a large number of assistants and subordinates. These assistants prepare data connected with the project, which consists of estimates, plans, drawings, maps, or the like. This data is all submitted to the city engineer for his approval, unless a subordinate is formally appointed to take charge of a particular branch of the work, in which case the subordinate's approval of such work is final. When an estimate of the plan, which is considered acceptable, is completed it is approved by the city engineer, and usually is at once forwarded to the board of public works. Defendants concede that after such approval the documents are public records. Until finally approved by the city engineer, with the exception noted, all the data is but tentative, and is liable to change, and much of it is destroyed when it is refused approval. It is this preliminary matter which defendants, as stated above, contend should not be submitted to public inspection. Defendants do not contend that surveys and maps, complete in themselves, of the territory which the project will occupy are not open to public inspection. The data referred to here, consisting of preliminary estimates, plans and the like, are computations based on such surveys.

We are of the opinion that the preliminary estimates and details which form this incomplete data are not of such a character as would constitute them public records. Until they receive some official approval the documents cannot be considered the act or the record of an act of the city engineer or the board of public works. They cannot be considered the official acts of the city engineer because compiled in his office, for he testified that "I don't allow anything to go out of my office except it has my final, definite approval." Before approved they have not attained the character and dignity of completed acts or documents of any kind.

Until a satisfactory plan or estimate is completed, the documents are but preliminaries in the course of what will eventually be an act of the city engineer. When a satisfactory plan is adopted, all the others are discarded unless, as testified by the city engineer, they relate to the plan which is finally adopted, in which case they are included in the files with the accepted plan. Therefore these preliminary matters are not "public records in the office of an officer," within the meaning of the sections of the Codes and the charter.

We are of the opinion, however, that these documents and data are of such character as constitutes them "other matters" within the meaning of section 1032 of the Political Code. In Whelan v. Superior Court, 114 Cal. 548, 46 Pac. 468, petitioner sought to be allowed to inspect certain instructions given to a sheriff by an execution creditor. In refusing the inspection, the court said:

"It does not by reason of being in writing, become a 'public record,' or any other public matter, in the office of the sheriff. The 'other matters' referred to in section 1032 [of the Political Code] which a citizen is entitled to inspect, is a matter which is 'public' and in which the whole public may have an interest."

The word "public" is defined in both the Standard and Webster's dictionaries as "of, pertaining to, or affecting, the people at large or the community." That the Hetch Hetchy project is a public matter, in which the public has an interest, cannot be doubted. It follows that the public has an interest in the plans and designs which are adopted for the completion of the project. The preliminary specifications and estimates are all steps in the process of forming an acceptable plan for carrying out the work. Although many of them are never completed, and many are destroyed, they all represent work which is being done in the course of completing the project. Not only is the work being done in the course of completing a public project, but it is being done by public officers and employees at public expense. That these plans are tentative and are subject to error or alteration cannot change their character, for, while they may not represent the final result of the work of the city engineer's office, they are important parts of that work. As such they are matters which affect the public, and in which the public has an interest, if that interest is only to see that the city engineer is taking steps toward the completion of the Hetch Hetchy project. It must be held that the implied finding of the trial court that they are of such a character was justified. It is therefore unnecessary to consider whether these documents are such as the board of public works is required to keep.

[2] As pointed out, there was a finding to the effect that "There exists data in said city engineer's office consisting of confidential reports, estimates and data collected and compiled by assistants and other engineers employed for that purpose and held therein for use by the attorneys for said city and county of San Francisco in pending litigation and anticipated litigation affecting the Hetch Hetchy project," and that "defendant M. M. O'Shaughnessy, as city engineer of said city and county of San Francisco, has permitted all of the records and other matters to which access is sought by the petitioner in this proceeding to be examined by an investigating committee appointed by the Civic League of Improvement Clubs of said city and county of San Francisco, and that the same have been examined by such committee." In support of that portion of the judgment which exempts from petitioner's right of inspection all this data, we are referred to subdivision 2 of section 1881 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that—

"An attorney cannot, without the consent of his client, be examined as to any communication made by the client to him, or his advice given thereon in the course of his professional employment."

And to subdivision 5, to the effect that—

"A public officer cannot be examined as to communications made to him in official confidence, when the public interest would suffer by the disclosure."

The first of these provisions applies to the examination of an attorney as to communications made to him by his client. The right of the city attorney to refuse to testify, if he were examined concerning the documents under consideration here, is not involved. If the documents are public records or "other matters" which the public has a right to inspect, the fact that the city engineer had communicated them to the city attorney cannot prevent a citizen from inspecting them.

[3] In Title Insurance & Trust Co. v. California Development Co., 171 Cal. 173, 220, 152 Pac. 452, 562, it was said:

"It is argued that the court erred in admitting in evidence certain letters written by and to officials and employees of the Southern Pacific Company. While some of these communications were originally privileged, there was evidence justifying the court in concluding, in each case, that the privilege had been waived by voluntarily giving the letter into the hands of third persons."

The record in the case at bar shows that the city engineer testified:

"Q. You would have been willing to have any committee of the Civic League of Improvement Clubs go through all this data? A. I would, and they did. Q. And they did? A. And they did. Q. How long did it take them to go through it? A. They took part of one day and pretty nearly the whole of another. Q. Examined it quite exhaustively? A. Examined it quite exhaustively."

This testimony sustains the finding that the city engineer has permitted this data to be inspected. Since it has been opened to inspection, it cannot be claimed that it is any longer confidential, as was held in Title Insurance & Trust Co. v. California Development Co., supra, and the finding to that effect is erroneous.

Inasmuch as the data is not privileged merely because communicated to the city attorney, and as it has lost its confidential character because already made public, it follows that that portion of the judgment excepting it from the matter which petitioner is entitled to inspect cannot be upheld.

The judgment must be modified to omit from the writ the exception of all confidential reports, estimates, or data collected or compiled by assistants or other engineers for the use of the city attorney or other attorneys representing the city and county of San Francisco in legal proceedings, and, as so modified, the judgment is affirmed.

In view of the foregoing conclusions, it becomes unnecessary to consider the contentions of petitioner relating to his appeal from the order denying his motion to vacate the judgment and amend the conclusions of law.

The judgment is affirmed as above modified.

We concur: SHAW, C. J.; LENNON, J.; WILBUR, J.; SLOANE, J.; SHURTLEFF, J.; WASTE, J.

187 Cal. 795

SAN FRANCISCO BUREAU OF GOVERNMENTAL RESEARCH v. BOARD OF PUBLIC WORKS OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (S. F. 9695.)

(Supreme Court of California, Dec. 9, 1921.)

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George E. Crothers, Judge.

Petition by the San Francisco Bureau of Governmental Research for mandamus against the Board of Public Works of the City and County of San Francisco and others. From judgment rendered, both parties appeal. Affirmed as modified.

Robert B. Gaylord, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

George Lull, City Atty., and Robert M. Searls, Special Counsel, both of San Francisco, for defendants.

LAWLOR, J. This is a companion case to Coldwell v. Board of Public Works of the City and County of San Francisco et al. (S. F. No. 9694) 202 Pac. 879, decided this day, and the same issues are involved here as were involved in that case. The two cases were tried together, the pleadings are identical except for necessary minor differences, the judgments are the same, and on appeal the briefs of the respective parties were consolidated.

Petitioner here is alleged to be a nonprofit corporation, having no capital stock, organized under the laws of California, with its principal place of business in San Francisco, and a citizen of the city and county of San Francisco. The objects and purposes of petitioner, as set forth in the petition, are:

"To act as an unincorporated, nonpolitical, nonprofit-making citizens' agency for securing the highest obtainable degree of efficiency and economy in the transaction of public business, particularly in the municipality of San Francisco, through investigating, collecting, classifying, studying and interpreting facts concerning the powers, duties, actions, limitations, methods, and problems of the several departments of government, and making such information available to public officials and citizens, and promoting the development of a constructive program for the city and county of San Francisco that shall be based upon adequate knowledge of community needs, thereby encouraging economy and efficiency in the conduct of public business in order that the taxpayers may be assured full return value in services rendered for taxes paid and money spent in governmental cost payments."

Defendants make no objections to the interest of the petitioner in the data which is sought to be inspected other than those advanced in the case of Coldwell v. Board of Public Works et al., supra.

On the authority of that case, the judgment in the case at bar is modified to omit from the writ the exception of all confidential reports, estimates, or data collected or compiled by assistants or other engineers for the use of the city attorney or other attorneys representing the city and county of San Francisco in legal proceedings, and, as so modified, the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, C. J.; LENNON, J.; WILBUR, J.; SLOANE, J.; SHURTLEFF, J.; WASTE, J.

54 Cal. App. 684

PEOPLE v. CARROLL. (Cr. 827.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Oct. 28, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 27, 1921.)

1. Gaming —73—Statute punishing gambling on horse racing held not to require proof of actual running of race on which pools were made or bets accepted.

Under Pen. Code, § 337a, providing for prosecution of persons engaged in making pools or accepting bets or purported bets on trial or contest of skill, speed, power of endurance, etc., or purported trial or contest, it is not necessary to prove that the accused sold pools and accepted bets upon a race which had been actually run.

2. Criminal law —1169(1)—Gaming —97(2)—Admission of race program in evidence held immaterial and harmless.

In a prosecution under Pen. Code, § 337a, for making pool, and accepting bets on a race or a purported race between horses, the admission in evidence of a race program used by a witness who attended the race in connection with which the offense was committed was immaterial, but harmless.

3. Criminal law —1036(3)—Admission of evidence of former arrest, where accused asked no instruction limiting it, was not prejudicial error.

Where a witness, replying to questions of accused's counsel, testified to a former arrest of the accused on a charge similar to the one for which he was being prosecuted, the admission of testimony of another witness that on a prior occasion he had made bets with the accused on races, and that the accused was at that time arrested, in the absence of a request by the accused for an instruction limiting the testimony, was not prejudicial error.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; E. A. Luce, Judge.

Frank Carroll was convicted of violation of Pen. Code, § 337a, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Shreve, Dorn & Shreve, of San Diego, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

JAMES, J. Appeal from a judgment directing that the defendant be imprisoned in the county jail of the county of San Diego for a period of four months, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

Defendant was informed against by the district attorney, who charged that the offense, as differently defined in the several subdivisions of section 337a, Penal Code, had been committed by him on the 31st day of December, 1920. It was first charged that defendant on the day mentioned engaged in pool-selling and bookmaking; second, that he received, held, and forwarded money and considerations of value to be wagered and bet upon the result of a purported horse race; third, that he recorded and registered bets and wagers upon the result and purported result of a contest and purported contest of speed between horses; fourth, that he made, offered, and accepted bets and wagers upon a like hazard. The jury in the case returned a verdict finding defendant guilty of having done the particular acts charged, except those specified in the second paragraph of the information.

A police officer of the city of San Diego testified that, upon the date mentioned in the information, he visited a cigar store where defendant was apparently employed, and observed three men making a bet; that the defendant was recording the bet; that the betting was on horses which were to race at Tia Juana; that he saw three $2 bets made; that defendant took the money from the men and put it in his pocket, wrote upon slips which he set behind the counter on a shelf; that he heard the name of a horse, "Little Jake," mentioned and saw race-form charts lying on the counter; that the defendant, while engaged with the three men, made the remark that they "would have to close up as the police was liable to drop in." This witness stated on cross-examination that he knew that the business being done by the defendant was of the kind charged because of his observation of the transaction referred to, and also because the defendant had been arrested before for the same thing. He further stated that the former case had not been tried so far as he knew. Defendants' counsel then asked the question: "Q. On that event and on this event you are basing your judgment that his business was that of taking bets on the races?" to which the witness answered, "Yes, sir." The witness was further allowed to testify without objection that on the 31st of December races upon which the bets were made were being run at Tia Juana. Another police officer testified, from a program that had been used by him at the races on said date, that a horse called "Little Jake" was among the entries for that day. This race program, together with a "bookmaker's chart," the latter having been found at the place of business of defendant at the time of his arrest, were introduced in evidence, together with certain tickets bearing memoranda which were procured at the same time and place.

[1, 2] Defendant first contends that it was essential that the prosecution make proof that a race upon which the defendant sold pools and accepted bets had been actually run, and that the evidence was insufficient to show that fact, and that the various documents introduced were incompetent for that purpose. The statute, in our opinion, does not require that the prosecution shall make proof that a race or contest upon which bets are taken or pools made shall be an actual one. The statute has been subjected to several amendments which have changed its original form and make inapplicable decisions rendered prior to the amendments. The words "purported bet or bets" and "purported trial or contest" have been carefully placed within each subdivision of the section. Those terms must be given the meaning which the words ordinarily imply, and it seems quite plain that the Legislature intended that the offense as defined in the section should be complete whenever it was shown that a person engaged in any of the acts described, having reference to a race or contest, actual or pretended. With this construction in mind, while the race program used by the officer who visited the race track on the 31st of December, 1920, would be immaterial, nevertheless its reception in evidence would be harmless.

[3] Over the objection of the defendant the prosecution was allowed to prove that on the 16th and 17th days of December, 1920, another police officer had made with the defendant two separate bets on races to be run at Tia Juana, and that the defendant was at that time arrested. Defendant did not request an instruction to be given to the jury regarding this evidence. We are of the opinion that its introduction should not be considered as of such prejudice to the defendant's rights as to require a new trial to be ordered. The testimony was in line with the statements of the first witness, who, upon the questions of defendant's counsel, testified to the fact of the former arrest of defendant on a charge like that made by the information in this case. It would have been entirely appropriate for the court in the instructions to have limited the effect of this evidence, and, had the defendant requested such an instruction, prejudicial error might have been predicated upon the refusal of the court to give it. The instructions as given were in exceedingly brief form, but counsel for the appellant makes no complaint as to the soundness of the law enunciated therein, or that they were not sufficiently comprehensive.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; SHAW, J.

55 Cal. App. 81

POLLARD v. BURGER. (Civ. 4034.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Nov. 4, 1921.)

1. Trial $\hookrightarrow$ 377(2)—Trial balance by counsel to aid calculation may be submitted after evidence.

In an action for breach of contract for farming on shares, where substantial evidence was offered to show the acreage planted, the probable crops, and the market value thereof, and the court requested counsel to submit a trial balance merely to aid him in the mathematical calculation of the damages, the fact that the trial balances were not submitted before the actual trial was closed does not make the evidence insufficient to support the finding as to the amount of damages.

2. Appeal and error $\hookrightarrow$ 1011(1)—Trial court's findings supported by evidence cannot be disturbed.

Where there was sharp conflict in the evidence, but there was sufficient evidence to support the findings of the trial court, the findings will not be disturbed on appeal.

3. New trial $\hookrightarrow$ 101 — Properly denied where evidence was known to party before first trial.

A new trial in an action for breach of a contract for farming on shares, based on newly discovered evidence as to expenditures made by the applicant for new trial for the benefit of the other party under the contract, was properly denied, since it is apparent such evidence was within the knowledge of the applicant at the time of the first trial.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Phil D. Swing, Judge.

Action by Walter D. Pollard against F. M. Burger to recover damages for breach of contract. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Jos. F. Seymour, Jr., of El Centro, O. V. Willson, of Los Angeles, and H. B. Ellison, of El Centro, for appellant.

Conkling & Brown, and Harry W. Horton, all of El Centro, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued defendant upon a complaint setting forth three causes of action, the first in damages for breach of contract, the second in quantum meruit for work and labor performed, and the third upon an assigned claim for services performed by plaintiff's wife. Plaintiff had judgment on his first and second causes of action in the sum of $548.55, and the defendant had judgment on the third cause.

The facts of the case as found by the trial court are that on the 27th day of November, 1918, plaintiff and defendant entered into an oral contract for the farming of defendant's ranch, and therein defendant agreed to furnish the land and all tools, horses, and other equipment necessary for the farming of the ranch, and also to furnish such poultry and hogs as were on the ranch and should be raised thereon. In consideration thereof plaintiff agreed to prepare the soil, plant, irrigate, and harvest the crop. The parties also agreed that they should each have one-half of all the crops raised during the term of the agreement and one-half of the profits from the sale of eggs, poultry, and increase of the hogs. Each party was to bear one-half of the current expenses, such as water for irrigation, groceries, and other living expenses, but the defendant alone was to pay all other expenses in the nature of water assessments, taxes, and matters of that nature. That the plaintiff entered upon the premises in pursuance of the agreement, prepared the soil on a great portion of said ranch, planted 30 acres thereof in alfalfa and 20 acres in milo maize, and prepared 40 acres more ready to be planted in maize or such other crop as might be advisable. There were on the ranch at the time of filing the complaint poultry and hogs to the number of 315, from which plaintiff was entitled to receive one-half of the net profits. The life of the contract was to be one year from November, 1918. On the 14th day of May, 1919, defendant breached the contract and ordered and directed plaintiff to leave the premises, and forced plaintiff to discontinue performance on his part. The court also found that, if plaintiff had been allowed to continue under the terms of his contract for the life thereof, the plaintiff would have made a profit, and that his damages resulting from defendant's breach of the contract was the sum of $825; that he had received from defendant a portion of this amount, leaving due the sum of $548.55, for which judgment was given. As to the second cause of action, it was found that the facts were the same as those set out in respect to the first cause of action.

[1] Appellant attacks the finding as to the matter of damages as not being sustained by the evidence. Substantial evidence was offered to show the acreage planted in both alfalfa and maize, the probable crops which would have been realized therefrom, and the market value of the same. During the course of the trial the court requested counsel to prepare and submit to him a trial balance and summary of the evidence, apparently for the purpose of enabling him to make the necessary mathematical calculations. No objection was made to this being done after the actual trial of the case was closed, and it is fair to assume that both parties complied with the request, and that the amount of judgment was calculated by deducting from the value of the crops to which respondent was entitled the portion of the expense chargeable to him. The evidence was before the court. The purpose of the trial balance was to aid in making the mathematical calculations.

[2] It is also urged that the evidence is insufficient to warrant the court's construction of the contract; also its finding as to which party rescinded. As is usual in cases of this kind, there is a sharp conflict in the evidence on both of these points, and upon each there was sufficient evidence to support the finding of the trial court. Under such circumstances it should not be disturbed on appeal.

[3] There is no merit in appellant's criticism of the action of the trial court in denying his motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence. The evidence which it is claimed was discovered after the trial related to the expenditures made by appellant for the use and benefit of the respondent growing out of the contract. The expenditures were made a year or more before the trial. This matter was in issue from the beginning of the action, and testimony was taken upon the issue throughout the trial. There is not the slightest showing on the part of appellant that this evidence was not in his possession at all stages of the trial, and from the very facts of the case it is apparent that it was within his knowledge at that time and was not discovered after the trial.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

54 Cal. App. 732

SAUCER et ux. v. GIROUX. (Civ. 3749.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Oct. 29, 1921.)

Libel and slander  73 — Defamatory statement, blackening memory of relative, not actionable.

An action for damages for libel will not lie for publication of false statement that deceased adult brother of plaintiff was the illegitimate son of her deceased mother, though it caused plaintiff grievous mental and physical suffering, under Code Civ. Proc. § 460, though made a crime by Penal Code, § 248, punishable as provided by section 249.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Action by J. H. Saucer and wife against Joseph L. Giroux. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Earl Newmire, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Joseph Scott, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Plaintiffs appeal from a judgment in favor of defendant, entered upon an order of court sustaining a general demurrer to the complaint.

The action is based upon the alleged act of defendant in causing to be published in a newspaper false and libelous statements that the deceased adult brother of plaintiff Virginia Saucer was an illegitimate son of her deceased mother, which false statements, it is alleged, have caused plaintiff grievous mental and physical suffering, for which she asked judgment for $500,000.

The demurrer was properly sustained. While the publication of malicious defamatory statements "tending to blacken the memory of one who is dead" is made a crime (section 248, Pen. Code), punishable as provided in section 249, Penal Code, it gives rise to no cause of action in favor of a relative of such deceased for the recovery of damages. While section 460, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that in an action for libel it is not necessary to state in the complaint any extrinsic facts for the purpose of showing application to the plaintiff of the defamatory matter out of which the cause of action arose, it must contain an allegation to the effect that the libelous statements were published concerning the plaintiff. Not only is there an absence from the complaint of such allegation so required by this section, but it is manifest that such fact could not be alleged. The charge concerning the deceased mother and brother of Virginia Saucer could have no reference to the latter. There was nothing in the article published which tended in any manner to reflect on the plaintiffs, or either of them, and the alleged grievous mental sufferings of Virginia Saucer were of the same kind as that produced by the publication upon any of the other relatives of the deceased. Hence, if a cause of action exists in her favor, then manifestly any relative, or even friend, of the deceased who had likewise suffered might maintain a cause of action for damages. In his brief, counsel for appellants admits his inability to find any authority sustaining his contention, while concededly many authorities exist to the contrary, among which see Bradt v. New Nonpareil Co., 103 Iowa, 449, 79 N. W. 122, 45 L. R. A. 681; Sorensen v. Balaban, 11 App. Div. 164, 42 N. Y. Supp. 654; Wellman v. Sun Printing, etc., Ass'n, 66 Hun, 331, 21 N. Y. Supp. 577; Skrocki v. Stahl, 14 Cal. App. 1, 110 Pac. 957.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

54 Cal. App. 786

PEOPLE v. PLUMEYER. (Cr. 783, 784.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1. California. Nov. 1, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court. Dec. 29, 1921.)

1. Criminal law § 829(8)—Refusal of instruction as to effect of evidence of good character held not prejudicial, in view of instruction given.

Where the court instructed the jury to consider evidence of good character for the traits involved in the offense charged as tending to show from the improbability that a person of good character would have so conducted himself that there was some mistake or misrepresentation, but to find him guilty notwithstanding, if satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that he was guilty, the refusal of an instruction that if defendant's good reputation was sufficient to create a reasonable doubt of his guilt, though no such doubt would have existed otherwise, the jury must acquit him, was not prejudicial error.

2. Criminal law § 829(9)—Refusal of instruction on presumption of innocence held not erroneous, in view of instruction given.

Where the court advised the jury that every presumption of law was in favor of accused's innocence, and that, to convict him, every material fact necessary to constitute the crime charged must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt, the refusal of an instruction that the jury must reconcile all the circumstances shown with defendant's innocence and account for all facts, if possible, on the hypothesis that he was not guilty, was not error.

3. Criminal law § 829(19)—Refusal of instruction that no jurymen should vote to convict because of opinion of other members held not erroneous, in view of instruction given.

Where the court correctly and sufficiently advised the jury that a verdict of guilty must be founded solely on the evidence and the law as declared by the court, the refusal of an instruction that defendant was entitled to the individual opinion of every member of the jury, and that no member should vote for a conviction because of the opinion of other members, was not error.

4. Criminal law § 829(9)—Refusal of instructions as to presumption of innocence held not prejudicial, in view of instructions given.

Refusal of instructions as to the presumption of innocence, and that, as between two reasonable interpretations of the evidence, one pointing to guilt and the other to innocence, the former should be rejected, held not prejudicial, being sufficiently covered by general instructions as to presumption of innocence, reasonable doubt, and burden of proof.

5. Criminal law § 829(17)—Instructions specifically treating of defendant's testimony properly refused, in view of instruction given.

Where the court fully instructed the jury that defendant's testimony should be weighed by the same standard as that of other witnesses, an instruction, specifically treating of defendant's testimony, was properly refused.

6. Criminal law § 829(12)—Refusal of instructions as to insufficiency of mere probabilities, etc., held not prejudicial, in view of instruction given.

Refusal of instructions that mere probabilities, a mere preponderance of the evidence, or evidence establishing only a suspicion of guilt, would not warrant conviction, held not prejudicial, being sufficiently covered in the court's instruction as to reasonable doubt.

7. Criminal law — § 1186(4)—Error in instruction as to impeachment of witness held not reversible, where testimony corroborated by others.

In a criminal prosecution, the court's error in failing to instruct the jury that a witness may be impeached by evidence of inconsistent statements, made at other times, as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 2052, held no ground for reversal, in view of Const. art. 6, § 4½, where there was ample evidence to warrant the verdict, and the testimony of the witnesses sought to be impeached was corroborated in material respects, so that no miscarriage of justice occurred.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Sidney N. Reeve, Judge.

Carl Plumeyer was convicted of lewd and lascivious acts on a child, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Davis, Rush & MacDonald, Alfred F. MacDonald, William B. Beirne, and S. W. Thompson, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Arthur Keetch, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

JAMES, J. Defendant was charged in an indictment of the grand jury in case No. 783 with having committed the crime denounced by section 288, Penal Code. The indictment contained two counts, charging separate offenses. By an information of the district attorney like charges were made in two counts, as is shown in case No. 784. The trial of the charges contained in both the indictment and information was, by agreement between the people and the defendant, had before one jury, which jury returned a verdict finding the defendant guilty upon all counts. The judgments of the court and orders denying motions for new trial followed, from which judgments and orders appeals were taken. All of the matters which are made the subject of the questions contained in the appellant's brief relate to the instructions as given and refused at the trial.

[1] The defendant, having presented witnesses who testified that his character, as to the traits involved under the charge, had previously been good, offered an instruction in the following terms:

"You are instructed that in all criminal cases the law permits the defendant to introduce evidence concerning his general reputation for the trait or traits of character involved in the special case under consideration, and in this case, morality and chastity are the special traits involved, and the law permits the defendant to introduce—and he has introduced—evidence tending to show his good reputation for morality and chastity, and you are instructed that if such good character and reputation for morality and chastity has been satisfactorily shown it is a fact which must be taken into consideration in determining the guilt or innocence of the defendant, and you are instructed ed that such reputation and character of the defendant in the respects above stated may, if established to your satisfaction, of itself, be sufficient to create and generate in your minds a reasonable doubt of his guilt, although no such doubt would have existed but for such evidence of good character and reputation, and if in view of such evidence you have a reasonable doubt as to his guilt, it is your duty under the law to acquit him."

The trial judge refused to give this instruction, indorsing upon it, "Refused as covered." The instruction given on the same subject, and which was evidently regarded by the judge as sufficient, read as follows:

"Evidence of good character for the traits involved in the offense with which a defendant stands charged is relevant to the question of guilty or not guilty, and is to be considered by you in connection with the other facts and circumstances in the case. One object in laying it before the jury is to induce the jury to believe, from the improbability that a person of good character should have conducted himself as alleged, that there is some mistake or misrepresentation in the evidence on the part of the prosecution, and in this connection you must take it into consideration. If, however, you are satisfied to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant is guilty as charged, it will be your duty to so find him, notwithstanding such evidence of good character."

It is insisted, first, that it was prejudicial error to have refused to give the instruction offered by the defendant in the terms stated, particularly that clause which was to advise the jury that the good character of the defendant being established as to the traits involved might be sufficient to create in the minds of the jury a reasonable doubt as to his guilt. Attention is called to language used in the case of People v. Wilson, 23 Cal. App. 523, 138 Pac. 971. It was there held that the court erred in refusing instructions offered by the defendant on the question of his good character. By an examination of the decision in the Wilson Case it will be found that the error noted consisted, not so much in failing to give the precise instruction asked for by the defendant, but because the court, with evidence before it touching the character of the defendant, failed to give any instruction relative to the matter, for in the decision it is stated:

"The defendant having requested the court to give the jury certain instructions pertinent to this evidence, the court refused to give any of them, and failed to give to the jury any instructions whatever on the subject of the good character of the accused."

We have here a different case, and need only determine whether the instruction as given by the trial judge sufficiently expressed to the jury the law relative to the evidence of good character. In the case of People v. Von Perhacs, 20 Cal. App. 48, 127 Pac. 1048, the precise instruction which the court gave in this case was read to the jury, with the exception that there was here added the word "however" after the first word in the last paragraph. In the Von Perhacs Case it was complained that the last paragraph, which was added by the trial court as a modification of an instruction offered by the defendant, rendered the instruction bad, in that its effect upon the jury might be to lead it to believe that it was at liberty to entirely disregard the evidence of good character. The court disposed of that matter against the claim of the defendant by saying:

"The instruction as modified by the court correctly and without conflict stated the law (People v. Shepardson, 49 Cal. 630; People v. Ashe, 44 Cal. 288; People v. Bell, 49 Cal. 485); and no confusion as to its meaning could possibly arise in the minds of the jury except upon a strained and unreasonable interpretation of the language employed. The plain meaning of the instruction as a whole was that if, after weighing all the evidence, including that of the good character of the defendant, the jury believed him guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, they should bring in a verdict accordingly, notwithstanding the fact that the defendant had previously borne a good reputation."

We do not consider that the addition of the word "however" in the last paragraph either limits or adds to the sense of the instruction as a whole. By the last paragraph, considering the language in its reasonable sense in connection with what had preceded it, the jury was advised simply that, notwithstanding that the good reputation and character of the defendant might have been established, if such evidence did not create a reasonable doubt of his guilt, it would be its duty to find him guilty. In the body of the instruction there was sufficiently expressed in sense and meaning that proof of good character, if it induced in the minds of the jury a belief that there was mistake or misrepresentation in the evidence of the prosecution, would create a reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the accused. Such would be the necessary interpretation to be given the language employed by the ordinary reasoning mind.

The trial judge instructed the jury, in terms which have long been approved by judicial decisions, as to the presumption of innocence and the requirement that the guilt of the accused be establishment beyond all reasonable doubt.

[2] Appellant complains that an instruction which he offered, containing the statement as to the duty of the jury to reconcile all circumstances shown in evidence with the innocence of the defendant, and to account for all facts, if possible, upon the hypothesis that defendant was not guilty, should have been given. In one of the instructions given at the request of the defendant the court advised the jury that:

"Every presumption of law is in favor of his innocence and in order to convict him of the crime alleged in the indictment every material fact necessary to constitute such crime must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt, and if the jury entertain a reasonable doubt upon any fact or element necessary to constitute such crime, it is your duty to give the defendant the benefit of such doubt and acquit him."

While the instruction refused contained proper matter which might have been made a part of the charge to the jury, still the duty of the jury as therein explained would be no different from that which was indicated under the general instruction given on the subject of the presumption of innocence and the requirement that the defendant's guilt be proved beyond all reasonable doubt. To illustrate: If the evidence presented such a state of the case that one construction would lead to the conclusion that defendant was innocent, and another construction lead to the contrary conclusion, then it would seem to follow as a natural consequence that no reasonable mind would be left in such a state that it would affirm that no reasonable doubt remained as to the guilt of the defendant. The sum and demand of the law, as the court properly declared it, is that the minds of the jury must be convinced beyond a reasonable doubt of all facts essential to show guilt before such a verdict may be returned. So if the jury interpreted the instructions as given correctly, it was furnished a definite guide which would induce the placing of the weight of evidence precisely on the side that the refused instruction indicated it should be placed.

[3] The refusal to give the instruction following is also assigned as error which prejudiced the defendant in his right to a fair trial:

"You are instructed that the defendant in this case is entitled to the individual opinion of every member of the jury, and that no member of this jury should vote for a conviction of the defendant because of the opinion of other members of the jury as long as he himself has a reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the defendant."

In support of his claim that it was error to refuse this instruction appellant cites People v. Dole, 122 Cal. 486, 55 Pac. 581, 68 Am. St. Rep. 50; People v. Howard, 143 Cal. 316, 76 Pac. 1116; People v. Wong Loung, 159 Cal. 520, 114 Pac. 829. The case of People v. Perry, 144 Cal. 748, 78 Pac. 284, which intervenes in the chronology of the cases cited by appellant, is a case in point as against this claim for error. The court there declares that, where the instructions given to a jury correctly and sufficiently advise it that a verdict of guilty must be founded solely on the evidence and the law as declared by the court, no error will be held to have been committed for the refusal to give the additional advice that a defendant is entitled to the opinion of every member of the jury, and should not vote for a conviction because of the opinion of other of his fellow members. The logic of the decision in the Perry Case is inescapable; necessarily, if a jurymen is made to understand that his verdict is to be founded upon the evidence and the law as given by the court only, he must understand that all other considerations, items and factors, such as the opinions of other jurymen, are to be excluded.

[4-7] The offered instruction as to the presumption of innocence accompanying the defendant throughout the trial contained a correct statement of law; nevertheless, the general instruction as given, and hereinbefore noted, was sufficient to the point sought to be covered by the instruction which was refused. The offered instruction that as between two reasonable interpretations of the evidence, one pointing to guilt and the other to innocence, the one indicating guilt should be rejected, we think was not necessary to be given in view of the general instructions on the question of reasonable doubt and as to the burden of proof. The further instruction offered, specifically treating of the testimony of the defendant, who was a witness in the case, was properly refused in view of the fact that the court did very fully instruct the jury that the testimony of the defendant should be weighed by the same standard and measure as that of other witnesses in the case. Instructions offered and refused, stating the propositions that mere probabilities, nor a preponderance of the evidence merely, nor evidence establishing only a suspicion of guilt, would not warrant conviction, contained nothing not sufficiently covered in the instruction given by the court on the matter of reasonable doubt. The court properly advised the jury that it was the exclusive judge of the credibility of the witnesses, and in that connection gave the following further instruction:

"And the jury may scrutinize, not only the manner of witnesses while on the stand, their relation to the case, if any, but also their degree of intelligence. A witness is presumed to speak the truth. This presumption, however, may be repelled by the manner in which he testifies; his interest in the case, if any, or his bias or prejudice, if any, against one or any of the parties, by the character of his testimony, or by evidence affecting his character for truth, honesty or integrity or by contradictory evidence."

Complaint is made because the court did not include in this instruction the statement contained in section 2052, Code of Civil Procedure, that—

"A witness may also be impeached by evidence that he has made, at other times, statements inconsistent with his present testimony."

To make pertinent the point that the court erred in refusing to cover the matter of impeachment in the regard mentioned in the Code section, appellant's counsel direct attention to the fact that in the examination of the two boys who testified to incriminating acts, their testimony as to the number of times certain of such acts had been done by them at the request of the defendant differed from statements made before the grand jury. The refusal to cover the proposition adverted to in the manner requested by the defendant, in view of such testimony, was error. And we would conclude that this error was of such a prejudicial character as to entitle defendant to a new trial were it not for the provisions of section 4½ of article 6 of the state Constitution. The record in the case shows that there was ample evidence to warrant the verdict of the jury, and that the testimony of the boys referred to was in material respects corroborated. In that condition of the case it cannot be said that by the conviction of the defendant a miscarriage of justice has occurred.

The judgments and orders are affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; SHAW, J.

55 Cal. App. 114

NEWBY v. NEWBY. (Civ. 3740.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1. California. Nov. 8, 1921.)

1. Appeal and error $\S$ 931(7)—In absence of evidence, appellate court must presume no evidence offered on issue as to which no finding made.

In support of a judgment, the appellate court must presume, in the absence of evidence brought up in the record, that no testimony was offered touching an issue as to which there is no finding.

2. Divorce $\S$ 38½, New, vol. 19 Key-No. Series—That parties lived apart when acts of cruelty committed no justification therefor.

The fact that when acts of cruelty charged against defendant in a divorce case were committed the parties were living apart affords no justification for such acts.

3. Divorce $\S$ 298(1)—Parent has paramount right to custody of child.

In view of Civ. Code, §§ 138, 197, 246, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1751, as to custody and guardianship of children, the father or mother of a minor child is entitled to the custody of the child as against a stranger, unless the father and mother are found unfit or improper custodians.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Rex B. Goodcell, Judge.

Action by Helen N. Newby against George W. Newby for divorce and custody of child. Decree for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Decree of divorce affirmed, and order awarding custody of child reversed, with directions.

McNabb & Hodge, of San Bernardino, for appellant.

Allison & Dickson, of San Bernardino, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Defendant appeals upon the judgment roll alone from an interlocutory decree of divorce granted plaintiff upon the ground of alleged cruelty.

[1] The contention is that the court failed to find upon material issues, in that defendant alleged desertion on the part of the plaintiff. In support of the judgment we must presume, in the absence of the evidence brought up in the record, that no testimony was offered touching such issue, as to which there is no finding.

[2] Conceding that at the time when the acts of cruelty were committed by defendant the parties were living separate and apart from each other, such fact could afford no justification for defendant's acts of cruelty.

[3] It appears there was a minor female child of the parties, aged six years, the custody of which was asked by each of the parents upon the ground of alleged unfitness of the other, and as to which issue the court made no finding, but, as a conclusion of law, found that it is for the best interest of the child that its custody be awarded to a third person, and thereupon made an order awarding its custody to a stranger. As father of the child, appellant attacks this order, claiming that in the absence of a finding of unfitness, the custody of the child should have been awarded to one of the parents. In this we agree with appellant. Section 138, Civil Code, provides that in such actions the court may make an order for the custody, care, and support of minor children of the marriage; and section 246 of said Code provides that the court, in the determination of such matters, shall be guided, first, "by what appears to be for the best interest of the child," and, second, "as between parents adversely claiming the custody or guardianship, neither parent is entitled to it as of right; but other things being equal, if the child is of tender years, it should be given to the mother." It is apparent that in making the order the court was controlled by subdivision 1 of said section. The law, however, presumes that the interest of a child will be best subserved by awarding its care to a parent, unless he or she is unfit to have its care. Section 197, Civil Code, provides, "The father and mother of a legitimate unmarried minor child are equally entitled to its custody, services and earnings," unless, as further provided, they are unable or refuse to take the custody, or have abandoned his or her family, in which cases, as well as for other causes, they should be deemed unfit as such custodians. This section should be construed with subdivision 1 of section 246, and, so read, they contemplate that the natural right of the parent to the care of a minor child, if a fit and proper person, shall prevail as against an entire stranger. In the absence of either evidence or finding showing the contrary, the law presumes that either parent is a proper person to whom its care should be awarded. And where, as here, since in the absence of a finding upon the issue of fitness either is presumably a proper person, the court, guided by subdivision 2 of section 246, should have awarded the custody of the minor child to one of its parents. By reason of the right which the law presumes to be vested in the parent, the rule declared in section 1751, Code of Civil Procedure, as to guardians, read with and modified by the provisions of section 246, Civil Code, is applicable, viz. that under section 1751 "the father or the mother of a minor child under the age of fourteen years, if found by the court competent to discharge the duties of guardianship, is entitled to be appointed a guardian of such minor child, in preference to any other person." Guardianship of Mathews, 169 Cal. 26, 145 Pac. 503; In re Mathews, 174 Cal. 679, 164 Pac. 8; In re Campbell, 130 Cal. 380, 62 Pac. 613. And under section 246, by reason of the presumptive right thereto, unless found by the court to be an unfit and improper person, the father or the mother is entitled to the care and custody of the minor child.

The interlocutory decree of divorce is affirmed. The order awarding the custody of the minor child of the parties is reversed, with direction to the trial court, upon a further hearing of the matter as to the custody of the minor child, to make a finding upon the issue as to the alleged unfitness of the respective parties to have the care of the child, and award its custody in accordance with such finding.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

55 Cal. App. 73

CURRIE v. LANDES. (Civ. 3761.)(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Nov. 4, 1921.)1. Executors and administrators — 44—Interest in partnership is salable asset.

Though the surviving partner is entitled, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1585, to the possession, management, and disposition of the business and property of the firm, the right of the deceased partner in the partnership, which is a right to the division after the business is closed, is an asset of his estate which the administrator can sell, under section 1524, or without application to the court under section 1522.

2. Executors and administrators — 168—Refusal of surviving partner to accept purchaser from administrator as partner does not defeat sale.

The refusal of a surviving partner to accept as a partner and continue the business with the purchaser of the interest of the deceased partner in the firm does not defeat the sale by the administrator of such interest, since the purchaser thereof was charged with knowledge of the law, and must be content with the right he acquired to share in the distribution of the firm's assets.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by Fred H. Currie, as administrator of the estate of James H. Currie, deceased, against G. C. Landes, to recover the balance of the purchase price of certain personal property. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Turnbull, Heffron & Kelley and Rupert B. Turnbull, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

John C. Miles and Charles W. Hackler, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. It appears from the findings that at the time of his death James H. Currie left as part of the assets of his estate an undivided one-half interest in and to a restaurant with its equipment and fixtures, which he and Norris Rauch owned and conducted as equal partners; that on July 19, 1920, plaintiff then being the duly appointed and acting administrator of the estate of deceased, the defendant agreed for a consideration of $5,100 to purchase the interest of the estate in and to said restaurant, equipment and business, and thereupon paid to the administrator of said estate the sum of $1,000 on account of the purchase price thereof, it being agreed that the balance should be paid upon an order of court confirming the sale so made by plaintiff to defendant; that on August 27, 1920, at a hearing duly had, the court made its order approving the sale; notwithstanding which facts, so found to be true, defendant on demand therefor refused to consummate the purchase and pay said balance of $4,100.

As to matters alleged as a separate defense and by way of counterclaim, the court likewise found adversely to defendant. Appellant makes no attack upon any of the findings for insufficiency of the evidence to justify them. His contention is that they do not support the conclusion of law that plaintiff is entitled thereon to judgment.

[1] While Rauch as the surviving partner was, as provided by section 1585, Code of Civil Procedure, entitled, without interference or participation on the part of the plaintiff as administrator, to the possession, management, and disposition of the business and property of the firm for the purpose of paying its debts, nevertheless the interest of deceased therein was part of the assets of his estate, to be inventoried and appraised as other property. This interest was the residuum of the partnership property and business after the partnership affairs should be wound up and the debts paid. Tompkins v. Weeks, 26 Cal. 51. This interest, subject to the rights of the surviving partner as shown by the findings, was the subject of sale. Being an asset of the estate, though in the control and management of Rauch as surviving partner and subject to the payment of the firm's debts and expenses in connection therewith, it was, like any other property of a personal character belonging to the estate, the subject of sale by the administrator, as provided by section 1524, Code of Civil Procedure. Cooley v. Miller & Lux, 168 Cal. 120, 142 Pac. 83. Indeed, under section 1522, Code of Civil Procedure, the administrator possesses the power to make such sales without an application to the court for an order so to do, in which case, however, he is held responsible for his act until, upon a proper showing, the court shall have approved the same. In the instant case, as appears from the findings, the sale was made and the $1,000 by defendant paid on the purchase price thereof, subject to the sale being confirmed by an order of court, upon which the balance of $4,100 was to be paid. The sale was confirmed, and therefore it was incumbent upon defendant, as purchaser of the interest of the estate in said partnership property, to pay the balance of the purchase price in accordance with his agreement so to do.

[2] Under the law he was chargeable with knowledge of the fact that he could not, as against the will of Rauch as surviving partner, be given possession of the property, or have any voice in the control, management, and disposition thereof, but that his right as purchaser of the interest of the estate in and to said property was such only as the estate had, and, as stated, this was one-half of the surplus over the amount required in the payment of debts of the firm. Whether or not the purchase would, under the circumstances, be profitable, was, like the purchase of anything else, a question for him to determine. In buying the interest he may have been actuated by the belief that Rauch would accept him as a partner; but, as found by the court, such belief was not justified by any act on the part of plaintiff, and since, as alleged in his answer, Rauch would not accept him as a partner, or permit him to participate in the management and control of the business, he must be content with the receipt of that which the estate would have received, had he not purchased its interest therein, namely, its share in the proceeds of the sale of the copartnership assets and business after the payment of partnership indebtedness.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

55 Cal. App. 12

DAHNKE v. DAHNKE. (Civ. 3755.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Nov. 1, 1921.)

1. Divorce ☞ 27(13)—Affliction with a noncontagious skin disease and neglecting to bathe frequently held not to constitute sufficient ground for divorce; "extreme cruelty."

Where plaintiff had lived with defendant nearly seven years as his wife, the fact that he was afflicted with a noncontagious skin disease, which caused his skin to scale off more rapidly than under normal conditions, and did not bathe as often as plaintiff thought necessary, does not amount to a cause for divorce on the ground of "extreme cruelty," under Civ. Code, § 94.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Extreme Cruelty.]

2. Divorce ☞ 130—Evidence held not to prove unnatural acts by defendant.

In wife's suit for divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty, consisting of unnatural acts by defendant, evidence held not to prove such acts.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Z. B. West, Judge.

Suit by Selma Dahnke against Henry Dahnke for divorce. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Eden & Koepsel, of Santa Ana, for appellant.

Head & Rutan and Chas. D. Swanner, all of Santa Ana, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Defendant appeals from an interlocutory decree of divorce granted plaintiff upon the ground of extreme cruelty.

The parties were married on October 19, 1910, and lived together as husband and wife until May 11, 1917, at which time plaintiff left defendant. As alleged in the complaint and found by the court, defendant at the time of the marriage was afflicted with a loathsome, incurable skin disease, of which fact he did not acquaint plaintiff before the marriage and knowledge of which plaintiff did not obtain until after the marriage, that during the time plaintiff and defendant lived together he would go unbathe for several weeks at a time and his diseased skin would become very offensive and loathsome, and that he was given to the practice of masturbation.

The contention of appellant is, first, that these findings are not justified by the evidence; and, second, that, if so warranted, they are insufficient to support the judgment. It appears from the testimony of Dr. Doman, called as a witness by plaintiff, that defendant was afflicted with a skin trouble which the witness described as a dry skin; that is, a dry condition of the epidermis, due to lack of oil secretions, and differed from other persons in that his skin was less oily, causing a tendency to dryness, due to which fact it would scale; that it did not affect defendant in any way at all; that, while it was without odor, "some people might consider it disagreeable and others wouldn't pay any attention to it"; that, as to cleanliness, the condition did not render it necessary for a person to be more than ordinarily careful in bathing and care of the person; that he had for years been the physician of defendant and his family; and that his condition as to cleanliness was that of the ordinary rancher. Further describing defendant's condition, he said that there was "a little flaking all the time, just the same as you or I are shedding our skin all the time, only to a greater degree than you or I shed our skin; * * * there is a certain amount of desiccation or shedding off of the skin with any one all the time, only on Mr. Dahnke it was of a greater degree, I would say as much as three or four times greater and a little larger flakes"; that, while the trouble was incurable, it could be relieved by the use of oil which, under his advice, the defendant at times used.

The testimony of plaintiff is that her husband's body was in a scaly condition and dark from dirt, and that the scales would come off in the bed and in his clothes; that she slept with her husband for some two years, until the baby was born, at which time she ceased to occupy the same bed with him, because she could not stand it any longer, after which, and prior to her leaving him, she found indications of the practice of self-abuse; that the cause for leaving him was that she could not stand it any longer on account of the way he acted and insisting upon her sleeping with him; that he refused to properly bathe himself "unless she positively insisted upon it and got the water ready"; but that none of his alleged acts or his condition endangered her health. Another witness, Blanche Smith, on behalf of plaintiff, testified that defendant never looked clean to her, and when around him she noticed an odor like that perceptible in a man working out of doors and sweating in the dust and dirt and taking care of horses, and which is common in such cases where the man does not take a bath every evening when he comes in from work.

It is apparent from this résumé of the testimony, which in substance, other than the fact that defendant bared his arm for the inspection of the trial judge, is all the evidence presented by the plaintiff touching the question, that defendant was afflicted with a skin trouble, which, however, as testified to by the physician, was not contagious, and, according to plaintiff, did not endanger her health or prevent the consummation of the marriage relation. It is also apparent from the record that, due to such fact, or for other reasons, she formed a violent dislike for her husband, with whom she lived as husband and wife for nearly seven years.

[1] By section 94, Civil Code, extreme cruelty is defined as "the wrongful infliction of grievous bodily injury, or grievous mental suffering, upon the other by one party to the marriage." The language of the statute would seem to import acts directed toward the other party and with a malevolent motive. While it is conceivable a case might be imagined which would fall within the meaning of the words without such motive, nevertheless as to self-directed acts or omissions which do not impair or constitute a menace to the health of the other spouse or interfere with the consummation of the marriage relation, the language used should not be construed as referring to traits of character, habits of cleanliness, or conditions of bodily health, as to all of which, unless otherwise provided by statute, the parties must be deemed to have assumed the burden of informing themselves by association, acquaintance, and inquiry before entering into a contract of such vital importance, not only to themselves, but to society in general.

Conceding that marriages may be annulled for the causes specified in section 82, Civil Code, the action is not for the annulment of the marriage on account of fraud practiced by defendant upon plaintiff in withholding from her information as to his condition, but on account of his condition of health, the character of which she had been fully cognizant of for a number of years, during which she lived and cohabited with defendant. It may be that defendant did not bathe as often as plaintiff thought he should. This, however, is a subject upon which a diversity of opinion might well exist, depending upon facility therefor, environment, and nature of employment, and should be left to individual taste; at all events, the frequency with which either spouse should take a bath should not, in such cases as this be made the subject of judicial cognizance.

Conceding defendant's failure to bathe as often as his wife thought necessary, unless she, as stated, prepared the bath and insisted upon his so doing, and the fact that he was afflicted with the skin trouble described by her witness, Dr. Doman, which condition differed from that of normal individuals only in the degree of exfoliation or rapidity with which nature eliminated the outer cuticle of the body, it furnished no ground for the claim that defendant was guilty of extreme cruelty towards plaintiff; and her living with defendant for some seven years after discovering the condition, during all of which time she (though, according to her testimony, reluctantly) cohabited with him as his wife without injury to her health or menace thereto, is evidence of the fact that it did not interfere with the discharge of her duties as such, or defeat the purpose of the marital relation, without which she has no cause for legal complaint.

[2] As to the other finding upon which the court based the judgment, there is no evidence, even on the part of the plaintiff, other than her testimony, that she saw indications of defendant's alleged unnatural and disgusting acts. They were not committed in her presence. Wood v. Wood, 141 Mass. 495, 6 N. E. 541, 55 Am. Rep. 491; Huff v. Huff, 73 W. Va. 330, 80 S. E. 846, 51 L. R. A. (N. S.) 282. Moreover, there is not the slightest testimony in corroboration thereof. While this court in the case of Perkins v. Perkins, 29 Cal. App. 77, 154 Pac. 483, held that where the alleged cruelty consists of successive acts of ill treatment, it is not necessary that there should be direct testimony of other witnesses to every act sworn to by the plaintiff, but it is a sufficient corroboration if a considerable number of important and material facts are so testified to by other witnesses, or circumstantial evidence offered which tends to strengthen and confirm the statements of the plaintiff, the case as presented here does not fall within the rule so announced. As stated above, the fact that defendant was afflicted with a skin trouble is insufficient to support the judgment; hence the judgment depends for its sole support upon the other finding, as to which there is not only no corroboration, but the acts are denied by defendant.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

55 Cal. App. 131

WINKIE v. RALEY. (Civ. 3917.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California, Nov. 9, 1921. Rehearing Denied Dec. 7, 1921.)

1. Brokers — 88(12)—Instruction as to principal's right to rescind contract for false representation held properly refused.

In broker's action for commissions, refusal of the trial court to give defendant's requested instruction as to defendant's legal right to rescind the contract of sale if plaintiff had falsely represented to him the value of the property proposed to be taken by defendant in exchange was proper, where the instruction omitted the elements of knowledge of the falsity of the representations by plaintiff and reliance upon them by defendant, and also assumed that the representations were statements of fact rather than expressions of opinion.

2. Trial — 260(1)—Requested instruction already covered properly refused.

Where the subject-matter of a requested instruction is fully covered in another instruction given, denial of the request is not error.

3. Brokers — 88(12)—Instruction as to broker's duty to honestly inform principal of value of property held properly refused.

Where broker's contract did not cast upon him any duty of ascertaining the value of the property to be exchanged, or of informing defendant, his principal, thereof, it was proper in the broker's action for commissions to refuse defendant's instruction that it was plaintiff's duty to honestly inform his principal of the value of such property, and that, if he failed to do so, but falsely represented the value to his principal, the latter was not required to examine the property, but could rely upon plaintiff's statements, for such instruction, as respects false representations, omitted the essential elements of plaintiff's knowledge of their falsity and defendant's reliance.

4. Brokers — 88(12)—Elimination of part of requested instruction as to false representations held proper.

Where broker's action for commission was defended on the ground that the contract of sale was rescinded on discovery of falsity of plaintiff's representations as to the value of the property to be taken in exchange, a modification of an instruction as to plaintiff's false representations by eliminating the words "or was made in reckless disregard of its truth or falsity" was proper, where there was no evidence of plaintiff's reckless disregard of the truth or falsity of statements made by him.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; F. B. Brown, Judge.

Action by H. J. Winkie, doing business under the firm name and style of H. J. Winkie & Co., against Walter Raley. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Owen D. Richardson, of San Jose, for appellant.

Ralph C. McComish and W. R. Biaggi, both of San Jose, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued to recover a broker's commission on an express contract to procure the acceptance of defendant's offer to trade certain real property for certain described real property belonging to one Turner. The complaint alleged the execution of the contract by which plaintiff agreed to procure the acceptance by Turner, that plaintiff did procure such acceptance in accordance with the terms of the contract, but that defendant refused to effect the trade and has failed to pay the commission agreed upon. The answer admitted the execution of the contract, but alleged that it was procured by the fraud of plaintiff, consisting of misrepresentations made by plaintiff to defendant of the value of the property which Turner proposed to trade to defendant, and that prior to the acceptance by Turner the defendant on discovering the alleged fraud rescinded the contract and gave notice of such rescission to the plaintiff. The case was tried before a jury, and plaintiff obtained a verdict for $1,200, the amount of the commission agreed upon, and from the judgment following the verdict defendant has prosecuted this appeal. Three grounds of error are assigned, all relating to instructions which the trial court gave or refused to give to the jury.

[1, 2] The first assignment of error covers the refusal of the trial court to give to the jury the instruction requested by defendant as to the legal right of the appellant to rescind the contract if respondent had falsely represented to him the value of the Turner property which was proposed to be taken in the exchange. The instruction proposed omits the elements of knowledge of the falsity of the representations on the part of the respondent and reliance upon them by appellant. It also assumes that the representations as to the value of the property were statements of fact rather than expressions of opinion. But the subject-matter of these representations was fully covered in the instruction which the court gave, and which was most favorable to appellant.

[3] The second assignment of error relates to the refusal of the trial court to give an instruction proposed by the appellant to the effect that it was the duty of respondent to honestly inform his principal of the value of the Turner property, and, if the jury should find that he did not do so, but that he falsely represented the value to his principal, the appellant was not required to make an examination of the property, but that he could depend upon the statements of his agent. This instruction, like the one just considered, omits the essential element of knowledge on the part of respondent and reliance upon the part of appellant. It is subject to the further objection that the contract did not cast upon respondent any duty of ascertaining the value of the property proposed to be exchanged or of informing appellant of such value. The evidence plainly showed that appellant was given every opportunity to inform himself on the matter of value, and that respondent did not at any time pretend to represent to appellant that he had made any examination for the purpose of determining the value of the property or that he had any independent knowledge thereof.

Furthermore, in the instruction which will hereafter be considered the trial court did, on the request of appellant, instruct the jury that, if they found that the representations as to value were made by respondent, that they were false, that respondent knew them to be false when made, and that appellant was induced to enter into the contract by reason of such false representations, the jury should find for the appellant. This was all that appellant could ask for on the issue of false representation, because by this the jury was instructed to find for the appellant even though he had not rescinded the contract before complete performance.

[4] The third assignment of error relates to the modification of the instruction just considered, whereby the trial court eliminated from the instruction as proposed by appellant the following words: "Or was made in reckless disregard of its truth or falsity." There was no evidence of any nature which would have justified the jury in finding that the statements as to the value of the property were made in reckless disregard of their truth or falsity, and the trial court properly modified the instruction as proposed.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

55 Cal. App. 734

CARVELL v. WEAVER. (Civ. 3909.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Oct. 29, 1921.)

1. Judgment $\S$ 590(1)—For defendant in replevin, failing to direct return of property, not bar to action for conversion by defendant.

Where, in rendering judgment for defendant in replevin, court failed to direct return of property, and plaintiff was unable to return the property, such judgment did not constitute a bar to a subsequent action by defendant for damages for conversion.

2. Judgment $\S$ 590(4)—Rendered outside issues held at most erroneous, and not void, so as to be open to collateral attack.

Where conditional seller of automobile sued purchaser in replevin, and defendant did not demand a return of the automobile or its value, contenting himself with a demand for payment to him of the sum of installments paid, with damages for the detention, and the court went outside of the issues, and directed a return of the automobile to the purchaser on payment of the balance due under the contract, such seller cannot maintain, in a subsequent action by the purchaser for conversion, the seller being unable to return the automobile under the judgment, that the judgment in the replevin action was void; such judgment being at most only erroneous.

3. Sales $\S$ 481—Trover and conversion $\S$ 16—Action for conversion maintainable without legal title.

Legal title is not always necessary to an action for conversion, but any special valuable interest in the property, accompanied with the right of possession, is sufficient, and the conditional vendee of an automobile was entitled to maintain such action, where vendor unlawfully deprived him of right of possession and disposed of the automobile.

4. Appeal and error $\S$ 1035—Judgment not reversed by reason of technical character of action.

Where conditional vendee brought action in conversion against vendor, who wrongfully deprived him of possession of the property and disposed of it, so that he could not return it, a judgment for the vendee for an amount which he was entitled to receive under the facts of the case will not be disturbed, although conversion was not technically the proper action to bring.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Henry C. Gesford, Judge.

Action by W. S. Carvell against L. F. Weaver. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Franklin T. Poore, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Milton A. Nathan, of San Francisco, and W. C. Wilde, of San Diego, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an action for damages for the conversion of a Ford automobile. On October 25, 1915, under a conditional contract the plaintiff W. S. Carvell, purchased from the assignors of defendant, L. F. Weaver, an automobile for which Carvell agreed to pay the sum of $508.50. Of this sum $200 was paid at the date of the contract, and the balance, with interest upon its diminishing residuum, was to be paid at the rate of $35 per month. None of these monthly payments were made upon their due date, but when tendered were accepted by the vendor of the automobile. On the 22d day of April following, there being overdue $20 upon an installment of said purchase price falling due in March, Weaver commenced an action in claim and delivery in the justice's court, and under a writ of possession the automobile was delivered to Weaver. Carvell in his answer to the complaint in said action did not pray for its return, but denied the allegations of the complaint, and in addition alleged that Weaver had repudiated the contract. He accordingly demanded judgment for the sum of the payments made by him, and damages for the detention of the motor car.

The justice of the peace, proceeding doubtless upon the theory that Weaver had a right to enforce the literal terms of the contract, notwithstanding that under the authorities there had been by reason of the vendor's acceptance of overdue payments a waiver of the forfeiture clause of the contract, until reasonable notice was given to the vendee that the terms of the contract as to time of payment would be strictly enforced. But the superior court, on appeal, applying this doctrine of waiver, rendered judgment in favor of Carvell for the return of the automobile upon payment of the balance due under the contract and costs. Thereafter Carvell tendered Weaver such balance, but Weaver, while paying the costs, refused to accept such balance, stating that he did not have possession of the car and did not know its whereabouts, and refused to deliver it.

In rendering its judgment on appeal the superior court failed to direct that, if a return of the property could not be had, Weaver should pay to Carvell its value fixed at a certain amount. Hence, when it appeared that Weaver was unable to return the property, and that Carvell's interests had not been fully protected by the judgment, the latter about a year after the rendition of the judgment commenced this action against Weaver for damages for the conversion of said automobile, and obtained judgment.

[1] It is not claimed upon this appeal that the judgment in the former action constituted a bar to this action. Carvell's damages for the conversion of the automobile it appears were never actually litigated or passed upon. This action, therefore, is clearly maintainable. Nickerson v. Cal. Stage Co., 10 Cal. 520. In the case cited the plaintiff brought an action of replevin against the defendant to recover certain property, and obtained judgment for its restitution and damages for the illegal detention thereof. Defendant paid the damages, but the property was not restored. Plaintiff then brought an action of trover to recover its value, to which action the defendant pleaded the former judgment as a bar. It was held that the judgment in the replevin suit did not constitute a bar to the action of trover, the judgment in replevin not having been satisfied.

[2] It will be noted, as already stated, that Carvell in the claim and delivery action commenced against him by Weaver did not demand a return of the automobile or its value, contenting himself with a demand for the repayment to him of the sum of his installment payments with damages for the detention of the car. The superior court, however, on appeal went outside of the issues, and directed such return upon payment by Carvell of the balance due under the contract. For this reason Weaver claims that the judgment in that action was void.

[3, 4] Conceding that in an action of claim and delivery, in which the plaintiff has obtained possession of the property, where the defendant makes no claim or demand for the return of the property or its value, a judgment for its return or its value is not within the issue, and is not permissible (Banning v. Marleau, 101 Cal. 238, 35 Pac. 772), still it appears that the court had jurisdiction of both the parties and the subject-matter; hence at most the judgment was only erroneous and not void (Hogue v. Fanning, 73 Cal. 54, 14 Pac. 560). And, granting that the legal title to the automobile was in Weaver, still we have no doubt that Carvell's interest in the property was such as to entitle him to maintain this action for its conversion. The legal title is not always necessary to an action for conversion, but any special valuable interest in the property accompanied with the right of possession is sufficient to form the basis of such an action. Bowers on the Law of Conversion, §§ 123, 383, 434; Middleworth v. Sedgwick, 10 Cal. 392; Green v. Burr, 131 Cal. 236, 63 Pac. 360; Hilmer v. Hills, 138 Cal. 134, 70 Pac. 1080. However this may be, here the plaintiff alleged the facts of the case; and as the relief granted was, regardless of the technical character of his action, no more than he was entitled to receive, the action of the trial court will not be disturbed.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, P. J.; RICHARDS, J.

55 Cal. App. 84

JOHNSON v. BABCOCK. (Civ. 3723.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Nov. 5, 1921.)

Process  149—Finding of due service of summons and complaint held supported by evidence.

In action to annul a judgment against plaintiff on the ground that there was no service upon plaintiff of any summons or complaint, finding that there was such service held supported by evidence, consisting of a return contained in the judgment roll and testimony of the process server from such return, under Code Civ. Proc. § 2047.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; E. A. Luce, Judge.

Action by Fannie Johnson against Geneva G. Babcock. From judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

D. F. Glidden, of San Diego, for appellant.
Dennison & Towner, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. Action to annul a judgment of the superior court upon the ground that appellant, who was a defendant in that action, and who never appeared therein, was never served with any summons or complaint in that action.

On the trial of this present action the court found that in the former action a true and correct copy of the summons and complaint was served, as shown by the return contained in the judgment roll, and that the default and judgment were regularly and duly entered. The appeal rests entirely upon the contention that the evidence is not sufficient to sustain the findings of fact.

Appellant testified that she never was served with a copy of summons and complaint, or with a summons and complaint, in the former action, and did not learn that there had been any such action until a time nearly three years after the judgment had been entered. The testimony of her brother and of her husband is corroborative of appellant's testimony in this, that she never mentioned the said former action to either of them, and that their relations with her were such that probably the case would have been discussed with them if the summons had ever been served upon Mrs. Johnson. Such, at least, appears to have been the opinion of those witnesses.

On the other hand, the judgment roll in the former action contains a return in the form of an affidavit made by one Harry C. Clark, subscribed and sworn to by him on the 4th day of January, 1916, wherein he stated that on that day he personally served the summons on the defendants therein named (who were Fannie and Emery F. Johnson) by delivering to and leaving with each of said defendants personally in the county of San Diego, Cal., a copy of the summons attached to a copy of the complaint in that action. Sworn as a witness in the present case, Mr. Clark, having first examined the return on the summons, testified that he did serve the summons and that he did deliver a copy of the summons and complaint to the said defendants in that action and made his return accordingly.

"Q. Was that done upon both of them? A. It was.

"Q. And you made your return accordingly? A. Yes, sir."

Answering as to the place of service, he said, "My memory would be it was a residence." But he admitted that he could not remember the details of the service, and that he did not have any distinct recollection concerning the same; that he had no recollection except from that return; that in making his statements he was going by the return.

The foregoing evidence is sufficient to sustain the findings of the court.

"A witness is allowed to refresh his memory respecting a fact by anything written by himself, or under his direction, at the time when the fact occurred, or immediately thereafter, or at any other time when the fact was fresh in his memory, and he knew that the same was correctly stated in the writing. But in such case the writing must be produced, and may be seen by the adverse party, who may, if he choose, cross-examine the witness upon it, and may read it to the jury. So, also, a witness may testify from such a writing, though he retain no recollection of the particular facts, but such evidence must be received with caution." Code Civ. Proc. § 2047; Estate of Moore, 180 Cal. 570, 585, 182 Pac. 285; People v. McFarlane, 138 Cal. 481, 488, 71 Pac. 568, 72 Pac. 48, 61 L. R. A. 245.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; JAMES, J.

55 Cal. App. 67

TODD v. LYON et al. (Civ. 3724.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1. California. Nov. 4, 1921.)

1. Sales ⚡200(2)—Where goods identified, future invoicing to determine price does not delay passing of title.

Under Civ. Code, § 1140, as to time of passing of title, where the contract identifies the existing goods sold, the fact that the price to be paid depends upon some unit of measurement or invoicing thereafter to be made does not affect the transfer of title.

2. Sales ⚡218½—Intent to presently transfer is question of fact where contract not clear.

Whether the parties intended a present transfer of title is a question of law where the intention clearly appears from the written contract, but, if not clear, it is a question for the jury or trial court to determine from all the facts and circumstances.

3. Sales ⚡218½—Evidence held to show intent to make present transfer.

In action for price of a stock of goods destroyed by fire before defendant buyers had invoiced them to determine their cost, and therefrom the purchase price, evidence held to support finding that the goods were delivered to defendants with the intent of both parties that title should then vest in defendants.

4. Evidence ⚡158(28)—Books of plaintiff seller held best evidence of value of stock of goods lost in fire before buyers' invoice.

In action for price of a stock of goods destroyed by fire before defendant buyers had invoiced them to determine their cost, and therefrom the purchase price, plaintiff's books, showing the cost of goods in stock on the preceding January 1st, and the difference between the cost of goods purchased and sold between that time and the time of the sale, held the best evidence as to the cost of the goods.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; E. A. Luce, Judge.

Action by Edward Todd against Horace T. Lyon and others. From judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Wright & McKee, of San Diego, and L. N. Turrentine, of Escondido, for appellants.

Charles C. Crouch, of San Diego, for respondent.

SHAW, J. From a judgment entered in favor of plaintiff, for the purchase price of a stock of merchandise alleged to have been sold and delivered to defendants, they have appealed.

It appears that plaintiff was a merchant at La Mesa, Cal., where, in a storeroom owned by him, he carried a stock of goods necessary in conducting the business; that on November 1, 1919, he and defendants entered into a written agreement as follows:

"This agreement entered into between the Escondido Mer. Co. hereafter known as the parties of the first part, & E. Todd, hereafter known as the parties of the second part.

"The parties of the second part does by this agreement sell to the party of the first part their entire stock of merchandise located in La Mesa at 85 ct. on the dollar, the goods to be invoiced at what they cost the party of the second part.

"The party of the first part has deposited with the party of the second part $250.00 on the purchase price of the goods.

"Edward Todd,
"Escondido Mer. Co."

On November 6th, five days after the execution of the contract, and prior to the invoicing of the goods, the entire stock of merchandise was destroyed by fire.

The complaint alleges the making of the contract, which is admitted, and the delivery of the stock of merchandise referred to in said agreement to the defendants, the value thereof, and a demand for payment made upon defendants which was refused. In their answer defendants denied that the stock of merchandise had ever at any time been inventoried or invoiced as provided by the terms of the contract, or that any delivery thereof was ever made to them, or that the title thereto ever at any time passed from plaintiff to defendants.

The court found that on the date of the execution of the contract plaintiff delivered the stock of merchandise referred to in the agreement to the defendants, and that, at the time, "both parties to said contract intended to and did transfer the title and possession thereof to the defendants," which finding is attacked by appellants upon the ground that the evidence is insufficient to support the same.

The court also found that the actual cost to plaintiff of said stock of merchandise was the sum of $8,799.53, which finding appellants attack upon the ground that it is predicated upon testimony in support thereof which the court erroneously admitted over defendants' objection.

Basing their contention upon conceded authorities of other states which hold that, where anything remains to be done for the purpose of ascertaining the prices, as by weighing, measuring, or invoicing the goods, the performance of such things so to be done shall be deemed a condition precedent, even though identified and in condition for acceptance to the transfer of title, appellants insist there could be no passing of title in the instant case because the goods were never invoiced as provided by the contract "at what they cost plaintiff." This rule, however, is modified by section 1140, Civil Code, which provides:

"The title to personal property sold * * * passes to the buyer whenever the parties agree upon a present transfer, and the thing itself is identified, whether it is separated from other things or not."

In construing this section of the Code, the Supreme Court, in Blackwood v. Cutting Packing Co., 76 Cal. 212, 18 Pac. 248, 9 Am. St. Rep. 199, while recognizing the rule stated as being supported generally by American cases, said that—"If the goods are identified, it does not matter that weighing or measuring is necessary to ascertain the price or the quantity."

In Lassing v. James, 107 Cal. 348, 40 Pac. 534, in a case where a certain amount of hay contracted to be sold was never measured and the amount ascertained as provided in the contract, the court, in response to the claim that title did not pass because of such failure to measure, said:

"We are clear that the agreement to ascertain the number of tons of hay at some future time by weight and measurement in no way affected the question as to the present passing of the title."

In Fiddymont v. Johnson et al., 18 Cal. App. 342, 123 Pac. 343, it is said:

"If the goods are identified and the parties agree upon a present transfer, it does not matter that weighing or measuring is necessary to ascertain the price to be finally paid."

To like effect are the cases of Browning v. McNear, 145 Cal. 272, 78 Pac. 722; Gianelli et al. v. Globe Grain & M. Co., 191 Pac. 720; Greenbaum v. Martinez, 86 Cal. 459, 25 Pac. 12; Bill v. Fuller, 146 Cal. 50, 79 Pac. 592.

[1] It thus appears from the authorities cited that, where the contract identifies the existing goods sold, and the price to be paid depends upon some unit of measurement or invoicing thereafter to be made, such fact in itself does not affect the transfer of the title. There is no question in the instant case as to the identity of the stock of goods sold. They are sufficiently described as being the entire stock of merchandise located in the store of plaintiff at La Mesa, which is a city or town in San Diego county, Cal. As against the cases cited in support of the rule announced, appellants direct our attention to the case of Young v. New Pedrara Onyx Co., reported in 192 Pac. 55, 61, where the court (division 2 of this district), in discussing a similar question, quoted with approval the rule announced by the Supreme Court of the United States in the Elgee Cotton Cases, 22 Wall. 180, 22 L. Ed. 863, to the effect that—

“where the buyer is by the contract bound to do anything as a consideration either precedent or concurrent, on which the passing of the property depends, the property will not pass until the condition be fulfilled, even though the goods may have been actually delivered into the possession of the buyer.”

There is nothing inconsistent between the rule so stated and the rule prevailing in California, since, by virtue of section 1140 of the Civil Code, the passing of the title did not depend upon the taking of the invoice.

[2] Since, as we hold, the goods were sufficiently identified, and the taking of the invoice was not necessary to the transfer of title, the question presented to the trial court for solution was whether or not the parties agreed upon a present transfer of the title, which fact must be ascertained from the intention of the parties at the time. Where such intention clearly appears from a written contract, it is a question of law; if not clear, it is a question for the jury or trial judge to determine from all the facts and circumstances touching the question. Fiddymen v. Johnson, supra.

[3] As stated, the court found the goods were by plaintiff delivered to the defendants with the intent of both parties that title thereto should vest in defendants. Conceding the existence of facts and circumstances from which conflicting inferences might be drawn, there is, in our opinion, evidence which clearly tends to establish the finding as made by the court. The contract cannot be construed as an agreement to sell for it in express terms declares that plaintiff “does by this agreement sell” to defendants “their entire stock of merchandise,” etc. The language employed in the writing imports an absolute sale of the property, which is fully identified as being “their entire stock of merchandise located in La Mesa.” Gianelli & Barmann v. Globe Grain & M. Co., 191 Pac. 720. Upon its execution defendants demanded the keys of the storeroom wherein the goods were located, and in accordance with such demand plaintiff delivered two keys to the door, and thereafter, awaiting the taking of the invoice of the goods, which was to determine the amount to be paid therefor, he ceased conducting the business and exercised no right or control over the same. As against these facts, it appears that at the time of the fire plaintiff held an insurance policy upon the property, insuring it against loss by fire, and that he attempted to collect the same upon the theory that the title to the goods was vested in him at the time they were destroyed; that, while he testified that it was his intention when he signed the contract to deliver the goods to defendants as absolute owners in control thereof, he also stated that he expected payment therefor before the goods were removed; that, after surrendering the two keys, which he thought were all he had to the door of the storeroom, his wife discovered a third key which he did not send to defendants; to which may be added the facts that the parties were strangers at the time the agreement was made, and that plaintiff posted upon the door a notice reading, “Closed for Inventory.” The most that can be said is that inferences might have been drawn from these circumstances which were in conflict with evidence upon which the court, well within its province, made the finding that the stock of merchandise was delivered to defendants with the intention to transfer the title. Such conclusion, since reached upon evidence of a substantial character, must be deemed conclusive upon the question.

The contract contemplated the ascertainment of the cost of the goods by an invoice thereof, in the taking of which both parties should participate, and defendants obligated themselves to pay 85 per cent. of the total cost of the goods so ascertained. Since it was impossible to obtain such invoice of the goods, plaintiff was permitted to establish the cost thereof from his books of original entry and oral testimony in connection therewith. As shown by his books, the cost of the goods in stock on January 1, 1919, was $7,913.45. Between that date and November 1, 1919, the date of the sale to defendants, he purchased goods at a cost of $6,386.85, and during the same period sold goods at a price aggregating $7,426.05, the cost of which goods so sold and disposed of he testified was $5,500.77. Deducting this last sum from the cost of the goods in stock on January 1, 1919, which, added to purchases thereafter made, aggregated a total of $14,300.30, left a balance of $8,799.53, constituting the total cost of the stock of goods sold to defendants, 85 per cent. of which is $7,469.60, for which judgment was rendered.

[4] Plaintiff's books from which these facts appeared, and his oral testimony in connection therewith, were admitted over the objection of defendants, who strenuously insist that the court erred in the ruling. While this was not the method agreed upon for ascertaining the cost of the stock, and conceding that to some degree it is unsatisfactory, nevertheless the failure to invoice the goods was not due to any fault of plaintiff, and it was, under the circumstances of the case, the best—indeed the only—evidence that could be produced touching the issue as to the cost of the property. There was no error on the part of the court in overruling defendants' objection to the admission of the evidence, and since, though to some degree unsatisfactory, it clearly tended to establish the cost of the goods, title to which was vested in defendants, it must, on review thereof, be deemed sufficient to support the finding that the cost of the stock of merchandise was the sum of $8,799.53.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

54 Cal. App. 715

JOCHIMSEN v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES et al. (Civ. 3742.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Oct. 28, 1921.)

1. Waters and water courses $\S$ 203(6) — Rates chargeable by city not subject to regulation by Railroad Commission.

Const. art. 12, $\S$ 23, giving the Railroad Commission power and jurisdiction to supervise public utilities and fix rates to be charged, does not vest in such commission authority to regulate the rates to be charged by the city of Los Angeles in the sale of water to its inhabitants.

2. Constitutional law $\S$ 211—Waters and water courses $\S$ 132 — Constitutional provision exempting city from regulation by Commission does not deny equal protection of the laws.

Const. art. 12, $\S$ 23, providing for the regulation of public utilities by the Railroad Commission, though construed as inapplicable to municipally owned public utilities, does not deny the equal protection of the laws to corporations or persons engaged in operating public utilities, in violation of Const. U. S. amend. 14, as applied to the sale of water by the city of Los Angeles, in view of St. 1917, pp. 1694, 1695, relative to the rates to be charged for water, etc., as such city in furnishing water for public use is not engaged in such business under the same conditions pertaining to a private corporation or person.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Shenk, Judge.

Action by E. P. Jochimsen against the City of Los Angeles and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Harry Lyons, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Jesse E. Stephens, City Atty., W. B. Mathews, Ray C. Eberhard, and Trent G. Anderson, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CONREY, P. J. This action was brought to obtain an injunction restraining the city of Los Angeles, and the board of public service commissioners thereof, from increasing the rates charged for water furnished through and by means of its municipally owned water system, without the consent of the Railroad Commission of the state. The court having sustained a general demurrer to the complaint, judgment was entered in favor of the defendants. The plaintiff appeals from the judgment.

[1] Only two questions are presented for decision. Appellant first contends that, by virtue of the Constitution of the state of California and the acts of the Legislature, exclusive jurisdiction has been conferred upon the Railroad Commission to establish the rates to be charged in the sale of water as a public utility; and that by consequence the city of Los Angeles, while engaged in the business of furnishing water to the public in said city, may charge only such rates as have been established by order of the Railroad Commission. The Supreme Court of California, in a decision covering this same question, has determined the matter adversely to the contentions of appellant here. For reasons fully set forth in that decision, we are satisfied that section 23 of article 12 of the Constitution of California was not intended to and does not vest in the Railroad Commission authority to regulate the rates to be charged by the city of Los Angeles in the sale of water to its inhabitants. City of Pasadena v. Railroad Commission, 192 Pac. 25, 10 A. L. R. 1425.

[2] The second contention of appellant is that, if it be held that municipally owned public utilities are not brought within the jurisdiction of the Railroad Commission by section 23 of article 12 of the Constitution, then that section should be held void as in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, because it denies to the plaintiff, or to any corporation or person who would be engaged in the operation of such public utility, the equal protection of the laws, in this, that it attempts to create an arbitrary discrimination and classification between persons engaged in the same kinds of business and under the same conditions. But we are of the opinion that a municipality engaged in the business of furnishing water for public use is not engaged in such business under the same conditions as those pertaining to a private corporation or person furnishing water to the public.

The state may distinguish, select, and classify objects of legislation, and necessarily the power must have a wide range of discretion.

"Classification for such purposes is not invalid because not depending on scientific or marked differences in things or persons or in their relations. It suffices if it is practical, and is not reviewable unless palpably arbitrary." Orient Ins. Co. v. Daggs, 172 U. S. 557, 562, 19 Sup. Ct. 281, 282, 43 L. Ed. 552, 554.

The classification under consideration in the case at bar is practical, and is based upon a reasonable exercise and discretion of the legislative power. Without attempting to exhaust the list of possible illustrations, we will adopt that used by the Supreme Court of Illinois in Springfield Gas, etc., Co. v. City of Springfield, 292 Ill. 236, 126 N. E. 739. We are informed that that case is now pending in the Supreme Court of the United States on writ of error. Nevertheless, we rely upon the state decision at this time because its reasoning appears to us to be correct upon the question now under consideration. The court said:

"Municipalities under the Municipal Ownership Act are limited in rates and charges for the product furnished by their public utilities, and cannot operate them at a profit to the same extent as can private corporations, associations, or persons owning like utilities. They are required, under the act governing them, to keep separate accounts of the moneys received from the operation of their utilities, and such funds cannot be used as revenues except to discharge their obligations and expenses in the operation of the utilities. Their charges for such services are simply to be high enough to produce revenue sufficient to bear all costs of maintenance and operation, to meet interest charges on bonds and certificates issued on account thereof, and to permit the accumulation of a surplus or sinking fund sufficient to meet all outstanding bonds or certificates at maturity issued on account of such utilities. The statute does not contemplate that the rates shall be higher or lower than for the purposes aforesaid, no matter what effect such rates and charges may have upon other corporations or persons owning or operating public utilities. * * * It is contemplated that private corporations and persons shall realize profits. The Legislature had the right to assume that the rates and charges of each of these two classes of public utilities would not and could not be the same to consumers. It is clear, therefore, that the Legislature acted within its constitutional rights and powers in enacting the two statutes and making different provisions in so far as the same were necessary to accomplish the purposes for which the two acts were enacted. It is equally clear that the Legislature had the right and power to delegate to the municipalities the right of regulation and control of such municipally owned plants."

So, here, the charter of the city of Los Angeles, which vests in the board of public service commissioners the right to regulate the use, sale, and distribution of water belonging to the city, and to fix the rates to be charged therefor, declares that such rates "shall be of uniform operation, as near as may be, and shall be fair and reasonable, taking into consideration, among other things, the nature of the use, the quantity supplied, and the value of the service." The same section of the charter further provides, with respect to moneys received from the sale or use of water, "that all such moneys shall be deposited in the treasury of the city to the credit of a fund to be known as the 'Water Revenue Fund,' and shall be kept separate and apart from other moneys of the city. * * *" Here follow statements governing the manner of paying out moneys from the water revenue fund, which shall be so paid for the stated purposes, "and for no other purpose." Stats. 1917, pp. 1694, 1695. We are satisfied that the nature of the business of furnishing water as a public utility by a private person or corporation differs from the nature of that business when conducted by a municipal corporation, both with respect to the differences inherent in a municipal corporation as distinguished from a private person or corporation, and in the purposes for which the business is conducted and the methods of conducting such business. These differences are amply sufficient to justify the classification made by the laws of this state.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; JAMES, J.

55 Cal. App. 144

HARRIS v. MT. WASHINGTON CO. et al.
(Civ. 3750.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Nov. 10, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 5, 1922.)

1. Executors and administrators $\S$ 228(2) — Claim against estate may be assigned and proved by assignee.

A trust company holding a note guaranteed by a decedent could assign its claim against the estate on the guaranty, and its assignee could make proof of the claim under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1494, 1497, and, although the assignment was made for the purposes of collection merely, it was effective to transfer the legal title to the demand.

2. Executors and administrators $\S$ 438(7) — On rejection of assigned claim, either the claimant or his subsequent assignee as "holder" of the claim could sue thereon.

Upon the rejection of an assigned claim based upon a contract, proof of which claim was made by the assignee under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1494, 1497, suit could be brought thereon by the assignee claimant or, without making any new demand against the estate or the executrix, by the claimant's subsequent assignee; the latter being a "holder" of the claim within the meaning of section 1500.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Holder.]

3. Limitation of actions ⚡83(2)—Statute as to administration only enlarges period.

Where it was not contended but that action against a decedent's estate was brought within the four years after maturity of the debt evidenced by the note sued on, or that the action was not brought within the time required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1498, after rejection of the claim, the right to sue was not lost by limitation under section 353, which covers a case where the ordinary period of limitation has run against a cause of action after the debtor's death, and in such case extends the time for suit for one year after letters issued.

4. Executors and administrators ⚡451(4) — Finding claim not barred by limitations held sufficient.

In action on contract claim against a decedent's estate, where, although the court did not make a finding in direct terms negating the plea of limitations in the form it was made, it did, in the findings, set forth the different proceedings had in the matter of the estate and further recited that "within the time required by law, to wit, on" a named date, the claim was presented, rejected, and notice of rejection given claimant, such finding on the plea was sufficient, under the rule that, if the truth or falsity of each material allegation can be demonstrated from the finding, the law is complied with.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Shenk, Judge.

Action by William H. Harris against the Mt. Washington Company, Florence A. Andrews, executrix, and others. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant Florence A. Andrews, executrix, appeals. Affirmed.

Willedd Andrews and Tanner, Odell & Taft, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Alfred Wright, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Appeal by defendant executrix from a judgment entered in favor of the plaintiff.

[1, 2] J. E. Marsh was a guarantor on a promissory note executed by the Mt. Washington Company in favor of the Title Insurance & Trust Company. The note was payable one day after date and was executed on April 15, 1916. On the 1st day of April, 1917, Marsh died, and on the 30th day of July of the same year Florence A. Andrews was appointed executrix under the will. She qualified on August 2, 1917, and caused notice to creditors to be published. The date of the first publication of said notice was June 19, 1919.

There being owing on account of the promissory note mentioned the sum of $7,727.98, the Title Insurance & Trust Company on the 15th day of January, 1920, assigned to D. A. Anderson, one of its employees, its claim against Marsh's estate, and on the 20th day of January, 1920, Anderson presented to the executrix a claim in due form showing all of the facts required to be set forth under the provisions of sections 1494 and 1497, Code of Civil Procedure. The claim was rejected by the executrix on the day of its presentation, whereupon Anderson reassigned the claim to the Title Insurance & Trust Company, which in turn and on the 1st day of February, 1920, assigned and transferred the same to the plaintiff. At the trial proof was made of the amount of the claim and the fact that there were no offsets existing either as against the nominal plaintiff or the original payee of the note, and that no security had been given. It is the contention of appellant that the Title Insurance & Trust Company should have made proof of the claim, and that the assignment to Anderson and his verification of the demand did not entitle suit to be brought after rejection of the claim. The second point made is that the subsequent assignment to plaintiff did not carry with it the right to prosecute this action. The point of the latter contention is that this plaintiff, in order to maintain suit, must have made a claim against the estate in the manner provided by the Code. The third contention relates to the statute of limitation, it being insisted that the action was barred by reason of provisions of section 353, Code of Civil Procedure. We think that the Title Insurance & Trust Company had a plain right to assign its contract demand against the estate of Marsh, and that the assignee was entitled to make proof of the claim as he did. In the claim as filed the executrix was given full information as to the nature of the demand and the conditions of the obligation. The assignment to Anderson was made for the purposes of collection merely. Such assignment nevertheless was effective to transfer the legal title to the demand (Greig v. Riordan, 99 Cal. 316, 33 Pac. 913; Hopkins v. Contra Costa Co., 106 Cal. 566, 39 Pac. 933), and at the same time there was preserved to the estate, under those conditions, the right to urge any equities which it might hold as against the payee of the note. There existed no such equities, and the court so found. Counsel for appellant have not attracted our attention to any authorities sustaining the contention that an assignee of a contract demand may not properly make and verify the claim on the account as against the estate of a deceased person, and we think that none are to be found. The demand constituted a chose in action of an assignable kind:

"Assignability of things in action is now the rule; nonassignability, the exception; and this exception is confined to wrongs done to the person, the reputation, or the feelings of the injured party, and to contracts of a purely personal nature." Rued v. Cooper, 109 Cal. 682, 34 Pac. 98; Simmons v. Zimmerman, 144 Cal. 256, 79 Pac. 451, 1 Ann. Cas. 850; Ruling Case Law, vol. 2, p. 395; Civ. Code, § 954.

Upon the rejection of the claim by the executrix, the claimant became entitled to bring suit thereon. This right could be exercised by the claimant Anderson or his subsequent assignee. No new demand was required to be made against the executrix, who had already been fully and formally apprised of the facts constituting the claim. The plaintiff as a subsequent assignee was a holder of the claim within the meaning of section 1500, Code of Civil Procedure.

[3, 4] Defendant pleaded, as stated, the further defense that the cause of action was barred by the provisions of section 353, Code of Civil Procedure. It is not contended but that the action was brought within the four years after maturity of the debt evidenced by the promissory note, or that the action was not brought within the time required by section 1498, Code of Civil Procedure, after rejection of the claim. Under this state of facts, plainly the right to prosecute the suit was not lost by limitation. Section 353 covers a case where the ordinary period of limitation has run against a cause of action after the death of a debtor, in which case the time for commencing the action is extended to include the end of the period of one year ensuing after the issuance of letters testamentary or of administration. Another complaint made by appellant under this head is that the trial judge failed to make a finding on the affirmative plea of the statute of limitation. It is true that a finding was not made in direct terms negating the plea in the form it was made, but the court did, in the findings, set forth the several dates of the different proceedings had in the Estate of Marsh, and further recited that "within the time required by law, to wit, on the 20th of January, 1920," claim was presented to the executrix and rejected on the same day, notice of which rejection was given to Anderson, the claimant. From the facts found it appears that the plea as to the bar of the statute was not sustained by the evidence. "The court did not find in direct language that the action was not barred by the statute, but it found facts which show that it was not so barred. * * * If the truth or falsity of each material allegation * * * can be demonstrated from the findings, the law is complied with." Ready v. McDonald, 128 Cal. 663, 61 Pac. 272, 79 Am. St. Rep. 76. See, also, Woodham v. Cline, 130 Cal. 499, 62 Pac. 822; Millard v. Council Legion of Honor, 81 Cal. 340, 22 Pac. 864.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; SHAW, J.

55 Cal. App. 176

DEOVLETIAN et al. v. WHITNEY et al.
(Civ. 3903.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Nov. 4, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court, Jan. 3, 1922.)

1. Brokers ⇐52—Real estate agent entitled to commission for producing purchaser though sale consummated by owner.

In absence of any contrary contract, a real estate agent to be entitled to his commission need only produce a purchaser able, ready, and willing to purchase on the terms exacted by the owner, though the sale is eventually consummated by the latter.

2. Brokers ⇐66—What must have been done in effecting a sale pursuant to a contract to divide commissions, and what not required in assisting to sell, stated.

Under an express contract between plaintiffs and defendants allowing plaintiffs half the commission for selling property listed with defendants, but providing that defendants should assist plaintiffs as much as possible in closing deals effected by plaintiffs, plaintiffs in order to "effect a deal" must have secured a binding preliminary contract or at least have brought the buyer and seller together so that they might themselves negotiate and execute such a contract, and the assistance to be rendered by defendants did not require them to do everything in connection with a sale of land except what plaintiffs did by finding a listing card in which the customer might be interested, and carrying abstracts from one office to another after the preliminary agreement was signed and a deposit made on the purchase price, the contract also providing that plaintiffs were to have no commissions on sales by defendants, and that customers coming into their office belonged to defendants, and that, if plaintiffs gave up any "individual deal" and it was taken up and closed by defendants, plaintiffs were entitled to no commission unless the property was exclusively listed with them.

3. Brokers ⇐86(4) — Evidence held not to show sale effected by agents pursuant to contract to divide commission.

Evidence held not to show that real estate agents effected a sale of land so as to entitle them to half the commission under a contract with other agents with whom the land was listed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by A. P. Deovletian and another against W. J. Whitney and another, individually, and as Watson & Whitney, a copartnership, to recover commissions upon the sale of real estate. Judgment for the plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

Lewis H. Smith, of Fresno (Frank H. Marvin, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellants.

Ohannesian & Ohannesian, of Fresno, for respondents.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal by the defendants from a judgment for $2,000 against them, in an action to recover commissions upon the sale of real estate. Defendants were in the real estate business and plaintiffs were working for them under a contract which, in so far as it is relevant here, reads as follows:

"Pursuant to our conversation of even date, beg to advise that during the period that you continue to carry on the general real estate business in the connection with us, as our representative, we will pay the following commission:

"(1) On property listed through this office and sold by yourself, we will pay you 50 per cent. of the gross commission derived from the sale. * * *

"(4) On property listed by this office and sold by this office without any effort on your part you will receive no commission.

"(5) We agree to give you as much assistance as possible in closing deals that may be effected by you, and any assistance which we may render you in this manner will not affect the scale of commission. We will also expect you to render such assistance to this company as you conveniently can in the matter of listing any property from clients who shall come into this office for the purpose of listing property. It being understood, however, that such listing shall be considered as having been listed by this company. It is also understood that any property which you may list outside of this office where this company shall have been instrumental in aiding you to secure said listing, said property shall be considered as having been listed by this company.

"(6) Customers coming into this office for the purpose of purchasing property, or, in fact, any customer which you may secure through this office, shall be considered as belonging to this office, and on sales made by you to them we will pay you 50 per cent. of the gross commission received regardless of whom the property shall have been listed by. * * *

"(9) In the event that you fail to close any individual deal and give the deal up as lost that one of the firm, or in fact any one representing this firm pick up the deal then, and finally close same you are entitled to no commission whatever unless it be your exclusive listing which then you will be entitled to 15 per cent. only."

From the record it appears without contradiction that the defendants had listed in their office, independently of any efforts of plaintiffs, a certain 80-acre tract of vineyard belonging to J. J. Bolitho. Late in the afternoon of February 24, 1920, Kaloust Nazarian and his son entered defendants' office and asked about land listed there for sale. One of the salesmen in the office, Sam

Matthews, took out some listing cards and attempted to interest Nazarian in the property there offered. Nazarian found none of these attractive. Matthews then introduced Nazarian to one of the plaintiffs, B. P. Deovletian, who brought forward another box of listing cards, on one of which the Bolitho property was listed. Nazarian said he knew something of this property through some other source, but had never seen it and desired to do so; that he did not have time to go out to see the property that day, as it was already late in the day, but stated that he would come in at another time and go out to see the property. In accordance with this understanding, he arrived at the office of the defendants on Saturday afternoon, February 28, 1920. There he met the plaintiff B. P. Deovletian, and asked to be taken to see the Bolitho property. Said plaintiff, however, stated that he had an engagement to take another customer out and could not go with Mr. Nazarian. Because of this fact, he introduced Nazarian to the defendant Whitney, explaining that he (Deovletian) could not take Nazarian out to see the property. Thereupon, Mr. Whitney said he would take him out, which he did. Whitney introduced Nazarian to the owner of the property, and, after a personal examination and some negotiations, Nazarian deposited $1,000 upon the contract price of the property and signed a preliminary agreement for the purchase of the same. As to the details involved in the execution of the final contract, it appears that most of the complications which arose as to the acceptance of certain securities as part of the first installment payment for the property, and disposing of certain property owned by Nazarian to enable him to meet the first payment of $35,000, were met and solved by Mr. Whitney. Mr. Bolitho, the owner of the land, stated that he had never known the plaintiffs in connection with the transaction; that Mr. Whitney had conducted all the negotiations and closed the transaction, except for the part which his attorneys had taken in the matter. According to the testimony of B. P. Deovletian, his connection with the transaction was as herein stated, and he does not claim to have had any further part in it except to say that he went to the abstract office and took abstracts back and forth from there to the attorney's office, and asked Mr. Whitney at different times how the matter was getting along. His brother, A. P. Deovletian, stated that he had been away from the city until after the preliminary agreement was signed, and that his part in the transaction was:

"That I have handled the contracts from Mr. Cook's office for investigation down to our office then to Mr. Willey's office and then the abstract was lost at one time, misplaced rather, and we went around and found the abstract and brought it to your (the attorney's) office, and such details like that. * * *

Upon this evidence, the trial court gave judgment for the plaintiffs, who were working as partners in their real estate transactions.

[1,2] We are of the opinion that, under their contracts, the plaintiffs have not earned the commission they seek to recover. In many of the cases cited by the respondent, the rule with reference to commissions to be paid by an owner to a real estate dealer is discussed. In such cases, of course, the rule is well settled that the agent need only produce a purchaser, able, ready, and willing to purchase upon the terms exacted by the owner, and that, even though the transaction be eventually consummated by the owner, the agent is entitled to his commission, in the absence of any contrary contract provisions. In the present case, however, the situation is different. The plaintiffs and defendants are all real estate agents, and the plaintiffs were working under express contracts requiring them to do certain things. They were required to sell the property—to effect a deal, in order to receive one-half of the commission. It is true that the contract provides that the defendants shall give to plaintiffs as much assistance as possible in closing deals after they have been effected by the plaintiffs. But we think that in order to “effect a deal” the plaintiffs must have secured a binding preliminary contract, or at least brought the buyer and seller together, so that they might themselves negotiate and execute a valid preliminary agreement. We are not disposed to construe the above-quoted provision of the contract requiring the defendants to render assistance to the plaintiffs in closing deals after they had been effected by the plaintiffs, in such an unreasonable manner as to require the defendants to do everything in connection with the transaction except to find in their own files a listing card in which the customer might possibly be interested, and to carry abstracts from one office to another after the preliminary agreement had been signed and a deposit made upon the purchase price of the property. The contract clearly states that the plaintiff was to have no commission upon property sold by the defendants and that customers coming into the office were to be considered as customers belonging to the office of defendants. The contract also provides that in the event plaintiffs give up any “individual deal” and it is taken up by any member of the firm and finally closed, plaintiffs are to be entitled to no commission unless there was involved property which had been listed exclusively with the plaintiffs.

[3] We think it clearly appears from all the testimony in the record, indeed it is apparent from the testimony of plaintiffs themselves, that they did not effect any sale; that they never brought the buyer and seller together, or caused a meeting of their minds upon this transaction; and that they are not entitled to any commission under the terms of their contract. Wright & Kimbrough v. Dewees, 197 Pac. 957; Naylor v. Ashton, 20 Cal. App. 544, 546, 130 Pac. 181; N. W. Packing Co. v. Whitney, 5 Cal. App. 105, 110, 89 Pac. 981; Ayres v. Thomas, 116 Cal. 143 et seq., 47 Pac. 1013; Mattingly v. Pennie, 105 Cal. 514, 519, 39 Pac. 200, 45 Am. St. Rep. 87; Gunn v. Bank of California, 99 Cal. 349, 353, 33 Pac. 1105.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: NOURSE, J.; STURTEVANT, J.

55 Cal. App. 37

PEOPLE v. HAMBY. (Cr. 808.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California, Nov. 2, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 29, 1921.)

1. Criminal law — 1159(5) — Jury finding on issue of intent conclusive on appeal.

Jury's finding on the issue of intent was conclusive on appeal from conviction for passing fictitious check.

2. False pretenses — 49(2) — Evidence held to sustain conviction for issuing a fictitious check.

Testimony that all the handwriting on the face and back of a check, including the signature and the indorsement by defendant, was that of defendant, and that the bank named in the indictment was named as drawee, and prosecutor cashed it, justified the jury in finding intent on his part to defraud prosecutor and the bank.

3. False pretenses — 49(1) — Evidence held to sustain finding that defendant had no funds in bank on which fictitious check was drawn.

On prosecution for issuing a fictitious check under Pen. Code, § 476a, evidence, from which the jury might have found that defendant forged the signature of one C. to the check; that there was no account standing on the books of the bank under that name; that the check was cashed through prosecuting witness, instead of being presented to the bank; and that payment was refused when it finally reached the bank—sustained a finding that the defendant had no funds in the bank.

4. False pretenses — 49(1) — State need not show whether name signed by defendant to the check was that of fictitious person.

In a prosecution for issuing a fictitious check signed with the name of one C., it was immaterial that evidence did not show that no such person as C. existed, where it was shown that no such person had an account in the bank, and that defendant forged the name on the check.

5. Criminal law — 371(3), 372(9)—Evidence of issuance of other fictitious checks admissible to show system and intent.

In an action for issuing fictitious checks, receiving several other checks, admitted by defendant to have had similar origin with the one for which he had been prosecuted, and to have been passed to various persons as it was passed, and at about the same time, were receivable to show system and intent.

6. Witnesses — 301 — Refusal to postpone cross-examination held not compelling defendant to testify against himself.

Where direct examination of defendant was finished immediately before recess, he was not compelled to testify against himself by being compelled to take the stand for cross-examination on the reconvening of court, as against a request not to resume until the coming into court of another person not his counsel.

7. Criminal law — 409—Admissions of defendant held competent without preliminary evidence as to warning and intimidation.

It was not error to permit the sheriff to testify as to a conversation between himself and defendant without proof that defendant's statements were voluntary and made without intimidation or promise, where the statements were merely admissions not amounting to a confession, and laid the foundation for introduction of certain writings by defendant.

8. Criminal law — 773(1)—Evidence held to warrant instructions on temporary insanity.

Testimony of intoxication of defendant held sufficient to warrant instructions on temporary insanity.

9. Criminal law — 1137(3)—Defendant might not complain of instructions requested by him.

Defendant could not complain that there was no such issue presented by the evidence as was submitted by certain instructions, where the instructions were requested by him and given as submitted.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; J. W. Curtis, Judge.

Guy Hamby was convicted of passing a fictitious check, and appeals. Affirmed.

E. C. Jennings, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Arthur Keetch, Deputy Atty. Gen., and R. L. Chamberlain, of San Francisco, for the People.

WORKS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of conviction of the crime of issuing a fictitious check. According to the information the alleged spurious paper was issued over the name O. D. Cook, and was made payable to the order of appellant. One Freidman cashed the check for appellant and presented it to the bank on which it was drawn, when it was dishonored. The information charges that the paper was forged by appellant, through the use of the fictitious name O. D. Cook, with intent to defraud Freidman and the bank.

[1, 2] Appellant first contends for a reversal of the judgment on the ground that the prosecution failed to prove an intent on his part to defraud Freidman and the bank. There was testimony from an expert to the effect that all the handwriting on the face and back of the check, including the signature "O. D. Cook" and the indorsement "Guy Hamby," was that of appellant. This evidence, taken in connection with the fact that the bank was named as drawee of the instrument and the further fact that Freidman cashed it, was sufficient to justify the jury, its members being the judges upon the question of intent (People v. Walker, 15 Cal. App. 400, 114 Pac. 1009), in finding that appellant's intent in uttering the paper was as charged.

[3] Section 476a of the Penal Code, under which appellant was informed against, provides that one making, drawing, uttering, or delivering a fictitious check is within the inhibition of the section if at the time "he has not sufficient funds in or credit with" the bank on which the paper is drawn to meet it; and the section also provides that the word "credit," as used in it, "shall be construed to be an arrangement or understanding with the bank or depository for the payment" of the check. Appellant makes the point that no evidence was produced at the trial tending to show that, at the time of passing the check to Freidman, he had no funds in or credit with the bank, that being an item to be proven in order to establish the corpus delicti in a prosecution under the section. People v. Frey, 165 Cal. 140, 131 Pac. 127. There was evidence from which the jury might justly have concluded that appellant forged the signature O. D. Cook to the check; that there was no account standing on the books of the bank under that name; that the check was cashed through Freidman instead of being presented to the bank for payment, and that payment was refused when it finally reached the bank. This chain of evidence furnished a basis upon which the jury might have found, very properly, that appellant had no funds in or credit with the bank.

[4] It is next contended that there was no evidence to show that O. D. Cook was a fictitious person. It is sufficient, on this head, to assert that, as the case finally developed, it was not incumbent upon the prosecution to show that no such person as Cook existed. Granting his existence, there was, as we have stated, positive evidence that he had no account in the bank, and that appellant forged his name to the check. There being evidence on those points, it was immaterial to the case of the prosecution whether Cook was a myth or not. There was, however, some evidence that he had no existence.

[5] The trial court received in evidence several checks other than the one on which the prosecution was grounded, checks which were admitted by appellant on his cross-examination to have had a similar origin with that one and to have been passed to various persons as it was passed to Freidman and at about the same time. It is claimed that the trial court erred in admitting these other checks, but they were properly receivable to show system and guilty intent. People v. Weir, 30 Cal. App. 766, 159 Pac. 442; People v. Berecovitz, 163 Cal. 636, 126 Pac. 479, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 667.

[6] It is contended that appellant was forced by the trial court to testify against himself. The occurrence out of which it is sought to make so much was after appellant had taken the stand in his own defense; his direct examination having been concluded just preceding the noon recess. Upon the reconvening of court appellant expressed a desire not to resume the stand at once, but to await the coming into court of another person, not his counsel. At this juncture, and after some protest from appellant, the court required him to resume the stand so that the cross-examination might proceed. It is plain to be seen that there was no error in such a course.

[7] Appellant insists that the trial court erred in permitting the sheriff to testify to a conversation between him and appellant without proof that the statements of appellant during the conversation were free and voluntary and were made without fear, intimidation, or promise of benefit. Such matters as these are required to be shown only as a basis for the introduction of a confession coming from one charged with crime, and it was not sought to show a confession by the testimony of the sheriff. His recital merely brought out certain admissions of appellant, not amounting to a confession, and, as well, laid the foundation for the introduction of certain writings admitted by appellant to be in his handwriting, and which were thereafter used as exemplars. There was no error in receiving the sheriff's testimony.

[8, 9] Appellant claims that there was error in the giving of two certain instructions on the subject of temporary insanity, not because the instructions were inherently wrong, but because, as we understand it, there was no such issue presented by the evidence. In this, however, counsel is mistaken. A witness for the people was asked on cross-examination if appellant were not drunk at a time when the witness cashed one of the checks received in evidence for the purpose of showing intent, one of appellant's witnesses testified that appellant was drunk on a certain occasion, and appellant himself swore that the alleged O. D. Cook was plying him with a decoction of vanilla extract and wintergreen at the time when he contends Cook gave him the various checks received in evidence, including the one upon which the charge against him was based. Further, and enough in itself to settle the question now under consideration, the instructions inveighed against were requested by appellant, and were given as submitted by him.

Several other points are presented by appellant, but they are devoid of merit and require no special consideration.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; CRAIG, J.

55 Cal. App. 33

FALLON v. SOCKOLOV et al. (Civ. 4012.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Nov. 1, 1921.)

1. Bankruptcy ☞302(1)—Complaint by trustee to collect assets held sufficient.

In an action by a trustee in bankruptcy to recover property alleged to be assets of the estate, an allegation that claims of creditors had been filed and proved, that there were no assets in the trustee's hands to meet the claims, and that the claims could not be met unless recovery be had, was sufficient against demurrer for not stating that creditors remained unpaid.

2. Pleading ☞124—Answer of wife, claiming ownership of money sued for by husband's trustee in bankruptcy, was a denial of plaintiff's claims.

In an action by a trustee in bankruptcy against the bankrupt and his wife to recover assets of the estate, where the answers of defendants interposed no equitable defense, the answer of the wife alleging facts which presented no other issue than the claim of defendant that she was the owner of the money was only a method of denying plaintiff's claim.

3. Bankruptcy ☞302(4)—Proof of fraud, in action by trustee against bankrupt and wife, admissible, though not pleaded.

In an action by a trustee in bankruptcy against the bankrupt and his wife to recover assets of the estate, proof of fraud may be made at trial without any special pleading of the facts constituting the fraud.

4. Husband and wife ☞264—Evidence sufficient to show that property claimed by wife community property.

In an action by a trustee in bankruptcy to recover from the bankrupt and his wife assets of the estate, evidence held sufficient to show that money was community property of defendants, subject to husband's debts.

5. Appeal and error 761—Objections to refusal of instructions must be designated.

Where objections to the refusal to give instructions are stated without citation of authority or argument, they will not be considered.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; T. I. Fitzpatrick, Judge.

Action by Frank J. Fallon, as trustee of the estate of Joseph Sockolov, bankrupt, against Rose Sockolov and another. From judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Wal J. Tuska, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Brownstone & Goodman, of San Francisco, for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. The plaintiff, as trustee of the estate of Joseph Sockolov, a bankrupt, brought this action to recover of the bankrupt and his wife the sum of $14,000, alleged to be the bankrupt's property and an asset of his estate. Trial was had with a jury, which rendered a verdict in favor of plaintiff. From the judgment entered thereon, defendants have appealed.

The amount in controversy was received by the defendant Rose Sockolov, the wife, from C. A. Hooper & Co., a corporation, and was claimed by her as her separate property. The circumstances attending its receipt by her were as follows: Joseph Sockolov, as contractor and builder, constructed the Chancellor Hotel for the owner, the C. A. Hooper Company. Upon completion of the building Sockolov was unable to pay the materialmen more than 75 per cent. of their claims. Thereafter he did not conduct or engage in any business, and remained unemployed. Defendant Rose Sockolov, wearying of her husband's inactivity, concluded that she had better earn something with which to obtain proper subsistence, and meet the house and family obligations, and pay the debts incurred for the household. She talked the matter over with her husband, with the result that in November, 1916, and at a time when Rose Sockolov knew her husband was insolvent, and unable to pay his creditors, with his full knowledge and consent she borrowed from the C. A. Hooper Company the sum of $25,000, giving her promissory note for that amount. Simultaneously with the execution of the note, and at her direction, there were issued by the Chancellor Hotel Company, in the name of C. A. Hooper & Co., pledgee, certain shares of stock in the hotel company, which stock the C. A. Hooper Company took as security for the payment of the note. In other words,

C. A. Hooper & Co., advanced the money for its purchase and kept the stock as security for the payment of the loan. The hotel was a success, and in October, 1919, C. A. Hooper & Co. offered to buy the stock issued by the hotel company to Mrs. Sockolov. It agreed to cancel the note for $25,000, and pay $14,000 cash in addition, for the stock. After some negotiations with the Hooper Company in which Mrs. Sockolov did not appear, but which were carried on by Joseph Sockolov and an attorney, the note was canceled, and three checks totaling $14,000 were delivered to Joseph Sockolov. He in turn delivered them to his wife. Less than a month thereafter Joseph Sockolov filed his petition in bankruptcy, and in due time the plaintiff brought this action to recover the $14,000 paid by the C. A. Hooper Company in the transaction, upon the ground that the money was the property of Joseph Sockolov, and an asset of the insolvent's estate.

[1] Several contentions are advanced by the appellants in support of the appeal. They contend that the demurrer to the complaint should have been sustained. There is no direct averment that any creditor of Joseph Sockolov remained unpaid at the time of the commencement of this action. There is an allegation that claims of the creditors, amounting to more than $15,000, had been duly filed and proved in the United States court, and that there are no assets in the hands of the trustee with which said claims can be met, and that these claims cannot be paid unless recovery can be had in this action. If it be essential that such fact should be made to appear in the complaint, the allegation noted implies that the claims have not been paid, and was sufficient in the face of the demurrer.

[2] The cause was properly submitted to a jury. The complaint, in substance and effect, stated an ordinary cause of action by way of assumpsit for the direct recovery of a specified sum of money. The answers of the defendants interposed no equitable defense. That of the defendant Rose Sockolov merely alleged a fact which presented no other issue than the claim of the defendant that she was herself the owner of the money, and that her husband was not, which was only another method of denying the plaintiff's claim. Swasey v. Adair, 88 Cal. 179, 182, 25 Pac. 1119.

[3] Fraud on the part of the defendants was not alleged in the complaint. In his opening statement to the jury, counsel for the plaintiff stated that he expected to prove fraud on the part of the defendants in the transaction. Counsel for the defendants objected to the remark, claiming that fraud should have been alleged in order to be a material issue in the case. The objection was properly overruled. In actions such as this, proof of fraud may be made at the trial without any special pleading of the facts constituting the fraud. Minor v. Baldridge, 123 Cal. 187, 190, 55 Pac. 783.

[4] On the merits of the case we think the verdict was correct. There was testimony from which the jury might well infer that the entire transaction, which resulted in the payment of the $14,000, was actually conceived and initiated by Joseph Sockolov himself. If that be not true, there is ample support in the evidence for the conclusion that the scheme was undertaken by Mrs. Sockolov with her husband's full knowledge, acquiescence, and consent, and was, in effect, a transaction of the husband conducted in the wife's name. Whether the profit accruing from the purchase and sale of the hotel company stock was separate or community property was a matter to be determined from the mode in which the property was acquired. Estate of Granniss, 142 Cal. 1, 4, 75 Pac. 324. Any presumption arising in favor of the appellant Rose Sockolov, from the nature of the transaction, that the stock purchased from the hotel company, and the profit on the investment, constituted separate property, was but a rebuttable presumption, to be disputed, and overthrown by other evidence in the case. Whether or not it was dispelled and overcome by other testimony was a question the solution of which rested solely with the jury. Volquards v. Myers, 23 Cal. App. 500, 504, 138 Pac. 963. The weight to be given to the testimony of the two defendants, that Sockolov said to his wife that, if she "got something" out of the transaction with the Hooper Company, she might "keep it" herself, was also a matter for the jury to determine. From the facts and circumstances laid before it, the jury has determined that the $14,000 accruing as profit in the transaction with the C. A. Hooper Company was not the separate property of Mrs. Sockolov. Consequently it was community property of the appellants, and, by reason of the insolvency proceedings, became a part of the bankrupt husband's estate, which the respondent, as trustee in bankruptcy, had the right to recover.

[5] Appellants assert that the trial court erred in refusing to give certain instructions. The objections are stated without citation of authority, or argument. Points so presented will not be considered. What we have already said disposes of all other contentions made in support of the appeal.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; RICHARDS, J.

55 Cal. App. 17

HOOPER v. LOS ANGELES VALVE & FITTING CO. (Civ. 3758.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Nov. 1, 1921. As Modified, Nov. 5, 1921.)

1. Landlord and tenant ⇐201—Appraisal agreement held to require appraisers to hear evidence.

Under a contract appointing appraisers "to fix a time for hearing proofs" by the parties of the value of the property as a basis for determining the rent, and providing that "when said appraisers hear the evidence" their agreement should be binding, etc., it was the intention of the parties, not that the appraisers should fix the value on their opinion, but that they should afford the parties an opportunity to offer evidence.

2. Trial ⇐396(2)—Findings held unresponsive to issue as to whether party to agreement had notice of hearing or was given opportunity to present evidence.

In an action to set aside an award and appraisal as to rent on the ground plaintiff was not notified of meetings and had no opportunity to be present to present evidence, findings of the court that the appraisers met and received and considered evidence submitted by the parties held not responsive; there being nothing in the findings showing that notice was given plaintiff of time fixed for such hearing, or that she was afforded an opportunity to present evidence.

3. Landlord and tenant ⇐201—Findings that appraisers received and considered evidence held not supported by evidence.

In an action to set aside an award and appraisal on the ground plaintiff was not notified of the time fixed for meetings of the appraisers and was given no opportunity to present evidence, the court's findings that the appraisers met and received and considered evidence submitted by the parties held not supported by the evidence.

4. Appeal and error ⇐1071(1)—Error in findings that appraisers heard evidence not harmless because court in action to set aside award heard evidence.

Where the parties to a lease agreed to the appointment of appraisers "to fix a time for hearing proofs" by the parties of the value of the property, as a basis for the determination of the rent, and that, "when said appraisers hear the evidence," their agreement should be binding on the parties, error in the court's findings, in an action to set aside the appraisers' award, that they met and received and considered evidence, was not rendered harmless because the court heard testimony, even though the lease itself provided for the appointment of appraisers to fix the valuation in accordance with their own opinion and judgment, without taking evidence, where the court found merely that the sum fixed by the appraisers was a fair, just, and equitable valuation; the parties, having agreed on a method of ascertaining the value, being bound thereby and not entitled in lieu thereof to maintain an action to have the court fix the value.

5. Landlord and tenant — 201—Under lease held that appraisers could fix value without notice of hearing or receiving parties' evidence.

Under a lease providing for the ascertainment of the value of the property, as a basis for determining the rent, by appraisers, who, if they could not agree, should select a third, the decision of the majority of whom should rule, the appraisers may fix the value in accordance with their own opinion and judgment, without notice of the hearing and without affording to either party the privilege of offering evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Russ Avery, Judge.

Action by Jennie B. Hooper against the Los Angeles Valve & Fitting Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Scarborough & Bowen, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Wm. B. Ogden, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Defendant, as a tenant of plaintiff under a lease, occupied a tract of land upon an agreement to pay in quarterly installments as rental therefor, during a period of five years from January 1, 1917, a sum equivalent to 5 per cent. of its appraised value. For the purpose of having such value determined, the parties, on January 2, 1917, executed a contract wherein, after reciting the execution of the lease under which defendant held possession of the property and the fact that it provided for an appraisement to be made, it was agreed that—

"Whereas said parties are desirous of appointing appraisers to make the appraisement provided for under the terms of said lease: Now, therefore, it is agreed that the lessors have and do hereby appoint Guy S. Garner as appraiser for the lessors, and Leo V. Youngworth as appraiser for the lessee under said lease, and they are hereby empowered to proceed to fix a time for hearing proofs by the respective parties in accordance with said lease as to the value of the property covered by the same, and when said appraisers hear the evidence produced by the respective parties hereto, if they can agree upon the value of said property, their agreement shall be binding upon, and the parties hereto agree to abide by the same. If, however, they cannot agree, then they are to select a third appraiser, as in said lease provided, and the decision of two of said appraisers shall be binding upon the parties hereto."

The two appraisers named in the contract were unable to agree upon a valuation of the property, and thereupon they, as authorized to do, appointed H. J. Lelande as a third appraiser; and thereafter Lelande and Young-worth, under date of April 11, 1917, joined in an appraisement of the land at the sum of $35,531.25. This action was brought to annul and set aside the award and appraisement so made and to have the court fix the value of the land in question; the ground therefor being that in the consideration and determination of the question submitted to the appraisers no meetings were held upon any notice to plaintiff thereof and no opportunity was given her to be present at any hearing of the matter submitted for determination, nor was she given an opportunity to present any testimony or evidence to any of them at any time, at a meeting or otherwise, touching the question as to the value of said property.

Upon trial of the case the court made findings upon which, as a conclusion of law, it found that plaintiff was not entitled to any relief, and entered judgment in favor of defendant, from which plaintiff has appealed.

[1] The submission was made upon terms and conditions contained in the instrument wherein Garner and Youngworth were appointed as appraisers. It was clearly the intent of the parties, as expressed therein, that the two persons named should fix a time for the hearing of proof submitted by plaintiff and defendant touching the value of the property, which implied that notice should be given of the time when and place where such meeting would be held for such purpose in order that they might be present and present such evidence as they deemed proper. The lease in express terms provided that—

"When said appraisers hear the evidence produced by the respective parties hereto, if they can agree upon the value of said property, their agreement shall be binding upon, and the parties hereto agree to be bound by, the same. If, however, they cannot agree, then they are to select a third appraiser, * * * and the decision of two of said appraisers shall be binding upon the parties hereto."

Under this provision it was clearly the duty of Garner and Youngworth, and as a prerequisite condition of appointing a third appraiser, to hear the evidence produced by the parties, and, if upon a consideration thereof they were unable to agree, to then appoint a third appraiser. They were not authorized to make such appointment in the absence of a hearing, with notice to the parties, thus giving them an opportunity to submit evidence as to the value of the property, and if upon such evidence, if any, so submitted, they were unable to agree, they were authorized to appoint a third appraiser, after which, as provided by the agreement, the three appraisers, or at least a majority of them, should have fixed a time and place, with notice thereof given to the parties, for a hearing at which evidence might be produced, upon a consideration of which the value of the property should be fixed. As we construe the agreement, it was not the intent of the parties, as expressed therein, that the appraisers should fix the value in accordance with their own opinion and judgment. (M. E. Church v. Seitz, 74 Cal. 287, 15 Pac. 839), but that they should "afford the parties a hearing, and an opportunity to offer evidence." Dore v. Southern Pac. Co., 163 Cal. 182, 124 Pac. 817.

[2] Upon this question the court found:

"That it is not true that neither said Garner nor said Youngworth prior to the appointment of said Harry J. Lelande failed or refused to meet for the purpose of fixing said valuation, or failed to receive and consider evidence submitted by the respective parties, but that, on the contrary, said Garner and said Youngworth did meet for the purpose of fixing said valuation and did receive and consider evidence submitted by the respective parties."

And further found:

"That it is not true that at no time did said Garner nor said Youngworth nor said Lelande, or all or any of them, meet for the purpose of hearing or considering evidence for the purpose of fixing the value of said property, but, on the contrary, said meetings were so held for the said purpose; * * * that in fixing said valuation said appraisers considered the evidence as to values submitted by the respective parties."

[3] Appellant not only challenges the findings so made for the reason that they are not responsive to the issue, but claims that if so construed they are not justified by the evidence. In our opinion, both contentions should be sustained. There is nothing in the findings showing that notice was ever at any time given to plaintiff of the time fixed for the hearing or that she was afforded an opportunity to present evidence as to the value of the property. Indeed, the findings are wholly consistent with the fact that the hearings were had in the absence of plaintiff, or any opportunity given her to be present or to present any testimony or evidence in opposition to that offered by defendant.

The testimony of Mr. Garner is that on March 19th, after a number of futile efforts on the part of himself and Mr. Youngworth, the latter said to him that "he didn't want a meeting to hear testimony and wanted to have a third appraiser appointed"; and that he and Mr. Youngworth never at any time held a meeting to take testimony relative to the value of the property; that upon Mr. Youngworth's statement that he did not need any testimony, he (Garner) insisted upon having a third appraiser appointed and then have a meeting at which the parties, if they desired, might ask any questions of the witnesses testifying. The testimony of plaintiff is that she was not present or represented at any meeting, and, although she requested that she be permitted to present evidence as to the value of the property, she was denied opportunity so to do and never had notice of any meeting called for that purpose either before or after appointment of the third appraiser. The testimony of Mr. Youngworth is that he visited the property and made inquiries of a number of persons as to the value of the same, and reported the result of his investigation and exchanged notes with the other appraisers. This was before the appointment of Lelande, after whose appointment it was agreed by himself and Garner that each of them should furnish Lelande with the data which they had and each present to him his side of the case. He further testified that, while they held meetings, no witnesses were examined and nothing considered except statements as to the data obtained by their personal investigations; that he was uncertain as to whether notice of any meeting was given to plaintiff, but "inclined to believe we agreed we would communicate with our principals and keep them advised of our proceedings. * * * I wouldn't say that positively, but I think that was the case." Lelande's testimony is to the effect that the plaintiff and defendant were never present at any hearing by the three appraisers; that the recital in the award to the effect that the referees proceeded to hear the testimony of the respective parties relative to the value of the property is not true, in that no testimony was taken; that Youngworth and Garner left the matter entirely in his hands; and while it appears that he met and talked with them casually in regard to the matter, no meetings were held after his appointment of which notice was given to either party and an opportunity afforded for presenting evidence. Other than as to proceedings had and taken in appraising the property in January, 1912, which, of course, furnished no rule as to the value of the property five years later, there is no evidence on the part of defendant controverting that quoted. The findings are not only insufficient, but, as made, they are not supported by the evidence.

[4] Conceding this to be true, respondent insists that the error is harmless, for the reason that the court heard testimony touching the question and upon which it fixed the value independently of any action on the part of the appraisers. While it appears that the court did hear evidence as to the value of the property, there is nothing in the findings responsive to such issue, other than a finding by the court to the effect that "said sum of $35,331.25 so fixed by said appraisers was a fair, just, and equitable valuation, and was the value of the property on said date." Conceding that the lease provided for the appointment of appraisers who should fix the value of the property in accordance with their own opinion and judgment, without taking evidence, such provision was, by mutual consent of the parties, modified by the contract wherein they determined upon the method therein provided. Having agreed upon such method of ascertaining the value, the parties, in the absence of an annulment of the contract, or facts relieving them from its operation, such as that the appraisers so appointed refuse to act, were bound thereby and were not entitled, in lieu of such method, to which they had thus given their solemn assent, to maintain an action to have the court fix the value of the property.

[5] If the appraisers refuse to act, then, since the contract is rendered inoperative, the clause in the lease, in the absence of any modification thereof, as here, by mutual agreement prescribes the method for ascertaining the value of the property, viz., "by appraisers selected, one by the lessor and one by the lessee, and if those two cannot agree, they two to select a third, and the decision of the majority shall rule." Under this provision, if not modified, the appraisers, if appointed thereunder, are authorized to fix the value in accordance with their own opinion and judgment, without notice of the hearing and without, unless they so choose, according to either party the privilege of offering evidence upon the question.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

55 Cal. App. 86

NEWELL v. REDONDO WATER CO.
(Civ. 4037.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Nov. 5, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 3, 1922.)

1. Waters and water courses ☞201—Company held not to have dedicated all its water to public use.

Where a company engaged in subdividing, platting, and selling lands in a town site and constructing a system of waterworks furnished water free to persons to whom it contracted to so do in consideration of a conveyance and also to a hotel, flower garden, railway station, and offices owned by itself, the water being furnished from the same system, it had not dedicated all its water to public use.

2. Dedication ☞41—Dedication to public use not presumed.

A dedication of a system of waterworks to the public use is not to be presumed.

3. Waters and water courses ☞201—Dedication held subject to rights under contract.

Where owners of land agreed to sell it for purposes of subdivision on condition that six lots should be reserved to the owners, and that they should be entitled to water for domestic purposes free of charge from any waterworks erected on the premises, and the land was subsequently conveyed by the owners to the purchaser by a deed reciting that they had agreed to convey on certain conditions, any subsequent dedication of the purchasers' water system to the public use was made subject to the terms of the contract.

4. Waters and water courses ☞201—Owner may dedicate part of water supply to public use.

The owner of a water supply can dedicate part of its plant to public use and reserve the remainder for private purposes or private sale.

5. Waters and water courses ☞156(4)—Covenant to furnish water free of charge on lots reserved by vendor held to create easement.

Where purchasers of land for purposes of subdivision agreed that the seller should be entitled to water for domestic purposes free of charge, on lots reserved by them, and the subsequent conveyance of the property provided that it was in fulfillment of an agreement to convey on certain conditions, and the purchasers installed service pipes to such lots and furnished water free of charge for more than 24 years, an easement was created.

6. Waters and water courses ☞156(1)—Contract to furnish water free of charge to vendor on lots reserved held not illegal.

Where purchasers of land for purposes of subdivision agreed to furnish water free of charge to lots reserved by the sellers, and when a deed referring to this agreement was subsequently made the purchaser was using a portion of its water supply on its own property and had reserved an easement in the public streets for that purpose, the contract was valid, and not contrary to law.

7. Evidence ☞444(4)—Contract referring to conveyance may be examined to ascertain conditions.

While a contract to convey, when followed by a conveyance, is merged into the conveyance, which becomes the measure of the rights of the parties, when the conveyance makes special reference to the conditions of the contract and recites that it is made for the purpose of fulfilling the same, it is proper to examine the contract to see what conditions are referred to.

8. Evidence ☞461(2)—Contract of sale held admissible to show intention of parties to deed.

Where a contract for the sale of land for purposes of subdivision provided that the vendor should be entitled to water for domestic purposes for lots reserved by them, and the deed subsequently made provided that it was in fulfillment of an agreement to convey on "certain conditions," the contract was admissible to show the intention of the parties as to the conditions on which the conveyance was made.

9. Evidence ☞461(2)—Subsequent deeds held admissible to show construction by parties.

In a suit to establish a right to water free of charge under a contract of sale providing for the furnishing of water to lots reserved by the vendors, and a subsequent deed providing that it was in fulfillment of an agreement to convey on "certain conditions," subsequent deeds conveying the lots reserved to the vendors and reciting that the conveyance included water rights for domestic purposes free of charge was admissible to show the construction placed on the first deed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis R. Works, Judge.

Action by A. B. Newell against the Redondo Water Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Porter & Sutton, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued in equity to have it adjudged that he was entitled to receive from the defendant, a public service corporation, water for domestic purposes, free of charge, to be used on two certain lots of land in the city of Redondo Beach. The complaint and the amendment thereto alleges that on August 5, 1887, three sisters by the name of Dominguez, owners of a tract of 1,000 acres, situated in what is now Redondo Beach, entered into an agreement with two parties by the name of Silent and McFarland to sell the land to them for the purpose of subdividing, platting, and offering the land for sale to the public. One of the conditions of the agreement was that 6 acres in one-acre lots should be reserved to the owners, which "shall be entitled to water for domestic purposes (not to exceed one residence for each acre lot) free of charge from any waterworks which may be erected upon said premises." This agreement was duly recorded and thereafter, on September 29, 1890, the said owners conveyed the land to the Redondo Beach Company, the assignees of Silent and McFarland, "in fulfillment of an agreement entered into on the 5th day of August, 1887, * * * whereby the parties of the first part to said agreement agreed to convey upon certain conditions" the land described.

Following this deed and on June 10, 1891, the Redondo Beach Company conveyed back to one of the original owners and her husband two separate tracts which she had selected under her reservation in the contract. This deed expressly recited that it included "two water rights for domestic purposes free of charge." Similar deeds were made to the other sisters or their representatives, one in November, 1890, and the other in July, 1892. Plaintiff is the successor in interest of Susana D. Dominguez de del Amo under the deed of June 10, 1891, above mentioned.

The parties stipulated that the Redondo Beach Company entered into possession of the premises under its deed of 1890, recorded a map of the town site it had laid out, sold lots therein, and commenced the development of a water supply with which it furnished water to the lot owners. In February, 1899, the company sold its property to the Redondo Improvement Company, which in September, 1908, conveyed to the defendant Redondo Water Company. The complaint alleges, and it is not denied, that shortly after the conveyance of June, 1891, the defendant's predecessor, the Redondo Beach Company, installed two service pipes, one running to each of the two tracts conveyed by said deed. The parties stipulated that from that date until November, 1915, said company and its successors continuously furnished water free of charge to said premises; that the use of such water by plaintiff and his predecessors was open, notorious, peaceable, adverse and under claim of right; and that in November, 1915, the defendant shut off the water from said premises and refused to furnish any water for use on the premises unless plaintiff paid therefor the rates established by the State Railroad Commission.

There is no controversy as to the facts related above, but the defendant, by its answer and by objections made at the trial, put in issue the relevancy and legal effect of the agreement of 1887 and the subsequent reconveyances to the original owners. It was also alleged in the answer that prior to the date of the deed to plaintiff's predecessor the defendant was a public utility corporation and had dedicated all its water system to the public. The real issue between the parties is whether plaintiff has obtained the right to have water delivered to him free of charge, or whether he must pay the rates fixed by the Railroad Commission to be charged the customers of the defendant company.

The case was tried on an agreed statement of facts and upon additional evidence offered by plaintiff in support of the amendment to his complaint. Judgment went for defendant and plaintiff appeals.

[1-4] The trial court found that prior to the year 1891 the Redondo Beach Company constructed a system of waterworks in the town site (now city) of Redondo Beach, and that all its property used in connection with the water supply was devoted and dedicated to public use in the supplying of water to the inhabitants of said town site as a public utility. This finding is not supported by the evidence, which is that during all this time the company also furnished water to appellant and his predecessors free of charge and also to the hotel, flower garden, railway station, and offices owned by itself and successor. By the agreed statement of facts it is admitted this water was so furnished from the same system, and it necessarily follows that the company had not dedicated all the water to the public use. In fact, the evidence does not show when any of the system was dedicated to public use. Such dedication is not to be presumed. Allen v. Railroad Commission, 179 Cal. 6885, 175 Pac. 466, 3 A. L. R. 249. It is clear that no dedication was made until after the deed to the company in 1890 which referred to the agreement of 1887. By this agreement the owners retained the right to select six lots with perpetual water rights after the company platted the entire tract. Any dedication to the public was made subject to the terms of that contract. In recognition of this obligation and to make certain its right to continue the private distribution of water, the company, in dedicating its town site, expressly reserved the right to lay water pipes in the public streets—a reservation which would have been unnecessary if the entire water system had been dedicated to public use. That the owner of a water supply can dedicate part of its plant to public use and reserve the remainder for private purposes or private sale has been settled by the decisions. Del Mar Water, etc., Co. v. Eshleman, 167 Cal. 666, 681, 140 Pac. 591, 948; Allen v. Railroad Commission, 179 Cal. 68, 82, 175 Pac. 466, 3 A. L. R. 249.

[5] Appellant attacks the finding that he is not the owner of any easement or right to be supplied with water as not supported by the evidence. The finding covers the main issues raised under appellant's theory of the case. It is alleged in the complaint, and not denied, that in 1891 the Redondo Beach Company conveyed the lots of land to appellant's predecessor, and that shortly after said deed was made the grantor installed two service pipes, one running to each of said lots, through which water was furnished to appellant and his predecessors free of charge for more than 24 years. The parties stipulated that throughout that period this water was furnished appellant and his predecessors free of charge, and that it was so used on the premises openly, notoriously, peaceably, and uninterruptedly. It was also stipulated that the principal business of the Redondo Beach Company was "subdividing, improving, and selling" its lands in the town site. Now a transfer of real property containing a covenant to furnish water free to the land conveyed creates an easement in favor of the grantee upon the land and upon the water system of the grantor. Stanislaus Water Co. v. Bachman, 152 Cal. 716, 724, 93 Pac. 858, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 359; Palermo L. & W. Co. v. Railroad Commission, 173 Cal. 380, 386, 160 Pac. 228; Allen v. Railroad Commission, 179 Cal. 68, 73, 175 Pac. 466, 3 A. L. R. 249. Unless therefore, the Redondo Beach Company was prohibited by law from making the grant, it would necessarily follow that an easement was created which has come down to appellant.

[6] In this connection respondent argues that the Redondo Beach Company could not create an easement, because it was a public utility corporation and, as such, was required to serve all consumers of water on equal terms. Putting it in another way, the argument is that, if the corporation at the time of entering into the contract was a public service corporation, the contract was subject to modification at the instance of the Railroad Commission. S. P. Co. v. Spring Valley Water Co., 173 Cal. 291, 298, 159 Pac. 865, L. R. A. 1917E, 680; Limtoneira Co. v. Railroad Commission, 174 Cal. 232, 238, 162 Pac. 1033. This proposition is sound when applied to a public utility which has dedicated its entire plant to the service of the public. Allen v. Railroad Commission, 179 Cal. 68, 80, 175 Pac. 466, 3 A. L. R. 249. But the rule has never been applied to a land-selling corporation which furnishes water to some of its grantees as an incident to its main business, reserving a portion of its supply for private use or sale. It is undisputed that when the deed was made the company was using a portion of its water supply upon its own property and had reserved an easement in the public streets for that purpose. There was nothing to prevent it from making a valid contract to divert a portion of such water to private sale or to free distribution. Thus the contract was good when made and the easement attached as of that date.

[7, 8] The only other point requiring consideration is the question of the admissibility of the evidence of the contract of 1887 and the subsequent deeds to the original owners. This evidence was offered for the purpose of showing the ambiguity in the deed of 1890, which recited that it was made in fulfillment of the contract of 1887 by which the grantors agreed to convey "upon certain conditions." It is true that when a contract to convey is followed by a conveyance the terms of the contract are merged into the conveyance and the latter becomes the measure of the rights of the parties. Bryan v. Swain, 56 Cal. 616, 617. But, when the conveyance makes special reference to the conditions of the contract and recites that it is made for the purpose of fulfilling the same, it is proper to examine the contract to see what conditions are referred to. But in any event the contract gave the right to select the lots after the land had been deeded to the company and platted for sale. This contract was valid when made because the company was not then a public utility. The subsequent deeds to the original owners were merely evidence of the company's recognition of its contractual obligation. The original contract was admissible to show the intention of the parties.

[9] The evidence relating to the execution of the deeds to the sisters of appellant's predecessor was of importance for the purpose of showing that the construction placed upon the deed of 1890 by respondent was the same as that contended for by appellant and acquiesced in for more than 24 years. This evidence might properly have been received. Judgment reversed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

55 Cal. App. 50

GASH v. HAMMER et al. (Civ. 3773.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1. California. Nov. 2, 1921.)

1. Evidence ⇐450(8)—Contract held ambiguous so as to authorize evidence as to variety sold.

Where a contract for the sale of cranberry beans, though it did not use the precise phrase "California cranberry beans," referred to such beans when read as a whole, and there was evidence that there were two varieties of beans grown in California, one of which was definitely known in the market as the California cranberry bean, the contract was ambiguous, and parol evidence was admissible to show that the variety known in the market was the one intended.

2. Customs and usages ⇐10—Contract held governed by New York custom.

A contract for the sale of California cranberry beans executed in New York, to be performed by the seller by delivery of the beans to ship in California, and by the buyer by payment of draft with bill of lading attached in New York, was to be performed in New York, so that evidence as to the kind of bean understood in the New York market by the term used in the contract was admissible to explain the contract's meaning.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George E. Crothers, Judge.

Action by Abraham Gash against Frank G. Hammer and another, copartners doing business under the firm name and style of Hammer & Co., to recover damages for breach of contract. Judgment for the plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

F. M. Parcels, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Robert B. Gaylord, of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This action is one in which the plaintiff seeks to recover the sum of $1,610, damages for the alleged breach of a written contract between the parties hereto for the sale and delivery by the defendants to plaintiff of a carload of California cranberry beans. The complaint alleges that on the 2d day of August, 1913, at the city of New York, the plaintiff and the defendants entered into a written contract whereby said defendants agreed to sell and deliver and said plaintiff agreed to purchase a carload containing 40,000 pounds of new crop choice re-cleaned California cranberry beans at a price of $4.25 net per 100 pounds delivered free on board steamer at San Francisco, Cal., to be shipped thence to New York and to be paid for by drafts at 10 days' sight; that prior to the time of arrival of said beans at New York and prior to the time when said plaintiff could have had an opportunity to examine said beans the draft for their purchase price arrived and was paid by the plaintiff; that when said consignment of beans arrived at New York in the month of December, 1913, and were examined by plaintiff, it was found that said beans were not of the kind and quality called for in said contract, but were in fact Manchurian beans of inferior quality. Plaintiff therefore rejected the same, and notified defendants of such rejection, and demanded that the controversy thus arising between the parties be settled by arbitration as in said agreement provided, but the said defendants have refused to arbitrate said controversy or to respond to the demand of plaintiff for reimbursement of the damages sustained by the defendants' breach of their agreement.

The defendants in their answer expressly admitted the truth of the paragraph in the plaintiff's complaint wherein it was alleged that the defendants agreed to sell and deliver to said plaintiff a carload containing about 40,000 pounds of California cranberry beans; but they denied the breach of said agreement, and, on the other hand, alleged that in the month of December, 1913, they shipped to the plaintiff one carload of Manchurian beans, which were choice, re-cleaned cranberry beans grown in California, and were both of the quality and variety specified and called for in said contract and were in merchantable condition. The defendants further denied that they refused to arbitrate any controversy between themselves and the plaintiff as to the kind or quality of said beans, and denied that the plaintiff suffered any damages whatsoever.

The cause came to trial upon the issues thus presented, and upon its submission the trial court made and filed its findings of fact, wherein it was found that all of the allegations of the plaintiff's complaint as to the making, terms, and breach of the contract in question were true. Upon the question of damages the court found that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the sum of $1,395.91, with interest thereon from January 31, 1914, to date, and accordingly rendered judgment for the aggregate sum of $2,037.80. The defendants prosecute this appeal from said judgment.

The sum of the contentions of the appellants herein is that the evidence does not sustain the findings of the trial court as to any breach on their part of the contract in question.

This contention is based upon the proposition that by the terms of their said contract they were not required to deliver to the plaintiff beans of any other kind or quality than cranberry beans grown in California, and that the so-called Manchurian beans so delivered by them in fulfillment of their said contract were cranberry beans grown in California of the merchantable quality required by their said contract.

Much evidence was adduced upon the trial upon the question as to what was meant by the term "California cranberry beans," which, according to the averments of the complaint and admissions of the answer, the defendants had agreed to sell and deliver. A fair résumé of this evidence shows the following to be the facts upon which the findings of the trial court were based: For some years prior to the year 1913 there had been grown in California a species of cranberry beans the seed of which had originally come from Italy, where the bean was known as Italian or Roman bean. This type of bean had improved under cultivation in California and had acquired an established reputation in the New York market under the name of "California cranberry bean." During the seeding season of 1912-1913 in California growers had found it difficult to procure the seed of this particular species of bean, and accordingly one George Shima, a California bean grower upon a large scale, had imported from Manchuria seed of a cranberry bean known as the Manchurian bean, and had grown therefrom extensively and during the growing season of 1913 cranberry beans, which he in turn had transferred to the defendants herein for sale in the Eastern market. These Manchurian cranberry beans are a smaller, rounder bean than the California cranberry bean developed from the Italian stock. It is unquestioned that, if the contract between the parties hereto contemplated by its terms the sale and delivery of the particular kind and quality of bean known as "California cranberry beans," it was breached by the defendants in their attempt to supply the plaintiff with Manchurian cranberry beans, even though the particular lot transmitted to the plaintiff had been grown in California.

Upon the trial of the cause, the plaintiff in the first instance relied upon the express averments of his complaint to the effect that the defendants had contracted to sell and deliver to him California cranberry beans and upon the defendants' express admission of the truth of said averment. He therefore objected to the admission in evidence of the contract itself upon the ground that it responded to no issue in the case. The contract, however, was admitted in evidence. When its terms are examined, it is disclosed that in the main body of the contract it is recited that the buyer has bought and the seller sold "the qualities and varieties of California beans * * * named on reverse side." On the reverse side of the contract, under the heading "Description," are these words: "One carload new crop re-cleaned cranberry beans." It thus appears that the specific phrase "California Cranberry beans" is not used in the contract; and the defendants therefore upon the trial urged that they were only bound under said contract to furnish the plaintiff with any species of cranberry bean grown in California, and that the Manchurian beans grown by said Shima in California during the year 1913 sufficiently responded to the requirements of said contract. The plaintiff thereupon offered certain evidence in explanation of the terms of said contract tending to show that the only California-grown cranberry bean known to the New York market prior to or during the year 1913 was the "California cranberry bean" of Italian origin, and that hence the plaintiff must be held to have contracted with reference to this particular kind and quality of bean. The defendants objected to this evidence upon the ground that it was inadmissible to explain the meaning of the contract, which was already sufficiently clear. The trial court admitted this evidence, and in accordance therewith gave to the contract the interpretation of which the appellants complain.

[1] We are of the opinion that in so doing the trial court committed no error; for, while it is true that the contract between the parties does not contain the precise phrase "California cranberry bean," it does refer when read as a whole to a California cranberry bean; and since it had appeared in evidence that there were two varieties of beans being grown in California during 1913, one of which was definitely known to the eastern market as the "California cranberry bean," the contract was thereby rendered uncertain as to which particular variety of cranberry bean was within the intentment of the parties to this contract at the time and place when it was made. This being so, the court was entitled to have recourse to oral evidence to clear up this uncertainty.

[2] The appellants, however, contend that the evidence which the plaintiff offered under this ruling of the court was inadmissible for the further reason that it only purported to show what kind of bean was known to the New York market and to the plaintiff herein as a California cranberry bean, and that this evidence was immaterial and inadmissible, since the contract must be interpreted by the knowledge and usage of the place where it was to be performed, which they contend was California.

We cannot agree with this latter contention. The contract was made in New York and was to be performed there on the plaintiff's part when, upon his receipt thereof of the shipping documents, he was to honor the draft drawn upon him for the purchase price.

The mere fact that the carload of beans was to be placed upon the steamer at San Francisco does not of itself show that the contract was to be there performed, since the defendants retained full control of the shipping documents until such time as they were presented with the draft on the buyer in New York and were to be delivered upon the payment of said draft. The latter place was therefore the place where this contract was to be performed; and, this being so, the trial court was entitled to take the offered evidence for the purpose of relieving said contract of its uncertainty and of carrying into effect the intentment of the parties as explained by the knowledge and usages of the place where said contract was both made and to be performed.

No other material questions being presented upon this appeal, the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

54 Cal. App. 744

JONES v. UNITED RAILROADS OF SAN FRANCISCO. (Civ. 3962.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Oct. 31, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 29, 1921.)

1. Damages ⇨130(3)—Verdict for $405, in excess of lost earnings and expenditures, for injuries to back, head, and elbow, not excessive.

Where a woman 73 years old, whose back, head, and right elbow were injured as she was alighting from a street car, was under a physician's care for several weeks, and confined to her bed for two months, suffered intensely from pain in her back and head, and was unable to walk without staggering, or to do any work, unable to sleep, had lost her appetite, and had given up hope of permanent recovery, a verdict for $2,500, of which $2,095 represented actual loss of earnings and nurse's and physician's bills, was not excessive.

2. Carriers ⇨303(5)—Passenger in act of alighting entitled to assume she would be given reasonable time.

Where a street car conductor signaled the car to stop, and it was at a complete standstill, and plaintiff's daughter had alighted and was waiting to assist her, and plaintiff was in the act of stepping from the car, she had a right to assume that a reasonable time would be given her to alight, and that the conductor before starting the car would see that no passenger was alighting, though she had not notified the conductor of her intention to alight.

3. Trial ⇨191(9)—Instruction, assuming passenger started to alight after signal to start, properly refused.

Where plaintiff and several other witnesses, including a number of disinterested witnesses, testified that plaintiff had started to get off a street car before the conductor gave the signal to start, and the conductor testified merely that everything was clear, and that he did not see plaintiff in the act of alighting, an instruction, assuming that plaintiff started to get off the car after the signal to go ahead was given, was properly refused.

4. Appeal and error ⇨1064(2)—Instruction, erroneously assuming plaintiff was one of the passengers for whom the conductor stopped car, held not prejudicial.

Though an instruction, that it was the duty of a common carrier, after stopping its car to enable passengers to alight, to know before starting the car whether "such passengers" were in a position to be injured by the starting of the car, and that it would be negligence to start the car suddenly and injure a passenger, was open to some criticism, where the passenger injured was not one of those for whom the conductor stopped the car, the error was not prejudicial.

5. Carriers ⇨303(5) — Conductor bound to see that passenger is not in act of alighting, though car stopped for another passenger.

It is the duty of a street car conductor, after stopping the car to enable a passenger to alight, to know before starting the car again, not only that the passenger upon whose signal the car was stopped is not in the act of alighting, but also to know that no other passenger who may rely upon the signal to stop is in the act of alighting.

6. Carriers ⇨280(1)—Bound to exercise highest degree of care.

A carrier of passengers is required to exercise the highest degree of care in their transportation, and is responsible for injuries received by them while in the course of transportation which might have been avoided by ordinary care.

7. Carriers ⇨316(1)—Presumption of negligence from injury caused in operation of instrumentalities.

When it is shown that an injury to a passenger was caused by the act of the carrier in operating the instrumentalities employed in its business, there is a presumption of negligence, which throws on the carrier the burden of showing that the injury was sustained without any negligence on its part.

8. Damages ⇨216(10)—Instruction construed as authorizing recovery for past mental suffering due to apprehension of future disability.

An instruction that, if the jury should find that by reason of plaintiff's injuries she had, since receiving them, and still did in good faith, suffer from the reasonable apprehension that she would in the future be permanently disabled as the natural and proximate result of such injuries, then such apprehended disability was an element of damages, though ambiguous, fairly meant that there might be a recovery for the mental suffering endured by plaintiff up to the time of the trial due to her reasonable apprehension of permanent disability proximately resulting from the accident.

9. Damages ⚖️53—Mental suffering due to reasonable apprehension of future disability is proper element.

In an action for personal injuries, plaintiff's mental suffering up to the time of the trial, caused by her reasonable apprehension of permanent disability, is a proper element of damage, where the apprehension and the consequent mental suffering is a direct and proximate result of the injury, notwithstanding Civ. Code, § 2283, relative to future damages.

10. Appeal and error ⚖️1068(4)—Instruction as to damages, if erroneous, held harmless in view of the verdict.

An instruction, allowing a recovery for plaintiff's mental suffering due to her reasonable apprehension of permanent disability from the injuries sued for, if erroneous, was harmless under Const. art. 6, § 4½, where the jury allowed only about $400 for plaintiff's mental and physical suffering, nervous and helpless condition, loss of sleep and appetite, loss of capacity to attend to her household duties, or walk about unaided during a period of a year and a half between the accident and the trial, and for her loss or impairment of earning power in the future.

Sturtevant, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by Eliza Jones against the United Railroads of San Francisco. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. M. Abbott and K. W. Cannon, both of San Francisco (Ivores R. Dains, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

William P. Hubbard, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an action for damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant in negligently starting one of its cars after the car had stopped to allow passengers to alight therefrom. By the verdict of a jury, plaintiff was awarded $2,500 damages, and from the judgment rendered thereon, the defendant appeals.

Appellant excepts to certain instructions given and to the refusal of the court to give others offered, and also contends that the damages are excessive.

Plaintiff is 73 years of age and at the time of the accident was a seamstress, earning $25 to $30 a week. She lived with her married daughter, Mrs. Holman, on Hyde street near Clay, in San Francisco. On the afternoon of May 26, 1919, in company with her daughter, she boarded an east-bound Clay street cable car at Sacramento and Fillmore streets. The car had an inclosed section in the middle, with open portions at each end. A long seat on each side of the open section is reached directly from the street by running boards. The open sections of the car have wooden uprights, to which are attached iron hand bars. Plaintiff took a seat on the left rear portion of the open section, and her daughter sat beside her. Mrs. Holman, immediately before reaching Hyde street, tried to attract the attention of the conductor to inform him that she wished to get off the car at Hyde street, but failed to catch his eye because he was in the front portion of the car. However, the conductor did give the signal to stop and the car came to a complete stop at Hyde street to allow some passengers to get on and others to get off the car. After the car stopped, Mrs. Holman stepped off the car onto the ground, and reached up and took hold of plaintiff's right hand to assist her to alight. With her left hand, plaintiff took hold of the rear stanchion, and raised herself to her feet. She was in the act of stepping down when the car started. The starting of the car caused plaintiff's body to be swung around from this unstable position so that she faced the rear of the car. Her hand or arm caught between the iron hand bar and the wooden stanchion, and thus held, she was dragged across Hyde street, until a jolt of the car loosened her from this position and she fell backward upon the pavement. She was assisted to her residence, which was a short distance from the place where the accident occurred, and was put to bed by her daughter. A physician was called to treat her. For several days she was in a stupor. Her back, head, and right elbow were injured, and she was under a physician's care for several weeks, and was confined to her bed for over two months.

[1] Since the accident, according to plaintiff's testimony, she has suffered intensely from pain in her back and head, from a sensation of wrenching and pulling on the nerves, has been unable to walk even about a room without staggering or to do any work. She has been unable to sleep well, has lost her appetite, and has given up hope of any permanent recovery. Her physicians attributed her condition at the time of the trial to shock and nervous symptoms due to the accident, and expressed the opinion that she would never be much better. Plaintiff testified that prior to the accident, she was in perfect health, and had not required the services of a doctor for 30 years.

Under these facts, we think it cannot be said that the damages are excessive. It is not challenged in the record that plaintiff was earning from $25 to $30 a week, immediately prior to the accident, and had been unable to do any work since. The actual loss of money from her business, at the time of the trial, estimated at $25 a week, amounted to $1,950, to which must be added the nurse's fee of $30 and a physician's bill of $115. Something is allowable for physical and mental suffering out of the $2,500 judgment.

[2] Three instructions offered by defendant were refused. The gist of two of the instructions so offered is that the carrier is not liable if the passenger does not notify the conductor of her desire to leave the car, nor is it liable if, when the car stops for a reasonable time, the passenger has not previously nor does not then signify to the conductor her intention of alighting, and the conductor does not actually see her in the act of alighting. In the instant case it appears without contradiction that the conductor did give the signal to stop, and that the car was at a complete standstill before plaintiff made any attempt to get off the car. The car being at a standstill, Mrs. Holman having alighted safely and remained standing with her hand outstretched to assist the plaintiff, and plaintiff being in the act of stepping down from the car, she had a right to assume that a reasonable time would be given her to alight, and that the conductor, before starting the car, would see that no passenger was in the act of alighting.

In the case of Hoffman v. Pacific Electric Co. et al., 188 Pac. 597, it is said:

"It is the law in this state that carriers of passengers upon railways owe to such passengers the highest degree of care, and this degree of care would require of such carriers, especially upon street cars operated in cities, that whenever such cars come to a stop, whether at regular stopping places or not, if such points of stoppage are such that passengers might properly and conveniently alight, it would become the duty of those in charge of the car to advise themselves that such passengers were not attempting to alight from their said car at such point of stoppage before again starting the car, and a neglect of this duty would render their principal liable. The following authorities fully support this view: Carr v. Eel River, etc., R. R. Co., 98 Cal. 366, 33 Pac. 213, 21 L. R. A. 354; Raub v. Los Angeles, etc., Ry. Co., 103 Cal. 473, 37 Pac. 374; West Chicago St. R. R. Co. v. Manning, 170 Ill. 417, 48 N. E. 958.

It is clear, in the light of the above authorities, that the instructions offered by defendant on this question were improper and were rightly refused. The case of Dougherty v. Union Traction Co., 23 Cal. App. 17, 136 Pac. 722, relied upon by appellant in this connection, is not in point here. It is there stated to be the duty of a passenger "before attempting to leave a moving car or when preparing to do so, to notify the conductor in some proper manner of their desire to alight." In that case, the plaintiff supposed the car was going to stop at the next crossing because it had slackened its speed, and, acting upon this supposition without any warning to the conductor, she moved to a position of peril, and was thrown to the ground by a sudden lurch of the car. It is apparent that the facts in the present case clearly differentiate it from the Dougherty Case, supra, and bring it within the rule of the case of Hoffman v. Pac. Electric Co., supra.

[3] The other instruction offered by the defendant assumed a fact not in evidence, viz.: That the plaintiff started to get off the car after the signal was given by the conductor to go ahead. Plaintiff, her daughter, and four apparently disinterested witnesses testified that plaintiff had started to get off the car before the conductor gave the signal to start the car. Nor did the conductor, nor any one else testifying for the defendant, say that the plaintiff started to alight from the car after the signal had been given to start. All the conductor said was that "everything was clear," and that he saw no sign whatever of any other woman than Mrs. Holman rise to get off. There is nothing in the record to warrant the assertion that plaintiff started to leave the car after the conductor had given the signal for the gripman to go ahead.

Appellant contends that because the conductor stated that he did not see the plaintiff in the act of alighting at the time he gave the signal to start the car the jury had a right to infer that plaintiff started to leave the car after the signal was given. In the first place the negation of the conductor is not coextensive with the statements sought to be negated. The clear, positive testimony of several persons was to the effect that the plaintiff started to leave the car while it was at a standstill, and that the car started while she was in the act of alighting. The conductor then testified that he did not see the plaintiff in the act of alighting when he gave the signal to go ahead, non constat that she was not actually in the act of alighting. We are therefore of the opinion that the record does not show a substantial conflict in the evidence upon this question.

[4, 5] Appellant objects to the giving of the following instruction:

"It is the duty of a common carrier, after having stopped its car to enable passengers to alight, to know before starting up the car again whether such passengers in the act of attempting to get off are in a position to be injured by the starting up of the car before such passenger can alight, and it would be negligence to start the car under such circumstances suddenly, and thereby injure the passenger."

An instruction substantially the same as this one was given in the case of Cody v. Market St. Ry. Co., 148 Cal. 90, 82 Pac. 666, and it was approved by our Supreme Court. The difference between the instruction there given and the one above quoted is that in the instruction in the instant case there was added the word "such" before "passengers." Appellant objects to the addition of this word, asserting that in this form the instruction assumes a fact not in evidence; that it does not appear from the record that the conductor stopped the car for the plaintiff (such passenger) to alight, but that he stopped the car for another passenger to alight, and that the insertion of the word "such" gives to the instruction the former implication. We think the instruction is open to the criticism made of it—that it does not precisely cover the facts in evidence, but we are nevertheless of the opinion that under the circumstances the error is not prejudicial to the defendant. This is because it is our view that it is the duty of the conductor, after having stopped the car to enable a passenger to alight, to know, before starting the car again, not only that the passenger upon whose signal the car was stopped was not in the act of alighting, but also to know that no other passengers who may also have relied upon this signal to stop are in the act of alighting. Cody v. Market St. Ry. Co., supra; Hoffman v. Pac. Elec. Co., supra. Under either set of facts, the instruction was proper, and the latter set of facts unquestionably existed in the present case. Therefore no prejudice could have resulted to the defendant from the instruction given. Errors not affecting the result are harmless, and are not cause for reversal. San Jose Elec. R. R. Co. v. Mayne, 83 Cal. 566, 569, 23 Pac. 522; Pac. Rolling Mill Co. v. English, 118 Cal. 123, 130, 50 Pac. 383.

Objection is made to an instruction declaring it to be the duty of a carrier of passengers at its stopping places to stop the car a sufficient length of time to enable passengers desiring to do so to alight therefrom in safety, and to hold the car still during that time; that should the carrier start the car while a passenger is on the steps of the car and in the act of alighting, without giving him sufficient time to alight, and without giving notice or warning to the passenger, whereby the passenger is thrown from the car and injured, then the carrier is guilty of negligence. Appellant contends that the instruction is erroneous in this case because it does not appear that plaintiff notified the conductor that she desired to alight from the car. The objection is not good; it is disposed of by the discussion of this question herein in relation to other instructions. The evidence showed that the car had stopped to allow passengers to alight, and that plaintiff's daughter had alighted and was assisting plaintiff, who was in the act of alighting when the car started. Under such circumstances, defendant was as much obligated to see that plaintiff was not in the act of alighting as it would have been if plaintiff had been the passenger who had actually given the signal to stop. We are unable to see any difference in the obligation upon the carrier between a case where the passenger who has actually given the signal to stop is in the act of alighting and a case where any one of a number of passengers is in the act of alighting at a stopping place, after the car has stopped upon a signal given by one of their number.

[6, 7] Appellant also objects to the giving of the following instruction:

"The carrier of passengers is required to exercise the highest degree of care in their transportation, and is responsible for injuries received by them while in the course of transportation which might have been avoided by ordinary care. Hence, when it is shown that the injury to the passenger was caused by the act of the carrier in operating the instrumentalities employed in its business, there is a presumption of negligence which throws upon the carrier the burden of showing that the injury was sustained without any negligence on its part."

A practically identical instruction was given in the Cody Case, supra, and was declared by the Supreme Court to be a proper one. The same rule had been announced previously, in this state, in the case of McCurrie v. Southern Pacific Co., 122 Cal. 558, at page 561 thereof, 55 Pac. 324. Under these circumstances, citations of authority from other jurisdictions are not in point here.

[8, 9] The last assignment of error made by the appellant is with reference to an instruction upon the question of damages. The instruction complained of is:

"If you should find from the evidence that plaintiff has sustained any injuries because of the negligence of defendant and its employees, and should also find from the evidence that by reason of such injuries plaintiff has, since receiving the same, and does now, in good faith, suffer from the reasonable apprehension that she will in the future be permanently disabled as the natural and proximate result of such injuries, then I instruct you that such apprehended disability is an element of damages you may take into consideration in arriving at the amount of your verdict."

While this instruction is not entirely unambiguous, we are of the opinion that its fair meaning, and the meaning which it conveyed to the jury, is, that the mental suffering endured by the plaintiff up to the time of the trial, due to her reasonable apprehension of permanent disability (which reasonable apprehension was the proximate result of the accident), was an element to be considered by the jury in arriving at its verdict. As so construed, the instruction was proper under the principle of law announced in the case of Boa v. San Francisco-Oakland Terminal Railways, 182 Cal. 93, 187 Pac. 2, where it is said:

"Unquestionably the physical and mental condition of plaintiff resulting from the accident was material, and mental suffering occasioned by any reasonable apprehension of future disability or deformity resulting naturally and proximately from her injury was a proper element to be considered by the jury in assessing the damages."

It was further said that the plaintiff had a right to testify as to her belief at the time of the trial that she would be a permanent invalid.

To the same effect are the cases of Freiburg v. Israel, 187 Pac. 130; Ryan v. Oakland Gas. Co., 21 Cal. App. 14, at page 24 et seq., 130 Pac. 693. It is true that in the Boa Case, supra, certain requirements are laid down as to the necessity of a causal connection between the reasonable apprehension causing the mental suffering and the injury. We think the facts shown in the present case fully meet that requirement and, furthermore, the instruction complained of declared to the jury that it could only take into consideration these matters if they were the "natural and proximate result of such injuries."

Appellant contends that this instruction is violative of section 3283, Civil Code, and of the well-settled rule that future damages, to be recoverable, must be certain. The contention is without merit. The rule embodied in this instruction, as we construe it, is in harmony with the rule of the Boa Case, supra, and with the other cases cited herein upon this question, and as such does not impinge upon the well-settled doctrines invoked by the appellant. Under the instruction, the jury was not permitted to allow damages for any future disability which the plaintiff apprehended; that, of course, could not be done. The jury was merely instructed that it might take into consideration plaintiff's mental suffering up to the time of the trial, which was caused by her reasonable apprehension of being permanently disabled, which apprehension and consequent mental suffering was a direct and proximate result of her injury. This element of damages is no more uncertain and indefinite than in any other case of mental suffering. Mental suffering, like physical suffering, is incapable of exact measurement in dollars and cents, but the jury, nevertheless, may place its estimate upon it. With regard to pain and suffering, the law prescribes no definite measure of damages, but the law leaves such damages to be fixed by the jury as their discretion dictates and as under all the circumstances may be just and proper. Wiley v. Young, 178 Cal. 686, 174 Pac. 316; Rystinki v. Central Cal. T. Co., 175 Cal. 336, 165 Pac. 952.

We shall consider briefly the authorities cited by the appellant on this question: In the case of Poucham v. Godeau, 167 Cal. 692, 140 Pac. 952, the instruction given was objectionable because by it the jury was permitted to allow damages for both present and future injury to the character of the plaintiff caused by the slanderous utterances of the defendant. This is quite different from an allowance for present and past apprehension of future disability, which apprehension caused plaintiff mental suffering.

In the case of Rouse v. Pac. Elec. Ry. Co., 27 Cal. App. 772, 151 Pac. 164, it was held that a jury may not estimate the pecuniary loss sustained by plaintiff through loss of earning power without any evidence upon that subject whatsoever; that such an estimate would be mere conjecture. This case, clearly, is not in point here.

In the case of Saylor v. Taylor, 183 Pac. 843, the instruction considered was one which allowed the jury to consider future mental anguish and pain in reaching its verdict. This also presents a different question from the one presented by the instruction in the instant case.

The case of Melone v. Sierra Railway Co., 151 Cal. 113, 91 Pac. 522, lays down the rule that where suffering or mental anguish is endured by the victim, it is recognized as an element of damages in this state. However, it was there held that the jury might not take into consideration the pain and anguish which plaintiff may suffer in the future.

The other cases cited by the appellant upon this question are also not in point. They do not involve the element of damages covered by the instruction, as we view it, in the present case. In all of these cases the question involved was either the propriety of a recovery for pain and anguish to be suffered in the future, or for possible future disability apprehended by the person injured. Under our view of the instruction in the present case no such questions are involved.

[10] However, if our interpretation of this instruction be an improper one, and the instruction be open to the objections urged against it by the appellant, nevertheless we are of the opinion that the giving of the instruction would not be reversible error under the facts of this case. As stated before, the actual damages pleaded and proved, without the slightest effort at contradiction, amounted to $1,950 loss of earnings from the date of the injury to the date of the trial, $115 for doctor's services, and $30 paid to a nurse—in all $2,095. It appears, then, and there was, approximately, $400 allowed for mental and physical suffering, for plaintiff's nervous and helpless condition, for her loss of sleep and appetite and her loss of capacity to attend to her household duties or to walk about unaided, and for her loss or impairment of earning power in the future. The trial was had a year and a half after the accident, and the testimony was to the effect that all the conditions above mentioned still existed at that time, and plaintiff's physicians stated that there was little hope of any improvement in her condition. Assuredly, $400 is not an excessive amount of damages for the mental and physical suffering of plaintiff up to the date of the trial. Under these circumstances, in support of the judgment, we must assume that the $400 covered the above enumerated physical injuries and mental and physical suffering, all of which were proper elements of damages which were allowable. It is therefore unnecessary to charge any portion of this sum of $400 either to mental suffering due to apprehension of permanent disability, under our view of the instruction, or to apprehended future disability, under appellant's view of the same. We are therefore of the opinion that even though this instruction be erroneous, it was not prejudicial, and would not warrant a reversal of this judgment.

Furthermore, the verdict of the jury in this case is a manifestly just one, and no judgment may be set aside on the ground of misdirection of the jury, unless, after an examination of the entire cause, including the evidence, the court shall be of the opinion that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice. Section 4½, art. 6, Const. of Cal.

The judgment is affirmed.

I concur: NOURSE, J.

STURTEVANT, J. I dissent. In my opinion the trial court committed at least two prejudicial errors. It was claimed by the plaintiff that the defendant's car had come to a stop, and while the car was so stopped, and while she was in the act of alighting, that the car was started with a jerk which caused her injury. These allegations the defendant denied, and also pleaded the contributory negligence of the plaintiff. On the trial of the case the plaintiff called the conductor as a witness. He stated that at the time in question he was standing at the back end of the car (which would be immediately behind the plaintiff). He also stated that—

While the car was at a standstill some passengers got off and then "I see my platform clear, and with my left arm I proceeded to go ahead, and, seeing everything was clear, I walked inside to get the rest of the fares that had boarded the car. * * * She [the plaintiff's daughter] was clear off the car when I saw her. Everything was clear, and I proceeded down to collect one or two fares. * * * At that time I saw no sign whatever of any other lady rise to get off or show any signs of getting off. * * * When I gave the two bells to go ahead I was standing to the rear."

When the case stood thus, the trial court instructed the jury as follows:

"The carrier of passengers is required to exercise the highest degree of care in their transportation, and is responsible for injuries received by them while in the course of transportation which might have been avoided by ordinary care. Hence, when it is shown that the injury to the passenger was caused by the act of the carrier, in operating the instrumentalities employed in its business, there is a presumption of negligence which throws upon the carrier the burden of showing that the injury was sustained without any negligence on its part."

That instruction was highly prejudicial. It violated the rule in Steele v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 168 Cal. 375, 143 Pac. 718. Furthermore, the instruction states, "There is a presumption of negligence." If there is, it must somewhere be printed in the statutes. Code Civ. Proc. § 1959. But one will search the statutes in vain to find any such provision printed therein.

It is patent from the record that, conceding that an accident had occurred, and conceding that the plaintiff had been injured, and conceding that the injury occurred through the fault of the defendant, still it was the theory of the defense that the plaintiff's injury was slight, that she had wholly recovered, and that her claim for damages was excessive. When the parties stood before the court making these conflicting contentions, the court instructed the jury as follows:

"If you should find from the evidence that plaintiff has sustained any injuries because of the negligence of defendant and its employees, and should also find from the evidence that by reason of such injuries plaintiff has, since receiving the same, and does now, in good faith, suffer from the reasonable apprehension that she will in the future be permanently disabled as the natural and proximate result of such injuries, then I instruct you that such apprehended disability is an element of damages you may take into consideration in arriving at the amount of your verdict."

The instruction was clearly erroneous and in direct conflict with the rule as stated in Pouchan v. Godeau, 167 Cal. 692, 695, 140 Pac. 952. It cannot be ascertained from the record whether the jury made and based its award on the claimed "apprehension" as to the future, or based its award on what had occurred down to the date of the trial.

I think the case should be reversed and remanded for a new trial.

54 Cal. App. 757

NEFF v. REDMOND et al. (Civ. 2236.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 31, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 29, 1921.)

1. Sheriffs and constables ⇐100—Sheriff not bound by deputy's act in receiving money under agreement.

A deputy sheriff acted within the scope of his authority in releasing an attachment, but was not so acting in agreeing to become custodian of certain moneys to be paid to him under the agreement whereby the attachment was released, and the sheriff was not liable where the deputy disappeared without accounting for the money received by him.

2. Officers ⇐103—Persons charged with knowledge as to extent of powers.

Parties dealing with public officials are charged with knowledge as to the extent and limits of the powers and duties of such officials.

3. Principal and agent ⇐178(1) — When knowledge of agent is imputed to principal.

Knowledge of the agent is imputed to the principal only so far as it relates to the duties of his office and is acquired while acting within the scope of his authority.

4. Sheriffs and constables ⇐100—Deputy held not ostensible agent of sheriff in receiving moneys.

Where deputy sheriff released attachment under an agreement whereby the sheriff was made custodian of moneys to be paid, and such moneys were paid to the deputy, the sheriff was not estopped to deny that the deputy had authority from him to become custodian of the fund in question merely by reason of payment of the money to the deputy in the sheriff's office, under Civ. Code § 2300, relating to ostensible agency.

5. Sheriffs and constables ⇐138(2) — Prior acts of agency of deputy not admissible against sheriff without showing knowledge.

Where moneys were paid to deputy sheriff as custodian, to hold which was outside the duties of the sheriff or deputy, and action was brought against the sheriff to recover the fund, on the theory of an ostensible agency, under Civ. Code, § 2300, prior acts of deputies were not evidence of agency, in the absence of a showing that the sheriff had knowledge thereof.

Appeal from Superior Court, Humboldt County; Denver Sevier, Judge.

Action by H. H. Neff against Marian Redmond, as administratrix of the estate of Robert Redmond, deceased, and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Puter & Quinn, of Eureka, for appellant.

A. W. Hill and H. C. Nelson, both of Eureka, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. On April 28, 1916, plaintiff commenced an action in the superior court of Humboldt county against Eugene

Woodin and others, as trustees of the California Redwood Shingle Company, a dissolved corporation, for the recovery of $1,928. An attachment was issued in said action and levied upon certain property held as such trustees by said defendants. Thereafter, the parties to the action, together with one H. A. Poland, entered into a written agreement whereby it was provided that said attachment should be released, and "the mill owned by the defendants and held under attachment herein may be operated by H. A. Poland." Then follows certain directions in reference to the disposition of the proceeds of said operation, from which we quote this:

"That said H. A. Poland shall deposit with the sheriff the sum of $100 per month during the period of operation of said mill, said sum to be payable in advance, commencing on the 15th day of May, 1917; * * * that when the payments mentioned in subdivision second made to said H. H. Neff and to said sheriff shall amount in the aggregate to $1,928, no further payments shall be made to said H. H. Neff or to said sheriff under this stipulation."

A duplicate of this agreement was delivered to John F. Helms, the chief deputy or under sheriff, who thereupon released said attachment. Thereafter a sum of money aggregating $897.91 was paid in his office to said Helms, under said stipulation, in various installments at different times. Helms afterward disappeared without accounting for any of the money, and the sheriff, Robert Redmond, refused to pay over or to admit his responsibility for any part of said fund. Thereupon the action was brought against said sheriff for said amount; the complaint alleging that—

"Said defendant, Robert Redmond, agreed to keep the custody of said money, to wit, the sum of $897.91, until said attachment suit was fully adjusted and settled."

While the action was pending Mr. Redmond died, and his administratrix was substituted as party defendant. At the close of plaintiff's case the court granted a nonsuit, and from the judgment entered thereupon the appeal has been taken.

[1, 2] It is not claimed that the transaction was had directly with the sheriff, or that he ever authorized his deputy, Helms, to enter into such an agreement or to become the custodian of such a fund. The liability of the sheriff, if any, must rest, therefore upon the doctrine of agency or of knowledge and ratification of the agreement executed by Helms. It is plain that there was no actual agency in the transaction. Helms acted within the scope of his authority in releasing the attachment, but it was no part of the duty of the sheriff to become the custodian of this fund. It is entirely plain that in receiving said money

Helms was not acting as deputy sheriff, since that is not a duty imposed upon him by law. In other words, he was acting without the scope of his authority, and the sheriff was not bound by Helms' act in receiving the money or in making any agreement concerning the same. It is equally true that the parties by their agreement could not impose upon the sheriff any additional duty than those provided by law. It is the law, also, that parties dealing with public officials are charged with knowledge as to the extent and limits of the powers and duties of such officials. These propositions are not disputed, and it is sufficient in this connection to refer to Fresno National Bank v. Hawkins, 93 Cal. 551, 29 Pac. 233, 27 Am. St. Rep. 221, among the many cases cited by respondent.

It cannot be and is not claimed, therefore, that Redmond was liable for the money by virtue of the fact that Helms received it and promised to account for it as deputy sheriff.

[3] It also follows that the knowledge of Helms in reference to the transaction would not be imputed to Redmond from the mere fact that the former was the latter's deputy. The rule is familiar that the knowledge of the agent is imputed to the principal only so far as it relates to the duties of his office and acquired while acting within the scope of his authority. Indeed, there is no possible ground for holding Redmond liable for the money by virtue of his office as sheriff.

[4] In fact, we understand from the brief and oral argument of appellant that his claim is based solely upon the theory of ostensible agency. Section 2300 of the Civil Code provides:

"An agency is ostensible when the principal intentionally, or by want of ordinary care, causes a third person to believe another to be his agent, who is not really employed by him."

This definition has been amplified and explained in many of the decisions of the courts, among which we may refer to Post v. City and County Bank, 181 Cal. 238, 183 Pac. 802, wherein is quoted with approval from 2 Corpus Juris, p. 464, the following:

"The person sought to be bound must, by his words or conduct have represented that the person assuming to act for him had authority to do so. Accordingly, an estoppel does not arise from the mere fact that the agent has acted for the principal on one or more previous occasions, but not under appearance of a general authority so to act, nor does the rule in question apply to acts of the agent outside of the scope of authority which the principal has caused him to seem to possess."

Nothing of the kind was shown in the case at bar. It is not claimed, indeed, that Redmond intentionally caused plaintiff to believe that Helms was Redmond's agent in the transaction. Nor was there any evidence tending to show the want of ordinary care in the premises. No fact was brought to the attention of Redmond that would put him upon inquiry as to said agreement. He had no reason to believe that Helms would attempt to charge him with liability for said money. Under the circumstances he could not be expected to make inquiry as to whether such transaction had occurred any more than to ask Helms about any other private business arrangements that the latter might have made. The only possible circumstance that might indicate acquiescence, and therefore, by implication, lend support to the theory of agency, is the fact, as we have seen, that the money was paid to Helms at the sheriff's office. The sheriff, however, was not present, and there is no evidence that any record of said payments was made in the books of the office, or that any one communicated with the sheriff in reference to the matter until after the transaction was closed, and then the sheriff disavowed any knowledge of it. The mere payment in the sheriff's office would be no evidence that it was with the knowledge or consent of the sheriff.

[5] It is true that some attempt was made to show other transactions of a similar nature to add to the probability that the sheriff authorized or at least acquiesced in the arrangement herein, but said incidents were of an entirely different character. One of these occurred in 1912, when a certain business was under attachment and so remained while one of the deputies from the sheriff's office took in the money while the business was being operated for a few days pending a settlement. In that case the attachment remained, while here it was released. Nor is there any evidence that plaintiff had any knowledge of that proceeding, and, of course, he could not have been induced to act as he did by reason of it.

The same thing may be said of the manner in which receipts for fees for the sheriff's services in civil cases were signed by Helms. This would be no evidence of the authority of Helms to represent the sheriff in receiving the moneys paid to said Helms for plaintiff, or to give such receipts as "J. F. Helms, undersheriff." It may be added that there is nothing to show that plaintiff had any knowledge of how Helms was accustomed to sign said receipts for fees, and hence the circumstance could not have any tendency to create a belief in the mind of plaintiff that an agency existed.

"The party maintaining that an ostensible authority existed must prove that he knew of the facts giving color of authority to the supposed agent. A mere surmise that he knew them is not sufficient." Harris v. San Diego Flume Co., 87 Cal. 526, 25 Pac. 758; Gosliner v. Grangers' Bank, 124 Cal. 225, 56 Pac. 1029; Armstrong v. Barceloux, 34 Cal. App. 433, 167 Pac. 895.

We think that respondent has aptly summarized the case as follows:

"Every payment made was to Helms personally; every conversation on the subject between the parties interested and their attorneys was with Helms individually. Redmond was not present on a single instance, and in the nature of things could not be charged with knowledge as to every act and conversation of an unofficial character held between his various deputies and third persons, even though such conversations and acts took place within the confines of the county jail, or the sheriff's outside office. Any finding by the jury that Redmond had knowledge of this transaction or consented to it or acquiesced in it would be based on merest guess and conjecture, with no evidence whatever to support it. * * *

"Ordinary diligence on the part of appellant would have caused him to ascertain the extent of Helms' authority in the premises and to have spoken to Redmond about the matter. He simply took for granted and assumed, without reason therefor, that the deputy was authorized to bind and represent the sheriff in a matter not connected in any way with the sheriff's duties."

We may add that the record shows that appellant's attorneys had the utmost confidence in the honesty of Helms, and that is probably the reason why they were not more careful to consider the scope of his authority or to consult Mr. Redmond in reference to the matter. It is another case of misplaced confidence, and the one who failed to exercise due circumspection must suffer the loss rather than the entirely innocent party.

We are not unmindful of the rule that prevails in case of nonsuit, but we are satisfied that if the jury had found for plaintiff the court would and should have set aside the verdict as entirely unsupported.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PREWETT, Justice pro tem.

55 Cal. App. 175

MAMLOCK v. WILLIAMS et al. (Civ. 3928.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Nov. 14, 1921.)

1. Principal and agent $\S$ 64(1) — Agent authorized to compromise debt bound to act with highest good faith.

An agent for the collection of a note with authority in a certain contingency to enter into a compromise with the maker was bound to act in the highest good faith toward his principal.

2. Principal and agent $\S$ 69(3)—Agent's compromise of note without notifying principal that he had assumed payment held a nullity.

Under Civ. Code, $\S$ 2322, placing agents under some of the disabilities of a trustee, sections 2228, 2230, and 2233 relative to the duties of trustees, and section 2234 declaring a violation of such duties a fraud on the beneficiary, where an agent, authorized to compromise a note if a business proved unsuccessful, purchased the business and assumed payment of the note, it was his duty to negotiate directly with the principal for a compromise, and his attempted compromise of his own indebtedness without notice to the principal that he had become liable did not discharge the debt.

3. Principal and agent $\S$ 75—Principal's retaining agent's check, purporting to be for money collected, did not render applicable rules as to payment by check.

Where an agent, authorized to compromise a note if a business proved unsuccessful, purchased the business and assumed payment of the note, and thereafter sent his check for $10 to the principal with the statement that he had compromised the debt at that amount, the rules of law relating to payment by check did not apply to the principal's retention of the check, as it did not purport to constitute payment of anything due the principal from the agent, but only a forwarding by the agent of money belonging to the principal.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by Max Mamlock against Edwin H. Williams and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

William A. Kelly, of San Francisco (Harold C. Faulkner, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

W. F. Postel, of San Francisco, for respondents.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from a judgment in favor of defendants in an action brought to recover the sum of $3,000, due upon a promissory note executed by defendant Edwin H. Williams in favor of the plaintiff, and which by an agreement, subsequently entered into between Williams and his codefendant, Robert L. Coleman, the latter undertook to pay. Coleman having died after the commencement of the action, his executrix, Frances E. Coleman, was substituted as defendant in his stead.

The plaintiff and Robert L. Coleman were copartners doing business under the name of Alco Taxicab Company when, on January 1, 1916, the former sold all his interest in the concern to Edwin H. Williams, and the note in suit was given by Williams as a portion of the purchase price thereof. The note was payable in monthly installments. On the day that the note was executed, and as a part of the same transaction, the plaintiff executed the following writing:

"I, Max Mamlock, payee in the note executed by Edwin H. Williams in my favor, do hereby irrevocably authorize and appoint Robert L. Coleman as my agent for me and in my behalf to collect all moneys due and payable to him under the terms of the foregoing note, and I further authorize said Robert L. Coleman to receipt for said moneys collected by him, and in the event of the failure of the business of the Alco Taxicab Company to compromise said note for less than the face value thereof and in his judgment as he may see fit to give further and complete receipts and acquittances thereunder for me and in my name, place and stead. Dated, January 1, 1916."

On January 25, 1916, and shortly after the above transaction, Coleman purchased from Williams his newly acquired interest in the Alco Taxicab Company, and in connection with said purchase executed and delivered to Williams a writing in terms as follows:

"San Francisco, January 25, 1916. For and in consideration of the execution to me of a bill of sale of even date herewith, I hereby undertake and agree that I will pay to Max Mamlock that certain promissory note dated January 1, 1916, in the principal sum of eleven thousand dollars and signed by Edwin H. Williams, and that I will hold Edwin H. Williams harmless from any and all loss, damage or expense by reason of his having executed said promissory note in favor of Max Mamlock. A copy of said note is hereto annexed, marked 'Exhibit A' and made a part hereof."

The note referred to in this writing is the same as that above referred to. In May, 1917, Coleman sold and disposed of the business, and in August of that year, the monthly payments upon the aforesaid note having been made up to that time, notified the plaintiff in writing that the business of said concern had proved a failure, and that he had, under the authority given him by the document of date January 1, 1916, hereinabove set out, accepted a compromise in the sum of $10 of the Williams note, accompanying said notification with a check drawn by himself for that amount.

There is nothing in the record to show that Mamlock was informed of Coleman's agreement with Williams to pay said note, or that the purported compromise was not in fact had with Williams. Mamlock neither cashed nor returned said check, but on September 13, 1917, about five weeks after its receipt, brought this action to recover the amount then due upon the note. By a supplemental complaint the amount due was fixed at $3,000.

Answers were filed by both Williams and Coleman's executrix, in both of which the aforesaid alleged compromise is pleaded as a discharge and satisfaction of the note sued upon. The trial court found in accordance with this defense, and judgment was entered in favor of the defendants.

In support of his appeal it is urged by the plaintiff that the trial court was in error in holding that the purported compromise by Coleman of the note in suit and his tender of a check for $10 to the plaintiff operated as payment and discharge of the note; and we think that this contention of the appellant must be sustained.

[1, 2] Coleman as the agent of Mamlock for the collection of the note, with authority in a certain contingency to enter into a compromise with its maker, was bound to act in the highest good faith toward his principal. In respect of this agency he was under some of the disabilities of a trustee. Civ. Code, § 2322. He was inhibited from obtaining any advantage over him by the slightest concealment (Civ. Code, § 2228); he could not enter into any transaction connected with his trust in which his interest would be adverse to that of his principal (Civ. Code, § 2230; Watkins' Estate, 121 Cal. 327, 53 Pac. 702); and it was his duty immediately to disclose to his principal his adverse interest (Civ. Code, § 2233); and any violation of these duties constitutes a fraud against the principal (Civ. Code, § 2234). As already remarked, there is no evidence in the record of a disclosure by Coleman to Mamlock of the fact that he had by agreement with Williams become responsible for the payment of the note; and in his letter to Mamlock, advising him of the purported compromise, he states, "I have compromised the said note for the sum of $10, and have given full and complete receipts and acquittances therefor," clearly intending to convey the impression to Mamlock that the compromise had been made with another person than himself. We think it obvious that if the contingency foreseen in the written appointment of Coleman as Mamlock's agent arose, authorizing the making of a compromise, it was Coleman's duty, having himself become liable on the note, to negotiate directly with Mamlock with a view to effecting such compromise, and not to place himself in the impossible situation of negotiating with himself for a compromise of his own indebtedness.

[3] The respondents attach some weight to the failure of Mamlock to return to Coleman the $10 check, claiming that its retention for some five weeks before the commencement of this action amounted to its acceptance as payment of the note, notwithstanding that it had not been presented for payment. No question arises here as to any prejudice suffered by the drawer of the check by reason of delay in its presentation for payment; sole reliance being placed upon the mere retention of the check. On this point it is sufficient to say that the check did not purport to be payment of anything due from Coleman to Mamlock, but at most the forwarding by means of a check by an agent of money belonging to his principal. Under these circumstances the question of payment by check and the rules of law relating thereto do not arise.

For the reasons given the judgment is reversed.

We concur: WASTE, P. J.; RICHARDS, J.

54 Cal. App. 691

WENDLING LUMBER CO. v. GLENWOOD LUMBER CO. (Civ. 3968.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Oct. 28, 1921. Rehearing Denied Nov. 26, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 27, 1921.)

1. Sales ⚡225(4)—Burden of proof in action against purchaser from fraudulent vendee stated.

In conversion against purchaser from vendee, it was incumbent on the plaintiff to show ownership and wrongful conversion as alleged, and then on the defendant to prove that plaintiff sold to vendee before action commenced, and then upon the plaintiff to show fraudulent intent of the vendee in selling the property to the defendant, and then upon defendant to show a valuable consideration, and then again upon the plaintiff to show vendee's knowledge of the fraudulent intent of the vendee.

2. Sales ⚡225(4), 244(3)—Evidence insufficient to show property acquired by fraud or that purchaser knew thereof.

In conversion against vendee of purchaser of lumber, evidence held insufficient to show that the lumber was obtained by the purchaser through fraud or that the vendee of such purchaser had knowledge of plaintiff's rights or claims.

3. Estoppel ⚡75 — Seller of goods held estopped to assert title against subsequent purchaser.

Where plaintiff sold lumber outright to a known dealer in lumber, and defendant purchased from such dealer under a conditional sale contract, paid by credits, dollar for dollar, without any knowledge of the facts of the sale to the dealer, the plaintiff is estopped from asserting title under a claim of fraud on the part of the dealer.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; J. R. Welch, Judge.

Action by the Wendling Lumber Company against the Glenwood Lumber Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Louis H. Brownstone, of San Francisco, and Nicholas Bowden, of San Jose, for appellant.

Walter H. Linforth, of San Francisco, and James P. Sex, of San Jose, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff sold to J. H. Routt a quantity of lumber for which he failed to pay the plaintiff. Routt sold the lumber to the defendant. Contending that it had been wronged, the plaintiff sued the defendant under a charge of conversion. At the end of the plaintiff's case the defendant moved for a nonsuit. The motion was granted, and the plaintiff has appealed.

[1,2] The case was appealed twice before this appeal. Wendling, etc., Co. v. Glenwood, etc., Co., 153 Cal. 411, 95 Pac. 1029; Id., 19 Cal. App. 1, 124 Pac. 734. The first of those cases states that the rule of procedure declared in Moore v. Copp, 119 Cal. 429, 51 Pac. 630, governs this case. Following the rule declared in that case, it was incumbent on the plaintiff to produce evidence to prove the issues tendered by its complaint, including the issue of ownership and wrongful conversion. The burden then shifted to the defendant to prove that the plaintiff sold to Routt before the action was commenced. Both of these things were done, in the trial of this case, during the presentation of the plaintiff's case. The steps next in order are stated in Hart v. Church, 126 Cal. 471, at page 481, 58 Pac. 910, 913 (77 Am. St. Rep. 195), as follows:

"It is the well-settled rule that where a plaintiff attacks a conveyance as in fraud of his rights it is incumbent upon him first to show the fraudulent intent of the vendor. The burden then shifts to the purchaser to show a valuable consideration, and, this shown, the burden again shifts to the plaintiff, who must show the vendee's knowledge of the fraudulent intent of the vendor. Ross v. Wellman, 102 Cal. 4."

We do not understand that the plaintiff questions these rules of procedure, but it presents the question as to whether its proof fell short of the requirements of the rules above stated at the time the plaintiff rested. In applying and following said rules the plaintiff adopted an unusual course. It did not make any distinction as to what matters should be presented in its case in chief, and what in rebuttal, etc.; but it chose the course of taking up all of said matters in the presentation of its case in chief. And, at this time, it states that its rights turn on a correct answer to the question, "Does the plaintiff's case, as made, show that fraud was committed?" If the plaintiff had directly pleaded fraud, the burden would have been on it. It cannot escape that burden by adopting a different kind of pleading. By adopting a pleading sounding in conversion, it simplified the pleadings in the case and it postponed the hour in which it had to take up the issue of fraud; but the burden still rested on the plaintiff when the time arrived to take up that issue. We reach the same conclusion on this branch of the case if we view this record from a different angle. On its face the judgment purports to be based on an order of nonsuit granted at the end of the plaintiff's case. In truth, and in legal effect, it was an order of nonsuit granted after the presentation of the whole case, because all of the actors had been called and examined on all of the facts except as is herein stated. Picking up the bill of exceptions and running through it from end to end, there is not a scintilla of proof that Routt acted with a fraudulent intent when he sold to the Glenwood Lumber Company. Moreover, the evidence does show that the Glenwood Lumber Company purchased for a valuable consideration, and, finally, there is not the slightest proof on the part of the plaintiff that the defendant ever had the slightest information or knowledge of the fraudulent intent, if any, on the part of Routt. On these elements of the case the story is as follows: In the early part of 1903 Routt interviewed the president of the plaintiff corporation for the purpose of negotiating the purchase of materials. In that interview he stated to G. X. Wendling, president of the plaintiff corporation, that he was contemplating the purchase of the plant of the defendant corporation; that he estimated the purchase price would be $20,000, which was the estimated value of the merchandise on hand; that for the purpose of making the purchase he had $3,000; that he expected Mr. Johnson of Santa Cruz to join him and put up $5,000; that he expected to incorporate and pledge the corporate stock for $7,000; and that he expected to sell off lumber on hand, reducing the stock to $20,000, if the stock exceeded that sum. Contemporaneously with these interviews, Mr. Routt held interviews with the defendant corporation looking toward the purchase of the defendant's plant. Again, these parties estimated that the stock on hand was about $20,000. The negotiations between Routt and the defendant advanced to the point where a contract of purchase was entered into by the terms of which Routt agreed to purchase under a conditional sales contract, by the terms of which the title of the property remained in the vendor until paid for. The amount to be paid remained to be ascertained by the taking of an inventory. At that time it was known that the taking of the inventory would require several weeks. While the inventory was being taken and before the amount thereof was ascertained, the contract between Routt and the plaintiff was entered into and the lumber in question was shipped and was received by Routt into the yard of the defendant. While on the stand as a witness Wendling stated that by the terms of the interview between him and Routt, Routt was to pay the defendant $20,000 as a purchase price, out of the $3,000 which he held, $5,000 to be invested by Mr. Johnson of Santa Cruz, $7,000 to be borrowed from the bank, and that the plaintiff corporation was to advance $5,000 or $6,000 worth of lumber. However, when the inventory was completed, the purchase price payable to the defendant was $39,000. There was no proof to the effect that Routt misrepresented any existing fact to the plaintiff corporation. The proof is all one way, that Routt stated in the beginning that he possessed $3,000, and that statement squares with the fact. He stated that he expected to borrow $5,000 from his friend in Santa Cruz. The fact is that he had such a promise but that the friend changed his mind. He stated that he intended to incorporate under the name of the San Jose Lumber Company and borrow from the bank in San Jose $7,000 more. He did not incorporate. But the fact whether he did or did not incorporate, it is patent, would not add one dollar to his purse, and therefore, would not operate as a material misrepresentation to the defendant. The proof does not show why he did not incorporate under the name of the San Jose Lumber Company, nor why the $7,000 was not borrowed from a bank in San Jose. The proof all tends to show that Routt was attempting to operate on too little capital and that the material error was that all of the parties underestimated the value of the defendant's stock. It does not in any respect show that Routt committed any act with a fraudulent intent to deceive the plaintiff or the defendant. There was no proof whatever that the defendant corporation was at any time informed as to the statements made by Routt to the plaintiff, whether those statements be true representations or false representations. The plaintiff called Routt as a witness. It also called the secretary and bookkeeper of the defendant corporation. Those two men were the very persons who knew what facts, if any, had been communicated to the defendant regarding the matters that had transpired between Routt and the plaintiff. But no question was asked of, and no statement was made by, either of those witnesses relative to the knowledge or information of the defendant concerning the trade that had been made between Routt and the plaintiff.

[3] The case then stands thus: The plaintiff sold its lumber outright to Routt, a known dealer in lumber; without any knowledge of the facts of that sale, the defendant received the same lumber from Routt under a conditional sales contract and paid by credits, dollar for dollar, to Routt therefor. These facts bring this case within the rule that when the owner of property clothes another with the apparent title to, or power of disposition over it, and an innocent third party has thereby been induced to deal with the apparent owner in reference thereto, the true owner is estopped from afterwards asserting his title. McNeil v. Tenth National Bank, 46 N. Y. 325; Barstow v. Savage M. Co., 64 Cal. 388, 393, 1 Pac. 349, 49 Am. Rep. 705; Chase v. Whitmore, 68 Cal. 545, 547, 9 Pac. 942; Kohn v. Sacramento Electric, Gas & Ry. Co., 168 Cal. 1, 11, 141 Pac. 626.

The motion for a nonsuit was based on six different grounds, including among others:

" * * (2) There is no evidence in this case connecting the defendant or any one authorized to represent the defendant with any representations made by Mr. Routt to the plaintiff or any one connected with the plaintiff with reference to this particular lumber, whether those representations were false or otherwise. (3) There is no evidence in this case that the Glenwood Company did not obtain this property from Mr. Routt in the usual course of business and for a valuable and sufficient consideration; on the contrary, the evidence shows that they were bona fide purchasers of it for value and without notice. * * * (5) There is no evidence in this case that the plaintiff was the owner of the property involved in this action or any part of it at any time subsequent to the sale of the same by the plaintiff to Routt."

The motion for a nonsuit was granted generally. On the elements of the motion above stated the motion was properly granted.

It follows that the judgment should be and the same is affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

55 Cal. App. 147

TRIFIRO et al. v. BEVILACQUA.
(Civ. 3995.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Nov. 10, 1921.)

1. Sales ☞ 179(4)—No recovery of purchase price from seller after inspection at place of delivery.

Where wine was inspected and found satisfactory at the place provided for delivery, and was then paid for, evidence that the wine was subsequently found to be spoiled and worthless when sought to be distributed was properly excluded in action by purchasers to recover the purchase money.

2. Sales ☞ 71(3) — Agreement to deliver two carloads of wine held complied with.

It was fair to construe a contract requiring the delivery of "two carloads of wine, about 7,200 gallons," as meaning that the number of gallons mentioned was merely an estimate or approximation, and was complied with by delivering two carloads containing 6,100 gallons, especially as no exception was taken to the deficiency at the time it was delivered, accepted, and paid for.

3. Appeal and error ☞ 172(1)—Claim for damages not to be urged first on appeal.

In action to recover purchase money paid by purchaser of wine alleged to have spoiled and become worthless, plaintiffs cannot complain for the first time on appeal that defendant seller breached his contract in that he delivered a deficiency; no claim for damages therefor being pleaded, nor any such breach being mentioned below.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; J. R. Welch, Judge.

Action by Guiseppe Trifiro and another against Giacomo Bevilacqua. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Walter E. Dorn and L. W. Lovey, both of San Francisco, for appellants.

Victor A. Scheller, of San Jose, and Albert Picard, of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an action in which the plaintiffs seek to recover from the defendant the purchase price of 6,100 gallons of wine alleged to have been purchased by them from the defendant at Madrone, Santa Clara county, Cal., and which wine proved upon its arrival in New York to be spoiled and worthless; and also to recover certain additional sums expended by the plaintiffs in connection with this shipment of said wine, together with a further recovery of $3,000 damages alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiffs in their business of supplying their customers with wine by reason of the fact that the wine that they thus received and supplied to them was spoiled and worthless.

The defendant answered, denying the averments of the plaintiffs' third amended complaint, and the cause proceeded to trial.

Upon the trial the written agreement of the parties as to the purchase and sale of this wine was presented in evidence from which it appeared that the defendant sold and the plaintiffs purchased "two carloads of wine, about 7,200 gallons, at the price of 23 cents a gallon, delivery at the car." The contract also called for the payment of the purchase price in cash upon delivery at the station at Madrone. The evidence showed without conflict that the actual amount of wine so delivered and paid for was 6,100 gallons. The evidence is otherwise quite conflicting as to the actions and conduct of the parties or their representatives at or about the time of the delivery of the wine in barrels upon the cars at Madrone.

Upon the submission of the cause the trial court made its findings of fact, in which the court found the existence of the written contract between the parties for the purchase and sale of the wine in question, and that in pursuance thereof 6,100 gallons of said wine was to be delivered to the plaintiffs at Madrone, Cal., and was in fact so delivered, and was then and there examined and inspected by the duly authorized agent and representative of said plaintiffs, who then and there, and after such inspection and acceptance, paid the purchase price thereof and received said wine; that said wine was sound and merchantable, and that the plaintiffs' averments as to the unsound, unmerchantable, and inferior grade of said wine at the time and place of its delivery and acceptance are untrue. Upon these findings the trial court rendered its judgment in favor of the defendant and against the plaintiffs upon their several demands for reimbursement and damages. From such judgment this appeal has been taken.

The first and main contention of the appellants is that the findings of the trial court are unsustained by the evidence in the case. The reporter's transcript on appeal embraces 160 pages of typewritten testimony and exhibits. The appellants have supplied us with no appendix to their opening brief, with no closing brief, and with not a single excerpt from this mass of evidence in their brief on file. We are merely referred to certain pages of the transcript, as sustaining the appellants' quite brief and very general statement as to what the record in the case contains. Notwithstanding this entire absence of an effort at compliance with the sections of the Code defining the duty of the appellants in this regard, we have undertaken to examine the reporter's transcript in the case with the result of satisfying ourselves that the findings of the trial court are fully sustained by the evidence in the case; that the defendant complied with his written agreement as to the sale and delivery of the wine in question to the extent of delivering 6,100 gallons thereof on the cars at Madrone, which amount of wine, after being then and there examined, sampled, and inspected by the agent and representative of the plaintiffs, was fully paid for without any objection or exception as to its quality or amount; that said wine when so sampled, accepted, delivered, and paid for, was sound and merchantable, and that whatever happened to said wine thereafter to render the same unfit and unmerchantable when sought to be distributed by the plaintiffs to their customers in New York was something for which the defendant was not to be held responsible.

[1] The second point urged by the appellants is that the trial court erred in ruling against the admission of certain depositions offered by the plaintiffs upon the trial, tending to show that said wine was spoiled and worthless when sought to be so distributed in New York; but in so ruling the trial court was not in error, since, the plaintiffs having examined, tasted, accepted, and received said wine at its specified place of delivery, the defendant's responsibility was then at an end; and hence the offered evidence was immaterial.

[2] The appellants' final contention is that, the defendant having agreed to deliver to the plaintiffs 7,200 gallons of wine, and having only delivered 6,100 gallons thereof, they were entitled to damages for the nondelivery of the remaining 1,100 gallons of said wine. A fair construction of the language of the contract between the parties, which requires the delivery of "two carloads of wine, about 7,200 gallons," would seem to be that the specified number of gallons was merely an estimate or approximation of the content in gallons of two carloads of wine; and this seems to have been the intent of the parties, since the evidence showed that two carloads of wine were actually shipped, and also since no exception was taken to the deficiency in gallons of the wine at the time it was delivered, accepted, and paid for at Madrone.

[3] But an even better reason exists for holding the appellants' contention in this regard to be without merit, since in their complaint no mention was made of any such breach of the contract, nor was any claim for damages therefor averred. It is too late to urge such a claim upon appeal.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

55 Cal. App. 103

PEOPLE v. NORRINGTON. (Cr. 792.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Nov. 7, 1921.)

1. Criminal law $\S$ 1134(3), 1144(13)—Appellate jurisdiction extends only to questions of law; facts detailed by state's witnesses presumed proven.

On appeal from a conviction, the jurisdiction of the appellate court extends only to questions of law, and it must accept as proven facts as detailed by the witnesses for the state.

2. Rape $\S$ 53(2) — Evidence of prosecutrix held not so incredible as to warrant interference with verdict of guilt of assault with intent to rape.

In a prosecution for assault with intent to rape, testimony of the prosecutrix held not so intrinsically incredible as to warrant interference with jury's verdict of guilty.

3. Rape $\S$ 54(1), 57(1)—Conviction of assault with intent may rest upon testimony of prosecutrix, and weight of testimony is for jury.

A conviction for assault with intent to rape may rest upon the uncorroborated testimony of the prosecutrix, if she be believed by the jury, and the degree of credibility which should be given her statements and the weight to be accorded her testimony are matters to be addressed solely to the consideration and discretion of the jury.

4. Criminal law $\S$ 1144(15)—Assumed that jury reached verdict free from passion and prejudice.

In the absence of something in the record upon which to base a contrary opinion, an appellate court must assume that the jury reached a verdict of guilty with a full realization of their full duty, free from passion and prejudice.

5. Criminal law ⚖️1159(2)—Verdict of guilt disturbed only where record shows passion and prejudice.

A verdict of guilty of assault with intent to rape, based solely on the uncorroborated testimony of prosecutrix, will not be disturbed on appeal, unless the court finds in the record full justification for believing that the verdict was the expression of passion and prejudice, rather than of deliberate judgment.

6. Rape ⚖️53(3)—Absence of outcry not conclusive of lack of intent.

Though the absence of violent outcry by prosecutrix in prosecution for assault with intent to rape has a tendency to refute the hypothesis of guilt and a felonious intent to commit rape, it is by no means conclusive.

7. Rape ⚖️53(2)—Evidence held sufficient to sustain conviction of assault with intent to rape.

In prosecution for assault with intent to rape, evidence held to sustain a conviction.

8. Rape ⚖️16(1)—Intent for a moment to overcome resistance constitutes assault with intent to rape.

If prosecutrix resisted, and if, for an instant during the assault and the prosecutrix's resistance, defendant intended to overcome her resistance by force or violence, he was guilty of assault with intent to commit rape under Pen. Code, §§ 220, 261, subd. 3.

9. Rape ⚖️16(1)—In prosecution for assault with intent to rape, every element of rape except penetration must be proved.

It is essential, in a prosecution for assault with intent to commit rape, that the state, beyond proving the assault, should prove every fact necessary to constitute rape except penetration.

10. Rape ⚖️16(6)—Importance of resistance simply to show intent and nonconsent.

In a prosecution for assault with intent to commit rape, the importance of resistance by the woman is simply to show two elements of the crime; the assailant's attempt to use force in order to have carnal intercourse, and the woman's nonconsent.

11. Criminal law ⚖️1159(2)—Determination supported by substantial evidence not disturbed.

The appellate court cannot disturb a conviction if there is any substantial evidence upon which the verdict may find meritorious support.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Paul J. McCormick, Judge.

James M. Norrington was convicted of assault with intent to commit rape, and appeals. Affirmed.

Guy Eddie, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Arthur Keetch, Deputy Atty. Gen., and R. L. Chamberlain, of San Francisco, for the People.

FINLAYSON, P. J. Defendant, who was convicted of an assault with intent to commit rape, appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial. The appeal presents the single question as to whether the evidence is sufficient to justify the verdict, defendant claiming that the testimony of the prosecutrix is inherently improbable, and that she did not resist to the utmost of her ability.

[1] There is an irreconcilable conflict between the testimony of the prosecutrix and that given by the defendant. But, since our appellate jurisdiction extends only to questions of law, we must accept as proven the facts as detailed by the witnesses for the state. As was said by our Supreme Court in People v. Emerson, 130 Cal. 562, 62 Pac. 1069:

"If the evidence which bears against the defendant, considered by itself, and without regard to conflicting evidence, is sufficient to support the verdict, the question ceases to be one of law—of which alone this court has jurisdiction—and becomes one of fact, upon which the decision of the jury and the trial court is final and conclusive."

About midnight of August 18, 1920, the prosecutrix, a married woman, 40 years of age, and who resided with her husband in Los Angeles, left Long Beach for her home. She arrived in Los Angeles, alone, shortly before 10 o'clock in the morning. After standing for a considerable length of time on a street corner waiting for a street car to take her home, she finally accosted the defendant, a police officer in uniform, wearing his star or badge, and sought from him information regarding the street car that would take her nearest to her home, which was not far from the intersection of Vermont avenue with Ninth street. Defendant, who was just off duty, volunteered to take her home in his automobile, which, at that time, was in a garage on Grand avenue, between Eighth and Ninth streets. The offer was accepted, the prosecutrix and defendant went to the garage, and presently the two drove away in defendant's car. After proceeding south on Grand avenue to Ninth street, they turned into the latter street and traveled westerly for a distance about halfway between Grand avenue and Vermont, when defendant, against the remonstrance of the prosecutrix, turned his car northerly and drove to Wilshire boulevard, where he again turned and proceeded along that thoroughfare in a westerly direction, across Vermont avenue, until he finally brought his car to a stop on Wilshire boulevard at a point between one-quarter and one-half mile west of Western avenue, and which, the prosecutrix testified, was "beyond any signs of habitation, * * * beyond the residential district." The nearest dwelling, she thought, was distant about 600 yards. After stopping his car at the edge of the road, defendant switched off the lights. As the car came to a stop, another automobile passed by, traveling in a westerly direction. Just before this other vehicle passed, defendant, addressing the prosecutrix, said:

"Don't you dare to speak or make any outcry when this machine passes. Don't you dare to."

What took place after this is described by the prosecutrix substantially as follows:

"After the car came to a stop [i. e., defendant's car] the defendant took me by the elbows, lifted me bodily, and slid under me, endeavoring to place me on his lap; and it was necessary to think very quickly, and to the best of my ability; I realized I was in quite a predicament, and that I must not lose my head, so I opened the door and stepped out onto the ground. I moved toward the front of the car—about two or three feet beyond the front of the car. Defendant followed me immediately and came up to me. I again begged him to take me home. I talked very loud, as loud as possible—probably louder than I have ever talked in my life or have been able to—and when I started to do that he took me by the back of the neck, in the crook of his elbow, and put his right hand over my mouth and pushed my head back just as far as he could. He seemed very nervous, and kept saying, 'Sh-sh-sh.' It was quite a shock to my nerves. However, I did not lose consciousness. His right hand was over my mouth, forcing my head back. I then went toward the middle of the car, in front of the rear side door. The defendant followed me to that position. I kept begging him to take me home; I spoke of my husband several times. Defendant kept repeating, 'I will take you home; I will take you home, but not until I am completely satisfied.' He stated that he would have intercourse with me in some way or other. He raised my skirts nearly up to my hips. Meanwhile he held my left arm up in the air with his right hand. He was facing me, and I was leaning or standing against the back of the car, that is, not touching it, but standing right in front of it, with my back to the door. I had on a union suit. It was worn. I had been wearing it since morning, and had had no opportunity to change it. It had been worn with circular holes through rubbing and wear. In reaching under my skirts the first time he grabbed through one of these holes that had been worn in this old union suit and tore it. Then he reached again. I had on an undernapkin. He reached with such violence that he pulled the pin out of this napkin so that the pin was bent. He threw the pin over into the front of the car. The napkin was torn loose. It was left hanging after he had reached under with his left hand and jerked the pin out. Defendant's trousers were open and his private parts exposed. He informed me that he was going to be satisfied before he took me home. I told him that I felt sure he would have to wait some time if he waited for that to be accomplished, because I certainly would defend myself, if possible. Then he made another attempt to enforce his intentions, and I simply talked to him and spoke again that I must get home. I was trying to use suggestion, thinking that would perhaps influence him to take me home. He said, 'I think I will just take you over under the bushes here on the grass.' I replied that he could not budge me from the spot where I stood. Then he proceeded to attempt to make the insertion there where I stood. He pushed me violently against the car 60 or 75 times, striking his penis against the tab of my sanitary belt from which he had removed the cloth by jerking the pin loose. While he was doing that I saw my opportunity to get his badge and I unpinned it and took it from his coat. I was endeavoring to fight him off as best I could. He did not make any penetration, but after about 60 violent strokes against my body something happened—he had an emission. Then it was that he relaxed his hold on me, and I stepped to one side. Then I again asked him to take me home, and finally he consented, and drove east toward Western avenue. He took me to Ninth and New Hampshire, and then I recognized that we were about a short block from where I lived. From there I walked home. It was about 25 minutes to 5 in the morning when I arrived home. I told my husband what had happened."

[2-5] We are unable to say that the testimony of the prosecutrix is so intrinsically incredible that this court should interpose to disturb the jury's determination. Her manner and deportment on the witness stand, as well as her apparent appreciation, or lack of appreciation, of the consequences of her testimony, are tests of her truthfulness of which we, as a reviewing court, are deprived. It is well settled by the decisions of the Supreme Court and appellate courts of this state that in cases of this character a conviction may rest upon the uncorroborated testimony of the prosecutrix, if she be believed by the jury. The degree of credibility which should be given to her statements while on the witness stand, and the weight to be accorded her testimony, are matters to be addressed solely to the discretion and consideration of the jury. People v. Mazurco, 193 Pac. 164. In the absence of something in the record upon which to base a contrary opinion, we must assume that the jury reached their verdict with a full realization of their sworn duty, free from passion and prejudice. Moreover, the learned trial judge, by denying the motion for a new trial, manifested his satisfaction with the sufficiency of the evidence. His opportunity to form a correct opinion as to the credibility of the witnesses, as well as the weight and effect of their evidence, is far better than ours; and his conclusions ought not lightly to be disturbed. Before we can interfere, we must find in the record full justification for believing that the verdict was the expression of passion and prejudice rather than of deliberate judgment. People v. Lewis, 18 Cal. App. 359, 365, 123 Pac. 232. We cannot say that such a condition is shown here.

[6] Appellant strenuously insists that there is not sufficient evidence to warrant the inference that he was actuated by the felonious intent to commit rape. That is, it is insisted that the evidence does not warrant the inference that he intended to gratify his lust upon the person of the prosecutrix at all events and regardless of what she might or could do to prevent it. The basis for this contention is the claim that the evidence shows that the prosecutrix did not put forth all the resistance within her power for the reason that she failed to make any violent outcry. Though the absence of such outcries may have a tendency to refute the hypothesis of guilt, it is by no means conclusive. While, from the nature of the crime, it may be expected in such cases that the utmost reluctance would be manifested, and the utmost resistance made which the circumstances of the case will allow, still, to hold, as a matter of law, that such manifestation and resistance are essential to the existence of the crime, so that it could not be committed if they are wanting, would be going farther than any well-considered case in criminal law has hitherto gone. State v. Pilegge, 61 Wash. 264, 112 Pac. 263.

[7, 8] That the defendant desired to have sexual intercourse with the prosecutrix, and that, in attempting to attain his purpose, he assaulted her, are facts shown by the testimony of the state's witness beyond all question. If the prosecutrix resisted, and if for an instant during the assault and the prosecutrix's resistance the defendant intended to overcome her resistance by force or violence, he is guilty of assault with intent to commit rape. Pen. Code, § 220, and subdivision 3 of section 261. In cases such as this, the intent with which the assault is committed is a fact which can only be inferred from the outward act and surrounding circumstances. It is, in other words, a question of fact for the jury, and not a question of law for the court, except where the proven facts afford no reasonable ground for the inference. People v. Moore, 155 Cal. 237, 240, 100 Pac. 688. Here there was evidence to warrant the inference that defendant intended to accomplish his purpose by force, and that he desisted only upon the subsidence of his bestial desire following the highly excited condition to which he had wrought himself during his frantic endeavors to satisfy his lustful passion.

We are cited to a number of cases, beginning with People v. Benson, 6 Cal. 221, 65 Am. Dec. 506 and ending with People v. Fleming, 94 Cal. 308, 29 Pac. 647, in which verdicts were set aside upon the ground that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the charge of rape or of assault with intent to commit rape. Those cases are reviewed in People v. Moore, supra. They have no application where, as here, all the outward facts are clearly established, and the only question is as to what the defendant intended, and there is reasonable ground to infer that he intended to use his superior strength to overcome the resistance of the prosecutrix and to accomplish his purpose by main force.

[9, 10] The weakness of appellant's argument lies in the fact that his counsel over-emphasize the necessity for extreme resistance by the woman, and overlook the effect of defendant's intent as manifested by his conduct. Unquestionably, it is essential that in a prosecution for assault with intent to commit rape the state, beyond proving the assault, should prove every fact necessary to constitute rape, except penetration. What the assailant meant to do, however, and the manner in which he intended to accomplish his purpose—whether by persuasion, force, or fear—is, as we have said, a question of fact to be determined by the jury; and an appellate court should not disturb their finding simply because conflicting inferences may reasonably be deduced from the evidence. The importance of resistance by the woman is simply to show two elements of the crime—the assailant's intent to use force in order to have carnal knowledge, and the woman's nonconsent. And though, unquestionably, the jury must be fully satisfied of the existence of these two elements, it would be a reproach to the law to make the crime hinge on the utmost exertion by the woman. Our views upon this phase of the case are so admirably expressed by the Idaho Supreme Court in State v. Neil, 13 Idaho, 539, 90 Pac. 860, 91 Pac. 318, that we quote as follows:

"A * * * number of authorities are cited by counsel for appellant to the effect that the state must show in such cases that the female 'showed the utmost reluctance and used the utmost resistance.' De Voy v. State, 122 Wis. 148, 99 N. W. 455. To our minds the trouble with a number of these authorities is that they reverse the order of the inquiry. They go about inquiring into the kind, character, and nature of the fight put up by the woman, rather than the nature of the assault and evident and manifest purpose and intent of the assailant. For the purpose of reaching the conclusions announced in some of these cases it is necessary to assume that, in the first place, a man has a right to approach a woman, lay hold on her person, take indecent liberties with her, and that, unless she 'kicks, bites, scratches and screams' (People v. Morrison, 1 Parker Cr. R. [N. Y.] 625) to the 'utmost of her power and ability,' she will be deemed to have consented, and indeed to have invited the familiarity. Such is neither justice, law nor sound reason. On the contrary, under the statute a case might arise where a conviction could properly be had for assault with intent to commit rape, and still no personal encounter or contact have ever taken place. In fact, many such cases are reported. 23 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 866, and notes; 1 McClains Cr. Law, sec. 463; 10 Ency. of Ev. 607, and cases cited. * * * It is true that she [the prosecutrix] must not have consented, because if she did there would be no offense; but, on the other hand, men should not be allowed, under the protection of law, to construe every indiscreet act or word of a woman into a consent to carnal knowledge, nor should they be allowed to indulge in presumptions against the virtue and chastity of women. Rather let the evil-minded man incur the risk and hazard of misjudging the opposite sex, and [sic] endeavoring to degrade them and destroy their peace and happiness. A little of this kind of law would go a long way with some of the brutes who unfortunately bear the names of men. There would be far less illicit intercourse if there were no assaults by the seducer in the first place, and the oftener he is brought to justice the less annoyance the community will suffer from the graver offenses toward which his conduct leads."

[11] From all the facts in the record before us the jury may not unreasonably have believed that, throughout the experiences through which she passed while defendant was seeking to gratify his lascivious desires, the prosecutrix acted upon the honest belief that she best could extricate herself from her predicament by remaining calm and collected, relying upon her wits rather than by making an outcry and thus, peradventure, run the risk of being choked into insensibility. At any rate, this is a reasonable hypothesis, and therefore one which may have been deduced by the jury as a reasonable inference of fact from all the evidence in the case. It is quite possible that had we, and not the jurors, been the triers of the facts, we would have reached the conclusion that the prosecutrix, acting the part of a shameless wanton, was but playing upon the defendant's passions in order to gratify some inscrutable desire to tantalize him by exciting without gratifying, his lustful concupiscence. But as we sit in criminal cases solely for the correction of errors of law, we cannot disturb the jury's determination if there be any substantial evidence upon which the verdict may find meritorious support. Whether the apparent resistance of the prosecutrix was genuine and bona fide was a question addressed solely to the consideration of the jurors as the triers of the facts; and we cannot say that there was no evidence to warrant the inference that the prosecutrix offered a sincere resistance in an honest endeavor to protect her honor and virtue.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, J.; CRAIG, J.

(54 Cal. App. 771)
LINEKER v. MCCOLGAN et al. (Civ. 2340.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 31, 1921.)

1. Appeal and error ⇐ 1010(1)—Findings supported by evidence conclusive on appeal.

Findings of trial court, with evidence to support them, are conclusive on appeal.

2. Subrogation ⇐ 22—Mortgagee held not required to pay junior lien.

Trust deed, authorizing trustee and mortgagee to pay any "incumbrance now subsisting or that may hereafter subsist hereon which may, in their judgment, affect certain premises, or these trusts," etc., and that in the event of a sale all sums due the mortgagee under its terms should first be paid out of the proceeds, held not to authorize the mortgagee to purchase a certificate of sale of the land under execution, on a junior lien, and add the amount expended therefor to the indebtedness secured by the trust deed; subrogation only being allowed as a matter of right in such cases when a party is forced, for the protection of his own interests, to discharge an incumbrance which might otherwise jeopardize them.

3. Mortgages ⇐ 144 — Mortgagee could purchase certificate of sale under execution under a junior lien for his own use and benefit.

A mortgagee could purchase for his own use and benefit a certificate of sale under execution, which was a junior lien and included mortgagor's equity of redemption, relation between mortgagee and mortgagor, and between the beneficiary under a trust deed and the maker thereof, not being fiduciary.

4. Mortgages ⇐ 376 — Mortgagee purchasing equity of redemption entitled to surplus on sale under mortgage.

Where mortgagee, or beneficiary under trust deed, acquired mortgagor's equity of redemption by a sheriff's deed in an execution sale, and, for protection of his title so acquired against intermediate liens, caused the land to be sold under the trust deed, he was entitled to receive and retain for his own use and benefit all the proceeds of a sale under the trust deed above the indebtedness secured thereby, to which mortgagor, or maker of the trust deed, would otherwise have been entitled.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; W. H. Langdon, Judge.

Action by Fred V. Lineker against Adelaide McColgan, administratrix with the will annexed of the estate of Daniel A. McColgan, deceased, and others. From a judgment denying injunction and accounting, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Milton S. Hamilton, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Cullinan & Hickey and Alfred J. Harwood, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

FINCH, P. J. The plaintiff appeals from the judgment herein denying his prayer for an injunction and an accounting. While the pleadings are complicated and lengthy, covering 48 pages of the printed transcript, the facts essential to a correct understanding of the issues raised on appeal may be briefly stated.

The plaintiff was the owner of the land described in the complaint, subject to certain incumbrances in the following order of priority: (1) Trust deed to defendant R. McColgan, as security for payment to defendant Daniel A. McColgan of a promissory note for $2,850 and future advances, executed by plaintiff's wife, Norvena E. S. Lineker, prior to her marriage and while she was owner of the land. (2) Attachment liens aggregating $1,241.09. (3) Judgment lien for $1,264.91. (4) Sheriff's certificate of sale of the land under execution for $1,361.20.

Under the foregoing circumstances, Daniel A. McColgan purchased the sheriff's certificate of sale and, at the expiration of the year allowed for redemption, received and recorded the sheriff's deed to the land. On the day that and after the sheriff's deed was received and recorded, the land was sold under the trust deed to R. S. Marshall for the sum of $14,000. Marshall made the purchase for the use and benefit of the plaintiff pursuant to an agreement between them. In order to make up the purchase price of the land and provide additional money for the plaintiff, Marshall, under agreement with the plaintiff, gave his promissory note to Daniel A. McColgan for the sum of $2,455 and, as security for the payment thereof, conveyed the land to R. McColgan and Eustace Cullinan by trust deed.

The complaint alleges that prior to the sale under the trust deed the plaintiff demanded of Daniel A. McColgan an account of the moneys due thereunder, but that the latter refused to give it; that the certificate of sale was purchased and the sale under the trust deed was had pursuant to an agreement between plaintiff and said McColgan to the effect that out of the proceeds of the sale McColgan was to retain whatever was due him under the trust deed and for the purchase of the certificate of sale and also the amount necessary to satisfy the attachment and judgment liens, if such liens were finally adjudged to be valid, and to account to the plaintiff for the remainder thereof; that the plaintiff has repeatedly demanded an accounting but that his demands have been refused; that the whole of the $14,000 was paid to Daniel A. McColgan; that it has not all been consumed "in paying the amount due under the deed of trust * * * or any liens alleged to be subsisting against said real property, but that a large amount of said sum of $14,000 has been retained by said Daniel A. McColgan contrary to and in violation of his agreement with plaintiff, as aforesaid"; and that there is justly due plaintiff from said McColgan more than $2,455, the sum for which the second deed of trust was given. The plaintiff further alleges that the trustees named in the second deed of trust threaten to sell the land thereunder and prays for an injunction to prevent the sale and for an accounting.

[1] The answer denied the alleged agreement between plaintiff and Daniel A. McColgan relative to the purchase of the certificate of sale and the disposition of the proceeds of the sale under the trust deed. At the trial the latter testified that no such agreement was made, and that he acquired the land under the sheriff's certificate of purchase and deed for his own use and benefit and that he never agreed to account to plaintiff for the proceeds of the sale. The court found in accordance with such answer and testimony. The court further found that, at the time the note for $2,455 and the second trust deed were executed, such note "was intended by said Fred. V. Lineker and by said Daniel A. McColgan to be and was in fact an account stated between" them, and "was intended to be and was in fact a final accounting * * * of all debts and financial transactions between them up to the time of said execution of said promissory note." Since there is evidence to support the findings, they are conclusive on appeal.

[2] The trust deed authorized the trustee and Daniel A. McColgan to pay "all or any incumbrance now subsisting, or that may hereafter subsist thereon, which may, in their judgment, affect said premises, or these trusts, * * * and these trusts shall be and continue as security to the party of the third part * * * for the repayment * * * of all amounts so paid out, * * * which disbursement and interest the party of the first part hereby agrees to pay." The trust deed further provided that, in the event of a sale of the land thereunder, all sums due the third party under its terms should first be paid out of the proceeds and the surplus, if any, should be paid to the first party, or assigns.

Appellant contends that under the foregoing provisions of the trust deed "Daniel A. McColgan could not go out and purchase for his own use and benefit the * * * certificate of sale for the reason that this certificate of sale evidenced a lien subsisting upon the real property affected by said deed of trust * * * being one of the class of liens mentioned in said deed of trust." No authority is cited in support of the contention. Since the lien created by the levy of the execution under which the certificate of sale was issued was junior to that of the trust deed, the provisions of the latter instrument did not authorize the beneficiary thereunder to discharge the former incumbrance and add the amount paid therefor to the indebtedness accrued by the trust deed.

"A voluntary payment by a mortgagee of claims against the mortgaged property, which it was not necessary for his own protection that he should pay, does not entitle him to be subrogated to the rights of the creditors whose liens he has discharged." Jones on Mortgages (7th Ed.) § 878.

"Subrogation is only allowed as a matter of right in such cases, when a party is forced, for the protection of his own interests, to discharge an incumbrance which might otherwise jeopardize them." Carpentier v. Brenham, 40 Cal. 239.

The trustee and the beneficiary were authorized to pay only such liens "as affect said premises, or these trusts." This language must be interpreted to mean such liens as might affect the rights of the holder of the superior lien. While they were made the judges as to what incumbrances would affect such rights, they were not authorized to decide arbitrarily, in disregard of the plain fact that the junior lien could in no manner affect their security.

[3] The relation between a mortgagee and mortgagor is not fiduciary. De Martin v. Phelan, 115 Cal. 538, 47 Pac. 356, 56 Am. St. Rep. 115. Neither is that between the beneficiary under a trust deed and the maker thereof. Copsey v. Sacramento Bank, 133 Cal. 659, 66 Pac. 7, 204, 85 Am. St. Rep. 238.

"The acquisition of the equity of redemption by the mortgagee is looked upon with suspicion by the courts, * * * because he has, by reason of his position as creditor, a certain advantage over the mortgagor which may be abused. * * * This objection, however, does not apply with equal force when he purchases the equity of redemption from one who has purchased it of the mortgagor, or when he purchases it at an execution sale had at the instance of a stranger." Jones on Mortgages (7th Ed.) § 870.

"A mortgagee in possession does not stand in such a relation of trust or confidence to the mortgagor as that he is prohibited from purchasing, for his own benefit, the title of the latter on an execution sale against him made upon a judgment in favor of a third person, and he may set up a title so acquired as a defense to an action by the mortgagor or his grantee to redeem." Ten Eyck v. Craig, 62 N. Y. 406; Clark v. Jackson, 64 N. H. 388, 11 Atl. 59.

"The mortgagee in possession may even purchase the equity of redemption at a sale upon an execution in his own favor issued upon a judgment for a debt other than the mortgage debt, and may hold the title adversely to the mortgagor if he does not redeem, as upon a sale upon execution." Jones on Mortgages (7th Ed.) § 712; Trimm v. Marsh, 54 N. Y. 599, 13 Am. Rep. 623.

[4] On acquiring plaintiff's equity of redemption by the sheriff's deed, Daniel A. McColgan, for the protection of his title so acquired against the intermediate liens, caused the land to be sold under the trust deed. Having acquired the plaintiff's title by the sheriff's deed, McColgan was entitled to receive and retain for his own use and benefit all the proceeds of the sale under the trust deed above the indebtedness secured thereby to which plaintiff would otherwise have been entitled. The question of intermediate lienholders' rights to share in such surplus is not involved in this action. The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: BURNETT, J.; PREWETT, Judge pro tem.

55 Cal. App. 134

BILLINGS et al. v. FINN, Sheriff.
(Civ. 3989.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Nov. 9, 1921.)

I. Parties ¶71—Action against persons described as copartners is against the individuals named and not the partnership.

Where the caption and body of the complaint both described the defendants as J. F. and J. D., copartners doing business under the firm name and style of J. F. & Co., the action was against the persons or individuals named, and not against the business conducted under such firm name.

2. Judgment ¶700—Person carrying on business in trade name held not party and not bound by judgment against persons described as doing business under such name as partners.

Where A. F. was doing business as J. F. & Co., under a certificate filed under Civ. Code, §§ 2466-2472, but an action on an obligation signed in such trade-name was brought against J. F. and J. D., described as copartners doing business under such name, neither A. F. nor J. F. & Co. was a party to the action, and an appearance by attorneys for the defendants did not bind them, nor were they bound by the judgment rendered.

Original application by George E. Billings and another for a writ of error directed to Thomas Finn, Sheriff of the City and County of San Francisco, etc. Writ denied.

H. L. Sacks, of San Francisco, for petitioners.

Harry I. Stafford, of San Francisco, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an application for a writ of mandate directing the respondent, Thomas Finn, as sheriff, to sell certain property in accordance with the instructions of petitioners.

The facts upon which the petition is based may be briefly summarized as follows: The petitioners herein in 1916 commenced an action against John Fauser and John Doe, alleging such persons to be "copartners doing business under the firm name of John Fauser & Co." The action was brought upon a bond executed in the name of John Fauser & Co.

Judgment was rendered against "John Fauser and John Doe, copartners doing business under the firm name and style of John Fauser & Co.," for the sum of $1,056.77. Subsequently the plaintiffs caused execution to issue thereon, and the sheriff accordingly levied upon certain personal property, consisting of machinery and stock fixtures located in a building upon Guerrero street, which it is claimed belonged to John Fauser & Co. Thereafter, and before a sale could be had, one Annie Fauser filed with the sheriff a third party claim to the property. Plaintiffs bonded against such claim and demanded that the sheriff proceed with the sale. Thereupon Annie Fauser delivered to the sheriff an undertaking pursuant to the provisions of section 710a of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the sheriff then refused to act further in carrying out a sale.

It appears from the record that one John Fauser owned the business conducted under the name of John Fauser & Co., He died, and Annie Fauser acquired the business, and filed in the office of the county clerk the certificate provided for by sections 2466-2472 of the Civil Code, to the effect that she was conducting said business under the name of John Fauser & Co. Notwithstanding this notice, plaintiffs in the action above referred to, in attempting to proceed against John Fauser & Co., alleged the same to be a copartnership, and sued John Fauser and John Doe as copartners doing business under such copartnership name, and service of summons was had upon John Fauser, a brother of Annie Fauser, who, it appears from the record, had no interest whatever in the business, but was a mere employee therein. Appearance was made in the action for the defendants by a firm of attorneys, and judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiffs as above recited.

[1] It is here claimed by respondent that, as the business was owned by Annie Fauser, she should have been made the party defendant, and that, not having been made such party and never having been served with summons, the judgment here sought to be enforced can in no manner affect the property of "John Fauser & Co.," of which she is the sole owner. It is admitted that the business attempted to be sued and the one against which the levy is sought to be made is one and the same. There is no question that in the action above referred to an attempt was made to sue a copartnership known as John Fauser & Co., for the obligation sued upon was executed under such name. The pleader, however, failed to do so. Both in the caption of the complaint and in the averment as to the relations of the parties the defendants are described as John Fauser and John Doe, copartners doing business under the firm name and style of John Fauser & Co. In such a case the action is against the persons or individuals named and not against the business, although such names are followed by the description "partners doing business under" a designated firm name; and, conversely, where the declaration or complaint is in terms against the firm, the addition of the averment that such firm consists of certain named persons does not render such persons parties individually, but the action is against the firm, such additional averments being considered mere descriptive personæ. 15 Ency. of Pl. & Pr. p. 850; Davidson v. Knox, 67 Cal. 143, 7 Pac. 413.

[2] This being so, neither John Fauser & Co. nor Annie Fauser, the owner of the business, was either sued or served in the action referred to, nor did the judgment run against either of them; it being against John Fauser and John Doe, copartners doing business under the firm name of John Fauser & Co. The defendants were not copartners, so far as the record shows, and did not do business under the firm name mentioned, for Annie Fauser was the sole owner of the business conducted under such name, as her certificate filed in the office of the county clerk showed. Plaintiffs could have ascertained this fact by proper inquiry. They failed to do so and sued the wrong parties. Neither John Fauser & Co. nor Annie Fauser can properly be considered parties to the action, and it follows that appearance by attorneys for all the defendants in no manner bound Annie Fauser nor her pseudonym "John Fauser & Co.," nor were they affected by the judgment.

For the reasons given, the writ is denied.

We concur: WASTE, P. J.; STURTEVANT, Justice pro tem.

55 Cal. App. 112

PEOPLE v. HULBART. (Cr. 815.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Nov. 8, 1921.)

Criminal law §507(7)—Testimony of prosecuting witness incapable of complicity in offense need not be corroborated; "accomplice."

In view of Pen. Code, § 1111, as amended by St. 1915, § 760, defining an accomplice as one liable to prosecution for the identical offense, the testimony of a boy under 14, on whom the lewd and lascivious act defined in section 288 was committed, need not be corroborated, since he could not be guilty with defendant of the offense charged.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Accomplice.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. P. Cary, Judge.

Paul E. Hulbart was convicted of a lewd and lascivious act on the body of a child, and he appeals. Affirmed.

LeRoy D. Barnett and W. W. Judd, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Arthur Keetch, Deputy Atty. Gen., and John W. Maltman, of Los Angeles, for the People.

FINLAYSON, P. J. Defendant, who was convicted of the offense defined in section 288 of the Penal Code, namely, the commission of a lewd and lascivious act upon or with the body "of a child under the age of fourteen years, with the intent of arousing * * * lust," etc., appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

At the time of the commission of the offense of which he was convicted, defendant was a man of about 23 years of age, and his victim, the complaining witness, was a boy of about 12 years. A discussion of the malodorous facts is not necessary, and in view of the nature of the testimony no detailed consideration of the evidence will be made. At the request of defendant the court gave certain instructions respecting the necessity for corroboration of the testimony of an accomplice. These instructions were given upon the theory that, in every case of this character, the complaining witness is, of necessity, an accomplice. Subsequently the court withdrew all of the instructions that it had given relative to the law of accomplices, and specifically instructed the jury that the complaining witness was not an accomplice. It is of this action on the part of the court that complaint is now made.

Appellant contends that, regardless of the boy's age, the evidence shows him to be an accomplice, because of his intelligence, education, and understanding of moral questions, and that therefore the court's withdrawal of its instructions upon the law of accomplices and its refusal to instruct the jurors that if they found the child to be an accomplice his testimony would require corroboration to sustain a conviction, constituted prejudicial error. Without doubt the testimony of an accomplice is required to be corroborated in order to sustain a conviction. Section 1111 of the Penal Code expressly so provides. But, by an amendment of that section in 1915 (Stats. 1915, p. 760), we now have a legislative definition of an accomplice as "one who is liable to prosecution for the identical offense charged against the defendant on trial in the cause in which the testimony of the accomplice is given." The gist of the offense defined by section 288 is that the acts shall be committed upon or with the body "of a child under the age of fourteen years." In the present case the prosecuting witness, a boy of but 12 years, could not be guilty, with this defendant—who was over 14 years of age—of the offense defined in section 288, for, as we have seen, the gist of the offense is that the acts shall be committed upon or with the body of one under the age of 14 years.

It is not necessary to pursue the question further; for it has been expressly decided that there is no statute or rule of law in this state calling for the corroboration of the testimony of the complaining witness in cases of this character, where, as here, the defendant is over the age of fourteen years. People v. Raich, 26 Cal. App. 286, 146 Pac. 907; People v. Troutman, 201 Pac. 928. See, also, People v. Thourwald, 189 Pac. 124.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, J.; CRAIG, J.

55 Cal. App. 22

PITNEY v. PITNEY et al. (Civ. 3961.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Nov. 1, 1921.)

1. Appeal and error §1011(1) — Appellate court cannot disturb trial court's finding of intention to deliver deed.

On the issue of intention as to delivery of deeds, the court on appeal cannot disturb the findings of the trial court, where based on conflicting evidence.

2. Deeds §61—Delivery irrevocably to take effect on grantor's death held valid.

A deed delivered to a third party, to be delivered to grantee on grantor's death, is effective to pass present title, if grantor's intention is to make such delivery absolute, and place it beyond his power to revoke or control the deed.

3. Evidence §461(2)—Indorsement on envelope containing escrow held admissible to show grantor's intent.

On issue as to whether grantor, placing deeds in escrow to be delivered on her death, intended to make absolute irrevocable delivery thereof, an indorsement on the envelope containing the deeds, made according to grantor's instructions at the time they were delivered by her in escrow, and in the presence of the parties, were admissible on the question of her intent, irrespective of proper signature thereto.

4. Deeds §45 — Signature held sufficient, whether considered as grantor's own, or "signature by the hand of another."

Testimony that at the time of delivery of deeds in escrow, and in the presence of all the parties, the grantor's attorney at her request signed her name thereto, followed by mark and the words "her mark," and that grantor at the same time had hold on the pen, showed a signature "by the hand of a party," within the first class of signatures permitted by Civ. Code, §§ 14, 1091, and testimony that such attorney, at grantor's direction, signed her name in her presence and the presence of witnesses thereto, showed a valid signature "by the hand of another," within the second class authorized by the statute, and if the grantor placed her mark at the end of the deed, and her name was written thereon by the attorney, and thereafter plaintiff turned to a notary public present and acknowledged to him that she executed the deed, it was an adoption of the signature, valid as between the parties to the instrument.

Appeal from Superior Court, Lake County; M. S. Sayre, Judge.

Suit by Amanda E. Pitney against George R. Pitney and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Benj. C. Jones, of Lakeport, and Mannon & Mannon, of Ukiah, for appellant.

M. H. Iverson, of Ukiah, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff brought an action against the defendants to quiet her title to certain lands in Lake county. In her complaint she named as defendants her four children and a grandchild, the daughter of a deceased child of the plaintiff, and she also named H. E. Witherspoon, the former attorney of the plaintiff, and the holder of the deeds sought to be canceled and annulled. The summons was served on all of the defendants; three of the defendants appeared and answered, but the other defendants neither appeared nor answered, nor was a default entered. The defendants that answered were George R. Pitney, a son, May Foutch, a daughter, and H. E. Witherspoon. On the issues so made the court tried the case sitting with a jury.

The jury returned a verdict in favor of the defendants, and brought in five special verdicts: (1) The plaintiff did intend, on October 10, 1916, at the time H. E. Witherspoon took the written instruments, that the said instruments should become immediately operative as deeds; (2) that plaintiff did intend, at the time H. E. Witherspoon took the written instruments, that such instruments should presently pass title to the land described in them; (3) the plaintiff did intend, at the time H. E. Witherspoon took the written instruments, to put it beyond her power to make any other disposition of her land; (4) the plaintiff did intend, at the time H. E. Witherspoon took the written instruments, that said Witherspoon should have actual custody of those papers; and (5) the plaintiff did intend, when H. E. Witherspoon took the written instruments, to part with all future control over said instruments.

Thereafter the trial court received and adopted said verdicts as part of its findings, and among other findings the trial court made a finding that the plaintiff did, on the 10th day of October, 1916, deliver the deeds to H. E. Witherspoon and instruct him to hold the said deeds in escrow until her death, and in that event to deliver the said deeds to the several grantees therein named, and the trial court further found that the said deeds were signed, acknowledged, and delivered by the plaintiff to H. E. Witherspoon in escrow, with full knowledge of their nature and effect, and with the intent thereby to surrender up all dominion or control over the said deeds forever, and to place them irrevocably beyond her power to recall them, and with the further intent that title to the said lands should immediately vest in the several grantees named in the said deeds, subject only to a life estate therein reserved to herself, and thereupon the court entered a judgment in accordance with the said findings. Later the plaintiff moved for a new trial; her motion was denied, and she appealed from the judgment under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure. On this appeal the appellant contends that the deeds were never subscribed by her, and consequently, even though delivered in escrow, were never operative to transfer any title, and secondly, that the deeds were never delivered and were inoperative because appellant never intended to vest an estate in the grantees or to put it beyond her power to make a subsequent disposition of the property.

On the 10th day of October, 1916, the plaintiff was about 71 years of age; she was unable to read or write; her general health was fairly good; at the time the survey was made, about a week before, she was well enough that she was out on the farm and directed the surveyors as to the lines that should be run. On the day the deeds were made, she was indisposed and was in bed, but there is no contention that she was suffering from any severe illness at that time. The testimony produced by the plaintiff and that produced by the defendants is to the effect that the plaintiff was in possession of her mental faculties and freely discussed with her attorney the business in hand.

Mr. Witherspoon was called as a witness for the defendants. Among other things, he testified that prior to the 10th day of October, 1916, the plaintiff had asked him if she could make deeds to the grantees named, and yet retain the possession of the property during her lifetime. He said he explained what was meant by escrow deeds, that she could make deeds in escrow, and deliver them to a third party, with the intention of passing present title; that such an act would give her a life estate in the property, and at her death the holder of the deeds would deliver the deeds to the parties she had named, and they could record the deeds. That seemed to satisfy her. He also explained to her that the property in her lifetime was hers to use, that she could rent it, and farm it, and was entitled to the entire income from the property and that the property would only come to the possession of the grantees named in the deeds after her death. After that explanation the plaintiff said that was the way she wanted her property fixed. He explained to her that she could not get the deeds back after placing them in escrow. She said that this was to be her final disposition, she didn't want to be bothered any more about dividing her property, she wanted this to be final. He also told her that it would be necessary to obtain descriptions to be inserted in the deeds. Thereupon the services of a local surveyor were obtained, and later the descriptions were delivered by the surveyor to Mr. Witherspoon.

On October 10, 1916, Mr. Witherspoon took with him Dr. R. G. Reynolds, a notary public, and Mr. D. W. Dillard, and the three went to the residence of the plaintiff. While there the deeds were finally completed, and then one at a time the same were read to the grantor, and thereupon each one was executed in such a manner that the closing part was as follows:

"In witness whereof, the said party of the first part has hereunto set her hand and seal the day and year first above written.

her
"Amanda E. X Pitney. [Seal.]
mark

"Signed, sealed, and delivered in the presence of witnesses to mark: R. G. Reynolds. D. W. Dillard."

Thereupon each deed was acknowledged before Dr. Reynolds as a notary public, and each certificate of acknowledgment is in the ordinary and regular form. Mr. Witherspoon wrote the words "Amanda E. Pitney her mark." Each deed was placed in a separate envelope, and there was written on each envelope an indorsement; the one on the envelope in which the deed to May Fouch was inserted being as follows:

"Escrow Instructions. I instruct H. E. Witherspoon, in whose hands I have deposited a deed to May Fouch, to hold the same during my life, and at my death to deliver the same to the said May Fouch, and I hereby declare it is now my intention to have the said deed delivered in escrow to the said Witherspoon for purpose of delivering said deed at my death to the said May Fouch.

her
"Amanda E. X Pitney.
mark

"Witnesses to mark: R. G. Reynolds, D. W. Dillard. Oct. 10/16."

The signing of the instructions was done in the presence of Dr. Reynolds, Mr. Dillard, and Mr. Witherspoon, and was done in the same manner as the signing of the deeds. Mr. Witherspoon explained the contents of each deed to the grantor before she signed the same, and explained to her the instructions in writing and read the same to her. He testified:

"She was again asked if she understood an escrow deed meant the delivery of a deed to a third party, that she surrendered all future control of the deeds and retained only a life estate in the property, and that that was the effect of the instructions upon the envelope."

After the deeds had been so executed and delivered to the witness, and inclosed in the envelopes and sealed, the witness and Dr. Reynolds and Mr. Dillard left the house, the witness taking the envelopes and their contents with him, and he has retained the same ever since. On cross-examination he stated that in April, 1918, the plaintiff demanded the possession of the deeds, but that he refused to deliver the same. That was the first dissatisfaction he heard expressed. About October 17, 1916, the plaintiff called on the witness and made a will disposing of her personal property. By that will she divided her personal property, giving different things to her children or to her grandchildren. She inserted a clause that the rest and residue of her property was to be divided among her children.

Mrs. Fouch testified that, on the day the survey was being made, her mother had stated that she wanted her property disposed of by deed, and that was her final decision. She also testified that she heard the instructions read to her mother, and heard her mother assent thereto; that she never heard any dissatisfaction expressed until the spring of 1918, although after the deeds had been executed, and before the spring of 1918, she said that her mother had made the remark that the execution of the deeds was a final disposition of the property; she was entirely satisfied and happy, and she was glad to be rid of it and have it off her mind. The defendant George R. Pitney testified that on the morning the survey was made his mother pointed to the land that she was going to deed to him and said—

"I am going to make a final disposition, so I can't change it, if I want to."

There is a stream that crosses or borders the lands conveyed to George Pitney and May Fouch. After the deeds had been made, the plaintiff directed the attention of Mr. Fouch and of George Pitney to the fact that the stream was cutting the banks, and that it would be necessary for them to protect their respective properties. Thereupon those men entered upon the lands and performed the work in question.

Before the trial of the case Dr. Reynolds had died. The witness above referred to, Mr. Dillard, was called by the plaintiff. He testified, among other things, that in every instance Mr. Witherspoon read over the deed to Mrs. Pitney, after which he asked her if that was her wish, if that was the way she wanted the deed, and afterwards she signed it. "As I understand, Mr. Witherspoon signed with her touching the pen." After the deeds had been prepared, Mr. Witherspoon asked the plaintiff, "Now do you want me to take these deeds in escrow, and deliver them to the proper parties?" She said, "Yes." He also testified that the instructions were read over to her and that she signed the instructions.

The plaintiff testified that she did not intend to transfer her property; that at the time of the transaction she did not understand the effect would be that she would lose control over the papers; that she supposed she could get the papers back; that, if she had supposed that she was parting with all control over them, she would not have executed the papers; that she did not understand, at the time of the transaction, that, if she made the papers and left them with Mr. Witherspoon, immediately Mrs. Foutch and George would become the owners of interests in the ranch.

[1-3] From what has been stated, it appears clearly that the intention of the grantor at the time the deeds were made was the real question put in issue by the pleadings and the proof, as introduced by the respective parties, and that it may be conceded that the evidence is conflicting. However, it must also be conceded that there was an abundance of evidence going to support the verdicts and findings. On the issue of intention, this court is not at liberty, therefore, to disturb the findings of the trial court. The appellant cites and relies on the rule stated in Williams v. Kidd, 170 Cal. 631, 151 Pac. 1, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 703. That case, however, does not control in this case, because in that case the finding of the trial court was that Williams never intended that his deed should presently pass the title. On the other hand, this case is controlled by the rule stated in Bury v. Young, 98 Cal. 446, 33 Pac. 338, 35 Am. St. Rep. 186. Referring to that case and similar cases, the Supreme Court said:

"It is well settled that a person may make a conveyance of property and place it in the hands of a third party to be delivered to the grantee named in it on the death of the grantor, and that such a delivery will be effectual to pass a present title to the property to the grantee, if the intention of the grantor is to make such delivery absolute and place it beyond the power thereafter to revoke or control the deed. Where delivery is made under these circumstances and with this intention, it is fully operative and effective to vest a present title in the grantee, the grantor retaining only a life estate in the property and the third party or depositary holds the deed as a trustee for the grantee named in it." Williams v. Kidd, 170 Cal. 631, 637, 151 Pac. 1, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 703. (Italics ours.)

As bearing on the intention of the grantor, the memorandum indorsed on the envelope pursuant to the grantor's request was admissible in evidence. No law required the same to be signed. Whether it was so signed as to comply with the requirements of section 14 of the Civil Code is immaterial; but, whether signed or unsigned, the words of the memorandum, the fact it was read to the grantor, and her declarations concerning the same, were all material facts going to prove or disprove intention and all of them were admissible in evidence. Code Civ. Proc. § 1850; Id. § 1870, subd. 7.

[4] It is earnestly contended by the appellant that the signature by mark, as the same was executed, under the foregoing facts does not constitute a legal signature when measured by the calls of the statute. Civ. Code, §§ 14 and 1091. A signature may be attached (1) by the hand of a party; (2) by the hand of another; and (3) by use of a mark, 36 Cyc. 451. Mr. Dillard testified that, when Mr. Witherspoon had prepared the papers, Mr. Witherspoon wrote "Amanda E. Pitney her mark," on the request of the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff at the same time had a hold on the pen. Such procedure, standing alone, had, in legal effect, the force of being a signing by the plaintiff. Such a signature falls within the first class.

Again, the testimony of the several witnesses called by the defendants was to the effect that when the time to sign arrived, the plaintiff directed Mr. Witherspoon to sign her name, which act was done by him in her presence, and in the presence of Mr. Dillard and of Mrs. Foutch. Such act, without regard to any mark, constituted and was in law the signature of the plaintiff. Such a signature falls within the second class. Our first statement is supported by the ruling in Harris v. Harris, 59 Cal. 620. The second is supported by the doctrine stated in Videau v. Griffin, 21 Cal. 389, 392, where the court says:

"The only exception to the rule that an authority to execute a deed must be conferred by writing is where the execution by the attorney is in the presence of the principal. The exception arises from the doctrine that what one does in the presence of and by the direction of another is the act of the latter—as much so as if it were done by himself in person. The attorney in such case, so far as the signature to the instrument is concerned, is a mere amanuensis of the grantor, and in the affixing of the seal is only the instrument, the hand, as it were, of the grantor. It is not sufficient that the attorney was directed to sign the name of the principal and affix his seal; the execution must be in the immediate presence of the principal, and this fact must be affirmatively established by the party who relies upon it as an excuse for the absence of a power in writing."

And in Jansen v. McCahill, 22 Cal. 563, 565 (83 Am. Dec. 84) where the court says:

"The name of the wife being written by her daughter in her presence, and at her request, made it as much her signature as though it had been written by herself." Ball v. Dunsterville, 4 Term, 313; Gardner v. Gardner, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 483, 52 Am. Dec. 740; King v. Longnor, 4 Barn. & Ad. 647; Frost v. Deering, 21 Me. 156.

In Blaisdell v. Leach, 101 Cal. 405, 408, 35 Pac. 1019, 1020 (40 Am. St. Rep. 65) the court said:

"The Civil Code (section 1091) requires that a grant of real property shall be subscribed by the grantor in order that the title may be transferred thereby, but it is not necessary that the signature of the grantor be affixed by himself. It may be so affixed by another, if done in his presence, and by his own direction (Gardner v. Gardner, 5 Cush. 483); and he may also adopt and ratify a signature made by another without any previous authority (Bartlett v. Drake, 100 Mass. 174; 97 Am. Dec. 92); and the adoption of a forgery has been held to be binding upon the maker of a promissory note. (Forsyth v. Day, 46 Me. 176; Greenfield Bank v. Crafts, 4 Allen, 447)."

In the case of Pierce v. Dekle, 61 Fla. 390, 54 South. 389, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1355, the Supreme Court of Florida was considering the validity of a signature attached to a paper by the direction of the defendant who stood by and saw the signature attached. On page 391 of 61 Fla., page 389 of 54 South., and page 1356 of Ann. Cas. 1912D, the court said:

"One of the defendant's pleas was non est factum. The contention being that before Liddon could have bound the defendant under seal he should have had authority under seal to so bind him. The rule is well settled, both in England and in the United States, that an act done by a person in the presence of another, and by his direction or with his consent, as the signing or execution of a sealed or written instrument, for example, is not regarded as the act of an agent, but is the direct act of the person by whose direction it is done." (Italics ours.)

And again, when the plaintiff had placed her mark at the end of the deed and her name was written thereon by Mr. Witherspoon, and thereafter the plaintiff turned to Dr. Reynolds as a notary public and acknowledged to him that she executed that paper, such act was on her part an adoption of the signature in its entirety and it became her signature. 36 Cyc. 448; 1 C. J. 786; Eadie v. Chambers, 172 Fed. 73, 96 C. C. A. 561, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 879, 18 Ann. Cas. 1096; First National Bank v. Glenn, 10 Idaho, 224, 77 Pac. 623, 109 Am. St. Rep. 204, 209; Blaisdell v. Leach, 101 Cal. 405, 408, 35 Pac. 1019, 40 Am. St. Rep. 65. Such an adopted signature may fall within class 2 or class 3. As the rights of third persons are not involved, the signature was valid as between the parties. Such was the common-law rule. 8 R. C. L. 940. There is no statute in California to the contrary. Certainly section 14 of the Civil Code does not so state. What that section does state is this, and nothing more: That when a signature is by mark, then, and in that event, the signature may not be acknowledged, unless the signature is witnessed by two persons, who must subscribe their own names as witnesses thereto.

Note, however, that under the facts of this case such clause was fully complied with. Furthermore, the same section provides that when a person cannot write he may make his mark, and his name should be written near, by a person who writes his own name as a witness. This is a further call of the statute. A failure to comply with the call is not defined by statute. When the statute was enacted, the Legislature must have realized that instruments signed by mark, witnessed by two witnesses, and acknowledged before a notary public, would be entitled to be received in evidence without further proof. Code Civ. Proc. § 1951. That such papers would be entitled to recordation and that certified copies of the record would carry the same rights. Code Civ. Proc. § 1951. Yet how could it be ascertained from a certified copy who had written the name of the grantor? These considerations impel us to the conclusion that the mode of making the signature by mark is addressed primarily to unacknowledged instruments.

The appellant cites and relies on Sivils v. Taylor, 12 Okl. 47, 69 Pac. 867; Sims v. Hedges, 32 Okl. 683, 123 Pac. 155; Walker Bond & Co. v. Purifier, 32 Okl. 844, 124 Pac. 322; Scivally v. Doyle, 50 Okl. 275, 151 Pac. 618; Watson v. Billings, 38 Ark. 278, 42 Am. Rep. 1; Fakes v. Wilder, 70 Ark. 449, 69 S. W. 260. The first four of those cases are from Oklahoma, and the last two are from Arkansas. We think they do not support the appellant. If a promissory note or other paper is not acknowledged, and the purported signature is by mark, which is not attached in the manner prescribed by statute, the attempted signature is not valid. Such is the rule in Oklahoma and in Arkansas. See above cases. But if a signature attached to the paper was made in a manner not in compliance with the statute on the subject, but the individual nevertheless appears before a notary public and states to that officer that he executed the instrument, the person does, by such act, adopt the purported signature and makes it his own. Such is the rule in other jurisdictions, and is also the rule in Oklahoma and in Arkansas. Campbell v. Harsh, 31 Okl. 436, 439, 122 Pac. 127; Sims v. Hedges, 32 Okl. 683, 687, 123 Pac. 155; Ward v. Stark, 91 Ark. 268, 121 S. W. 382, 384.

We find no error in the record.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

55 Cal. App. 92

LEDBETTER et al. v. BAYSIDE LAND CO.
(Civ. 4049.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Nov. 5, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 3, 1922.)

1. Contracts ⚙️322(4)—Evidence held to support finding that a bulkhead was constructed in workmanlike manner, and in accordance with specifications.

Evidence held sufficient to support finding that a bulkhead was constructed in a good and workmanlike manner, and in accordance with specifications agreed upon at the time of entering into a contract.

2. Trial ⚙️53—Evidence admitted on contract count may support finding on count for work and labor.

Where in one count plaintiff sued for work and labor and materials furnished in repair work, and in another count relied on a specific contract for the work, and the court found against the count relying on the specific contract, a finding for plaintiff for work and labor and materials is supported by evidence that plaintiff had done the repair work introduced in support of the allegations concerning the specific contract.

3. Costs ⚙️238(3)—Where respondent offered to modify judgment by eliminating interest to which he was not entitled, he will be allowed costs.

Where the respondent made an offer to reduce his judgment for an item of interest to which he was not entitled, and before the bill of exceptions was prepared, he will be allowed his costs.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Russ Avery, Judge.

Action by W. M. Ledbetter, John Hess, and W. H. Spear, copartners doing business under the firm name and style of the W. M. Ledbetter Company, against the Bayside Land Company. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Modified and affirmed.

Bordwell & Mathews, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

E. T. Sherer and Emmet H. Wilson, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued upon a complaint setting forth four causes of action—to recover a balance due on an express contract for the construction of a bulkhead at Seal Beach, Orange county; a common count for the balance of the reasonable value for the same work; a common count based upon the reasonable value of labor and materials furnished in repairing a portion of the bulkhead which had been washed out; and a cause of action alleging that this repair work had been performed under an express contract termed a "force account" contract or one calling for payment of all costs plus 10 per cent. Plaintiffs had judgment on the first cause of action in the sum of $326.10, and upon the third cause of action in the sum of $2,081.07. To the amount found due under the third cause of action, the trial court added interest from the date of performance in the amount of $365.06. Plaintiffs stipulate that this interest should not have been allowed, and consent to a modification of the judgment in that respect.

No error is assigned as to the portion of the judgment relating to the first cause of action, but appellant insists that the contract was not fully performed, and that it should have been permitted to set off its damages therefor against the amount found due. As to the portion of the judgment based upon the third cause of action, it is argued that the services were gratuitous, because, the original contract not having been fully complied with, respondents were obligated to make the repairs without cost to appellant, and also that the evidence does not support the finding that the appellant agreed to pay respondents the reasonable value of the labor employed and materials furnished in making such repairs.

[1] As to the first point urged by appellant, it is sufficient to say that the trial court found that respondents constructed the bulkhead in a good and workmanlike manner, and in accordance with the specifications agreed upon at the time of entering into the contract; also that respondents did not agree to construct the bulkhead to prevent the ocean from eroding the land adjacent thereto, and that they did not construct such bulkhead in noncompliance with any of the terms and conditions of the contract, and in an unworkmanlike or negligent manner. While it may be said that inferences might have been drawn from the facts proved which would have supported a contrary finding, nevertheless sufficient evidence was offered to support these findings as made. It is in evidence that the break in the bulkhead was caused by a heavy tide, which in turn was caused by an unusually heavy flow of water, and also that it had been constructed in a dangerous place against the warning and protest of respondents, but upon the insistence of appellant. The danger was increased by the location of a "seal pen" in the channel immediately in front of the place where the break occurred, it being said that this caused a whirlpool in the tide which eroded the bank supporting the toe of the piling of the bulkhead. This seal pen the appellant refused to permit respondents to remove, but ordered them to complete the bulkhead in accordance with the specifications of the contract.

When the break occurred in the bulkhead appellant approached respondents and urged them to make the necessary repairs. The testimony as to what occurred in this conversation is in direct conflict. One of the respondents, who alone participated in the conversation with the representative of appellant, testified that it was agreed that they should make the repairs on the basis of cost plus 10 per cent. This was specifically denied by the representative of the appellant. The court found that the contract had not been made as alleged in the fourth cause of action, but found that the parties did agree that the respondents should furnish all labor and materials for the purpose of repairing the bulkhead, for which appellant agreed to pay the reasonable value thereof. Such reasonable value was found to be $2,081.07.

[2] On this phase of the case it is argued that the evidence was offered in support of the fourth cause of action, and not the third; that the trial court having found that the contract set out in the fourth cause of action was not made, there is no evidence to support its finding upon the third cause of action. The trial court having found that the express contract for the original construction had been duly performed, the question of the expense for the repair work must be treated as though the parties then met for the first time. Respondents then having proved that the labor had been performed and the materials furnished as alleged in their third cause of action, the burden was upon appellant to prove either that it was done gratuitously or under a special contract. In this it failed. The law thereupon implied the promise of appellant to pay the reasonable value of the labor and materials. Evidence was offered showing the exact amount expended by respondents for labor, material, and rental of machinery, etc., to which was added 10 per cent for their time in purchasing materials and overseeing the work. These charges were shown to be reasonable. The evidence fairly met the issues raised in the third cause of action, and appellant could not have been taken by surprise when it was offered. It is of little moment that the same evidence would have supported the allegations of the fourth cause of action if respondents had been successful in proving that a cost plus 10 per cent. contract had actually been made. The work was performed in the latter part of the year 1916, when this form of contract was in common use in both public and private work. The trial court found that the actual cost paid out by respondents for labor and materials going into the work plus 10 per cent. to cover their time was the reasonable value of the entire account, and the evidence fully supports that finding.

[3] Respondents have consented to a modification of the judgment to the extent of eliminating the sum of $365.06 allowed as interest on the amount found due under the third cause of action. It is stipulated that a similar offer was filed with the clerk of the trial court on the 7th day of November, 1919. Though the latter offer was made subsequent to the filing of the notice of appeal, it was nevertheless made before the bill of exceptions was prepared, and nearly a year before the bill was settled and the transcript prepared. If this were the only point involved, it could have been readily adjusted before appellant had incurred any great expense in prosecuting this appeal. For that reason respondents should have their costs.

The judgment is modified by striking therefrom the sum of $365.06 allowed as interest on the third cause of action, and as so modified will stand affirmed. Respondents to have costs.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

54 Cal. App. 719

SHAFFER et ux. v. ARNAELSTEEN.
(Civ. 3551.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 28, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court, Dec. 27, 1921.)

1. Malicious prosecution §64(2)—Finding of want of probable cause warranted.

In an action by an apartment house manager for malicious prosecution on a charge of embezzling $2.50, which she retained as cleaning money, evidence held to warrant the jury in finding that there was no probable cause for the prosecution.

2. Malicious prosecution §64(2)—Finding of want of good faith warranted.

In an action by an apartment house manager for malicious prosecution on a charge of embezzling $2.50, which she had retained as cleaning money, evidence held sufficient to warrant the inference that the amount was appropriated openly, under a claim of title preferred in good faith, so that if she did so claim within Pen. Code, § 511, she was not guilty, even if her claim was untenable, and that defendant believed that she had so appropriated the money.

3. Malicious prosecution §32—Malice may be inferred from want of probable cause.

Though there is no legal presumption of malice from want of probable cause, malice may be found as an inference of fact arising from the circumstances of the want of probable cause.

4. Malicious prosecution §72(3)—Instruction on advice of counsel held not misleading.

In an action for malicious prosecution on a criminal charge, an instruction on the defense of advice of counsel, stating that, if defendant honestly believed the crime had been committed, and sought the advice of counsel, by whom, after a full and fair statement of the facts within his knowledge, he was advised that the facts constituted a crime, his good faith was warranted, was not erroneous, as leading the jury to infer that want of probable cause was proved, if defendant failed to seek the advice of counsel or to make a full and fair statement of the facts, where the court also charged that one is not liable for causing the arrest of another unless he acts through malice and without probable cause, that it was incumbent on plaintiff to prove both malice and want of probable cause, and that defendant had the right to prove that he acted in good faith, without malice and upon probable cause.

5. Malicious prosecution ⚡22—Instruction on advice of counsel held proper.

In an action for malicious prosecution on a criminal charge, an instruction that, to support the defense of advice of counsel, defendant must show that he made to the prosecuting attorney a full, fair, and true statement of all the material facts known to him "of which he had and knew the means of ascertaining," held not erroneous.

6. Trial ⚡260(6)—Requested instruction on probable cause held properly refused in view of instruction given.

In an action for malicious prosecution of a charge of embezzlement, where the court charged that, to justify a finding of want of probable cause, jury must find that amount claimed to have been embezzled was collected in accordance with a contract plaintiff claimed to have entered into with defendant, the court did not err in refusing an instruction that, if the jury believed in the existence of certain alleged facts, they should find there was probable cause for the charge.

7. Malicious prosecution ⚡69—$6,000 damages held excessive.

In an action for malicious prosecution, where plaintiff, who was confined but a few hours secured her release on deposit of $10 bail, and her attorney charged only $10, and, aside from the publicity and other natural concomitants of arrest and detention, there were no special circumstances of aggravation, held that a verdict for $6,000 was excessive by $4,000.

8. Appeal and error ⚡1140(2)—Court may order new trial of action for malicious prosecution where damages excessive, unless plaintiff files remittitur.

In actions for malicious prosecution, the courts have the power, and it is their duty, to order a new trial where the damages are excessive, unless plaintiff files a remittitur.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leslie R. Hewitt, Judge.

Action by J. Shaffer and wife against Ed. Arnaelsteen. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded, unless plaintiff files remittitur, and in such case affirmed.

Harry Lyons, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

George L. Sanders, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

FINLAYSON, P. J. This action for malicious prosecution is founded upon the allegation in the complaint that defendant maliciously and without probable cause had the plaintiff Mrs. Shaffer arrested and prosecuted for the embezzlement of $250. Following her acquittal of the embezzlement charge, Mrs. Shaffer and her husband brought this action against defendant to recover damages for the alleged malicious prosecution. The jury gave plaintiffs a verdict for $10,000. Defendant moved for a new trial on the ground, among others, of excessive damages, appearing to have been given under the influence of passion and prejudice. The trial court ordered that, unless plaintiffs remitted the sum of $4,000 within 10 days, the motion would be granted. Plaintiffs filed the required remission, and thereupon the motion for a new trial was denied. Defendant appeals from the judgment, and urges, as one of his grounds for a reversal, that the sum of $6,000, remaining after the remission of said $4,000, is excessive, and so disproportionate to any damage sustained by plaintiffs as to make it manifest that a verdict for even that amount could have been induced only by prejudice and passion.

The charge of embezzlement upon which Mrs. Shaffer was prosecuted grew out of the following facts: Defendant, at the times herein mentioned, was the owner of the Louvre Apartments in the city of Los Angeles. On June 7, 1919, he employed Mrs. Shaffer as manager. During the oral negotiations prior to the consummation of the contract of employment, and after defendant had offered Mrs. Shaffer a monthly salary of $100 and the further sum of $60 per month with which to pay the janitor service, and after she had told him that $60 a month would not suffice to pay a janitor, defendant, according to the testimony of Mrs. Shaffer and her husband, told Mrs. Shaffer, in substance, that she could collect and keep the moneys paid by the tenants for cleaning their apartments. Mrs. Shaffer's testimony upon the terms of this arrangement was substantially as follows:

"I told Mr. Arnaelsteen that $60 would not be enough to pay a janitor, and that I didn't feel that I could work for less than $100 a month; and Mr. Arnaelsteen says, 'Well, I will tell you, I will make it a little bit better for you; you can collect for cleaning the apartments.' He said that if a tenant should come to rent an apartment for less than a month, that is, for one week or two weeks, we were to charge the tenant in advance for cleaning his apartment, and that that was to be added on to the rent."

Defendant denied that he ever made any agreement whatever with Mrs. Shaffer authorizing her to collect and keep the "cleaning money." In view of the fact that the jury returned a verdict for the plaintiffs, we must consider the case upon the assumption that an agreement was made substantially as testified to by the plaintiffs.

About June 8, 1919, Mrs. Shaffer entered upon the performance of her duties as manager of the apartment house, and remained until the 2d or 3d of July following, when she and her husband, owing to some misunderstanding or disagreement with the defendant, left the Louvre Apartments. On leaving defendant's employ, Mrs. Shaffer and her husband moved into the Hirsch Apartments, about three blocks from defendant's apartment house. Before leaving the Louvre Apartments, Mrs. Shaffer left with defendant her new address and telephone number.

On or about June 20, 1919, and while Mrs. Shaffer was managing the Louvre Apartments for defendant, a Mr. Davis and his wife rented apartment No. 315 for two weeks. Davis paid Mrs. Shaffer $14. She kept $2.50 as a cleaning charge, gave Davis a receipt for $14, and entered upon a book that she kept for defendant the item $11.50, rent for the apartment. This particular apartment had previously been cleaned by Mrs. Shaffer with the aid of the janitor. With respect to this collection Mrs. Shaffer testified substantially as follows:

"Mrs. Davis made the business arrangements with me. She and her husband came in and asked for an apartment. I told them I had one. She says, 'Well, it is only wanted for two weeks.' I told her then that the price of the apartment with a garage would be $11.50, and I says, 'By staying only two weeks you pay in advance for the cleaning of your apartment;' and she said, 'That is perfectly satisfactory with me.' I receipted them for $14, which they paid me."

On July 4, 1919, which was at least one day after Mrs. Shaffer had left defendant's employ and had severed her connection with his apartment house, Davis' tenancy expired. As Davis was leaving defendant told him that he still owed $2.50 for cleaning the apartment; Davis replied that he did not, and told defendant that he had a receipt to show for it. Shortly thereafter Davis produced the receipt for $14 which Mrs. Shaffer had given him, and turned it over to defendant. On July 8, 1919, defendant swore to a complaint in the police court, charging Mrs. Shaffer with the embezzlement of $2.50. Before preferring the charge defendant laid the case before a deputy city prosecutor for the city of Los Angeles, but failed to tell that officer of his agreement with Mrs. Shaffer that she might collect and keep the "cleaning money." Indeed, as we already have stated, defendant at all times stoutly denied that he ever made any such agreement with Mrs. Shaffer. Upon the facts thus given to him, the deputy prosecutor advised defendant that the crime of embezzlement had been committed by Mrs. Shaffer, and thereupon defendant swore to the criminal complaint, and set on foot the prosecution of Mrs. Shaffer for the alleged embezzlement. A warrant was issued, Mrs. Shaffer was arrested, and, on depositing bail money in the sum of $10 was later released, after having been in actual custody not more than four or five hours. A day or so after the arrest, a trial in the police court was had, and Mrs. Shaffer was adjudged to be not guilty of the alleged embezzlement. Shortly thereafter she and her husband brought this action, and obtained the judgment from which this appeal is prosecuted.

[1] It is claimed by appellant that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict; the claim being that the evidence is insufficient to show either a want of probable cause or malice in the criminal prosecution of Mrs. Shaffer. There was sufficient evidence to warrant the jury in finding that there was not probable cause for the prosecution. From the evidence adduced by plaintiffs, the jury was justified in finding that defendant told Mrs. Shaffer that she might collect and keep all moneys paid to her by tenants for cleaning apartments while she was defendant's manager; and also that defendant knew that Mrs. Shaffer was claiming the $2.50 under this agreement. Because Mrs. Shaffer testified that the understanding was that she was to collect the cleaning money in advance, it is argued that the money was to be collected, not only in advance of the commencement of the tenancy, but also in advance of the cleaning for which the charge was made; and, further, that because this particular apartment that Mr. Davis rented had been cleaned by Mrs. Shaffer before Davis' tenancy commenced, she, therefore, was not entitled to retain the $2.50 which she had collected from Davis as "cleaning money." But Mr. Shaffer testified that defendant told himself and wife that the latter could collect the cleaning money from an incoming tenant for cleaning an apartment that had previously been vacated by its former tenant. His testimony on this phase of the case is as follows:

"Q. Did Mr. Arnaelsteen tell you in that conversation that you should collect the cleaning money from the tenants coming in for the cleaning of apartments that had just been vacated? A. Yes, sir. * * * Q. What was your understanding? Did you understand that you were authorized to collect from a tenant coming in moneys for cleaning the apartment after the tenant that had just moved out? A. Tenants moving in we were to collect in advance. Q. For what? A. For two weeks; if they rented for two weeks we were to collect in advance. Q. What were you to collect in advance? A. The cleaning of the apartment. Q. When was the cleaning to be done? A. Before the tenants moved in."

[2] Moreover, conceding that there was room for an honest difference of opinion between the parties as to the proper interpretation to be placed upon their agreement respecting the "cleaning money," still there is sufficient evidence to warrant the inference that the $2.50 which Mrs. Shaffer received from Mr. Davis was appropriated by her openly and avowedly, under a claim of title preferred in good faith. If she did so appropriate and claim the $2.50, she was not guilty of embezzlement, even if her claim was untenable. Pen. Code, § 511. If, therefore, defendant believed, or had reasonable grounds to believe that Mrs. Shaffer had appropriated the money openly and avowedly, under a claim of title preferred in good faith, then he had no probable cause for the criminal prosecution which he caused to be launched against her. That he did believe that she had so appropriated the $2.50 under an honest claim of title thereto is an inference that the jurors were warranted in drawing from all the evidence in the case. As we have stated, the evidence shows that defendant told Davis, as the latter was quitting the Louvre Apartments, that he (Davis) owed $2.50 for cleaning the apartment which he previously had rented; and that to this Davis replied that he did not owe the cleaning money; that he had a receipt to show for it, referring to the receipt for $14 which Mrs. Shaffer had given him when, as defendant's manager, she rented the apartment to him. Knowing that, under their agreement, Mrs. Shaffer was entitled to collect and keep moneys paid to her by tenants for cleaning their apartments, and learning from Mr. Davis that the latter had paid this particular sum of $2.50 to Mrs. Shaffer as such "cleaning money," and knowing, further, that, when Mrs. Shaffer and her husband left defendant's apartment house to move to another near by, they had left with him their address and telephone number, defendant, as an ordinarily cautious man, had reasonable ground to believe that Mrs. Shaffer was claiming the money in good faith under her contract with him, and that, when it was received by her, she had appropriated it as her own openly and avowedly. In short, the circumstances of this case are such that, notwithstanding defendant's positive and sworn assertion to the contrary, the jury may well have inferred that when he preferred the charge against Mrs. Shaffer he did not in good faith believe her guilty of embezzling the $2.50 which she had collected pursuant to her contract.

[3] There is sufficient evidence on the issue of malice. Undoubtedly it devolved upon plaintiffs to establish the fact that the prosecution was malicious as well as without probable cause. But from the want of probable cause the requisite malice could be inferred by the jury. The malice could not be found as a presumption of law from the fact that there was not probable cause for the prosecution, for there is no legal presumption of malice arising from the want of probable cause; but malice may be found as an inference of fact arising from the circumstances of the want of probable cause.

[4] It next is contended that the court committed error by giving an instruction whereby the jurors were told that if the person causing the prosecution of another honestly believes that the crime has been committed, and if, in addition to such honest belief in the guilt of the accused he seeks the advice of counsel learned in the law, and, after a full and fair statement of the facts within his knowledge, is advised by such counsel that the facts constitute a crime, "his good faith in prosecuting the alleged offender is warranted." Appellant's criticism of this instruction is grounded upon the assumption that the jury might have inferred from the language of the court's charge that a want of probable cause is proved if the person causing the prosecution fails to seek the advice of counsel, or if he does not make to counsel a full and fair statement of the facts. It is, of course, true that a complete defense of probable cause may exist without the accuser having sought or taken the advice of counsel. If he has reasonable grounds to believe, and does in fact honestly believe, that the criminal charge is well founded, then he has probable cause for prosecuting the accused regardless of whether he has or has not consulted counsel. In the instant case the defendant pleaded in his answer, as one of his affirmative defenses, that before swearing to the criminal complaint against Mrs. Shaffer he consulted the deputy city prosecutor; that he made to the latter a full and fair statement of all the facts within his knowledge; and that he was advised by the deputy that the crime of embezzlement had been committed. It was to this particular defense that the instruction in question was directed. In this instruction, as well as in others given by the learned trial judge in the course of his charge to the jury, the court was careful to say that a person who causes the arrest of another is not liable therefor unless he acts through malice and without probable cause. In one of its instructions the court specifically charged the jury that it is incumbent upon plaintiffs to prove both malice and want of probable cause, and that—

"On the other hand, the defendant has the right to prove that he acted in good faith, without malice and upon probable cause; that is, upon such facts and information as would induce a reasonably prudent man to believe that the plaintiff Mrs. Shaffer had embezzled the amount mentioned in the complaint, to wit, $2.50."

In a further instruction the court expressly charged the jury that if they found from the evidence that certain matters were true—that certain things specifically enumerated by the court were facts—then they should find that defendant did have probable cause. In the instruction last referred to, nothing whatever is said by the court about seeking the advice of counsel. The entire charge to the jury must be read and considered as a whole. When so considered, it is not possible that, from what was said by the court when specifically charging the jury with respect to one particular affirmative defense set up in defendant's answer—the defense arising out of the advice alleged to have been given to him by counsel—the jurors could have inferred that if a person does not seek the advice of counsel, or make a fair and full statement to a person learned in the law, there necessarily is a want of probable cause.

[5] Criticism is made of an instruction whereby the jury was instructed that—

To support the defense that he acted upon the advice of counsel, defendant is required to show by a preponderance of the evidence that he made to the deputy prosecuting attorney "a full, fair, and true statement of all the material facts known to him, of which he had and knew the means of ascertaining," and that if defendant "had reasonable grounds for believing that other facts existed which would tend to exonerate Mrs. Shaffer from the charge of embezzlement, good faith requires that he should have either made further inquiry with reference to those facts and circumstances, and communicated the information obtained to counsel, or that he should inform counsel of his belief in their existence, in order that the counsel might investigate with reference to them and take into account, in forming his opinion, the information obtained with reference to them."

A substantially identical instruction was considered in Scrivani v. Dondero, 128 Cal. 31, 60 Pac. 463, and held to be free from error. The briefs filed in that case show that there, as here, the appellant attacked the instruction upon the ground that it is error to charge the jury that, to justify the defense that the accuser sought and received the advice of counsel, he is required to prove that he stated all the material facts "known to him, of which he had and knew the means of ascertaining." The instruction, nevertheless, was upheld by the Supreme Court, a hearing in bank was denied, and we, therefore, are constrained by that decision.

[6] The trial court refused to give an instruction requested by defendant charging the jury that if they believed in the existence of certain alleged facts, then they should find that there was probable cause for the criminal charge. In refusing this instruction the court committed no error. Upon this particular matter the jurors were fully and fairly charged in a carefully prepared instruction given by the court, whereby they were told, in effect, that to justify a finding that there was not probable cause they must find that the $2.50 was collected "in accordance with the contract" between Mrs. Shaffer and defendant. This language of the court's instruction is a complete answer to the point specifically presented by appellant as his reason why the refusal to give his requested instruction was prejudicial error.

[7, 8] Some other questions are presented by the record, but none, in our judgment, that requires consideration, except that of whether the verdict is excessive notwithstanding plaintiff's remission of $4,000 in compliance with the trial court's conditional denial of defendant's motion for a new trial. Mrs. Shaffer was in actual confinement but a few hours. She secured her release on the deposit of $10 as bail. The fee charged by the attorney who appeared for her in the police court was but $10. She does, it is true, complain of the publicity that attended her arrest, and also of certain distressing but natural and not unusual circumstances which are said to have occurred while she was in the lieutenant's office at the University Police Station awaiting her release on bail that her husband meanwhile was endeavoring to procure. But beyond these natural and not unusual concomitants of arrest and temporary detention, there were no special circumstances of aggravation. The case was one where but $10 could be assessed for actual expenses, together with general compensatory damages and damages by way of punishment. Under these circumstances, it appears to us quite clear that the verdict, even as reduced under the order made by the trial court, is still outrageously excessive and grossly disproportionate to any injury that plaintiffs may have received and to any punishment that properly could be inflicted upon defendant. There is, it is true, no inflexible or definite rule by which courts can be governed in reviewing verdicts in such cases as this. But that, in actions such as this, we have the power, and that it is our duty, to order a new trial where we are satisfied that the amount assessed against the defendant is excessive, unless the plaintiff shall file a remittitur of damages is thoroughly established in this state. Phelps v. Cogswell, 70 Cal. 201, 11 Pac. 628; Russell v. Dennison, 50 Cal. 243; Daves v. Southern Pacific Co., 98 Cal. 13, 32 Pac. 708, 35 Am. St. Rep. 133. Whilst we do not desire to restrict juries within very narrow limits in assessing damages in this class of cases, we are impelled to the conclusion, after a careful consideration of all the circumstances of the case, that a verdict for more than $2,000 would so far exceed all reasonable bounds as to raise a just presumption that it proceeded from passion and prejudice.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial, unless, within 30 days from the filing of the remittitur in the court below, plaintiffs shall remit from the judgment all except the sum of $2,000 and the costs as at present adjudged therein, neither side to recover from the other costs on this appeal. If such remission be so made, then and in that event the judgment shall stand affirmed; otherwise it shall stand reversed, and the cause shall be retried.

We concur: WORKS, J.; CRAIG, J.

55 Cal. App. 169

REAK et al. v. BORSI et al. (Civ. 4041.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Nov. 14, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 11, 1922.)

1. Judgment $\S$ 256(2)—Cannot stand against defendant in favor of whom material finding is made.

Where a material finding is made in favor of a defendant, a judgment against him is not supported by the findings and cannot stand.

2. Judgment $\S$ 256(2) — Not supported by conflicting findings.

In an action to recover for death caused by automobile owned by one defendant and driven by another, findings that the automobile was owned by one defendant, and that the other defendant was driving it in the performance of services in and about the carrying on of the owner's garage business, for the purpose of procuring and delivering to the garage parts or appliances to be used by workmen therein, although the driver was not at the time of the accident in the actual employment of the owner, were hopelessly conflicting, and judgment against the owner could not stand; it being alleged in the complaint that the driver was the employee of the owner.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Howard A. Peairs, Judge.

Action by Althea Reak and others, copartners transacting business under the firm name of the Citizens' Laundry, against Emma Borsi and another. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed as to one defendant, and reversed and remanded as to the other.

E. J. Emmons and J. W. Wiley, both of Bakersfield, for appellants.

Foster & Barnhart and Kaye, Siemon & Abel, all of Bakersfield, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, J. Walter Reak while in the employment of George S. Kaar and Eliza M. Howell, as copartners, was so injured in an automobile accident that he died. Having become liable to his heirs under the Workmen's Compensation Act, the copartners commenced this action, under the provisions of that act, to obtain a judgment in damages against the person causing the accident. The case was tried before the judge of the trial court sitting without a jury, and the plaintiffs were awarded a judgment against Emma Borsi and George Elliott. The defendants have appealed, and have brought up the judgment roll only. Several attacks are made on the findings. Owing to the conclusion which we have reached as to one of the attacks, we will not discuss the others.

[1] By the very nature of the action it became altogether material to ascertain who operated the car that caused the injury, and in what capacity was the operator acting at the time. The plaintiff alleged:

"That the defendant Borsi who was driving the said automobile at said time, was in the employment of the said George Elliott, and was driving said automobile for, and on account of the business or household of the said George Elliott, and was engaged in the performance of duties in the due course of such employment."

These allegations were denied by the answers of the defendants. The court found that—

"The said defendant Borsi was not at the time of the accident in the actual employment of the said defendant Elliott."

The court did not make a finding on the rest of the allegations quoted from the complaint. The court did, however, make several findings which are wholly without the issues and which will be noticed later. Addressing ourselves to the issues made by the pleadings and the findings thereon, the case is one where a material finding is made in favor of a defendant, and nevertheless the judgment is awarded against him. Such a judgment is not supported by the findings and cannot stand.

[2] Let us now return to the findings which were made, but which did not respond to any issue made by the pleadings, and consider them together with those findings which were responsive. Paragraph VIII is as follows:

"That the said Cadillac automobile at said time was owned by the defendant George Elliott, and the defendant Emma Borsi was driving the same with the knowledge and consent of said defendant Elliott and also for and on account of the business of the said Elliott in connection with a garage which was then being operated in the said city of Bakersfield by him. Although the said defendant Borsi was not at the time of the said accident in the actual employment of the said defendant Elliott, yet she had shortly prior thereto been engaged in his employment, and during said time and also at times immediately prior to the said accident she frequently drove and operated upon the public streets of the city of Bakersfield the said automobile of the defendant Elliott with his consent, and at the time of the said accident she was operating the same with the express consent of the said defendant Elliott, and also in the performance of services in and about the carrying on of the said garage business, namely, for the purpose of procuring and delivering to the said garage certain parts or appliances to be used by the workmen in the repair shop of said garage."

It will be noted that the foregoing paragraph finds: (1) That the defendant Borsi was not at the time of the accident in the employment of the defendant Elliott; and (2) that the defendant Borsi was in the employment of Elliott at the time of the accident and acting within the scope of her employment. The two propositions are hopelessly conflicting, and the case must for that reason be reversed. Zechiel v. Los Angeles Gas & Electric Co., 192 Pac. 720, 722.

It is found that "the defendant Emma Borsi was driving the same with the knowledge and consent of said defendant Elliott." Such fact, standing alone, is immaterial, because it may have been that Elliott had loaned her his car. It is found that "she was driving the machine for and on account of the business of the said Elliott in connection with the garage which was then being operated in the said city of Bakersfield by him." It will be noted that it is not found that Elliott, or any one acting under his authority, directed Emma Borsi to so operate the car. It is found that Emma Borsi "had shortly prior thereto been engaged in his employment." This finding is immaterial under any consideration. The question of importance is not what relation had existed between the defendants at some past date, but what relation existed at the moment the accident occurred. It is also found that "she frequently drove and operated upon the public streets of Bakersfield the said automobile of the defendant Elliott with his consent." The criticism last made applies equally to that finding. It is found that "at the time of the said accident she was operating the same with the express consent of the said defendant Elliott." The most that can be said is that this finding vaguely intimates a direction on the part of Elliott, but it does not directly so state. Again it is found that at said time she was operating the machine "in the performance of services in and about the carrying on of the said garage business, namely, for the purpose of procuring and delivering to said garage certain parts or appliances to be used by the workmen in the repair shop of said garage," but it is not found in this connection whether she was so acting for and on the request of a workman who had no authority from Elliott, or whether she was so acting upon a request made by Elliott, or made by one having authority from Elliott to make such a request.

No attack is made which even tends to show that the judgment was erroneous as to the defendant Emma Borsi. As to her, the judgment is affirmed. As to the defendant George Elliott, the only attack that has any merit concerns paragraph VIII of the findings. As pointed out above, there is much matter inserted in that paragraph that is immaterial. The findings in that paragraph are material in so far as they respond to the allegations contained in paragraph 4 of plaintiffs' second amended complaint, and no further. As to the defendant George Elliott the action is reversed and remanded for the purpose of trying anew the issues made by paragraph 4 of plaintiffs' second amended complaint, and thereafter to render such a judgment as may be proper under the facts and the law applicable thereto.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

55 Cal. App. 59

JAN WAI et al. v. SMITH-RIDDELL CO.
(Civ. 2243.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 4, 1921. Rehearing Denied Dec. 3, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 3, 1922.)

1. Appeal and error $\hookrightarrow$ 931 (1)—Plaintiffs' testimony assumed to be true, where court found for them.

In an action for the price of meat claimed to have been furnished a third person at defendant's request, where the court found in favor of plaintiffs, it must be assumed on appeal that defendant's president promised to pay for the meat as testified by plaintiffs.

2. Corporations $\hookrightarrow$ 428 (6) — Knowledge of president as to his agreement knowledge of corporation.

Knowledge of the president in active management of corporate affairs as to an agreement made by him was the knowledge of the corporation.

3. Corporations $\hookrightarrow$ 432 (12)—Prima facie case of authority of president to make agreement held established.

Where a corporation had leased land at a cash rental to one who was unable to pay for meat for his camp, and could not have continued his farming operations without the corporations' assistance, and its president was in the active management of its affairs, and there was no evidence that he had no authority to promise dealers in meat that he would pay therefor if they would continue to supply the tenant, the evidence made a prima facie case of authority.

4. Evidence $\hookrightarrow$ 158 (28), 318 (1), 354 (13)—Tags showing weight of meat sold and account books made up therefrom held admissible.

Where one member of a firm of meat dealers testified that when he got orders for meat he made out tags showing the weight of the meat, and gave them to other men, who cut and wrapped up the meat, and put one of the tags inside, the other being kept in the dealers' office, and the person receiving the meat testified that he got a copy of the tags with every shipment, and recognized those produced as comparing with the ones received, the tags were admissible over the objection that they were hearsay and not the best evidence, and an account book made up from the tags was also admissible.

5. Frauds, statute of §23(3)—Promise to pay for meat furnished defendant's tenant held original.

Where at the time defendant's president paid plaintiffs for meat furnished defendant's tenant, plaintiffs refused to give the tenant any further credit, and the president told them to go ahead and send meat to the tenant, and defendant would pay therefor, the promise was an original promise not within the statute.

6. Sales §353(4)—Complaint held to support recovery for reasonable value of goods sold.

A complaint, alleging that defendant was indebted to plaintiffs in a specified sum on account of meats sold by plaintiffs to defendant at defendant's special instance and request, and delivered to a third person at defendant's instance and request, was sufficient to uphold a judgment for the reasonable value of the meat as against the objection that it was based on an express contract.

On Petition for Rehearing.

7. Corporations §432(2)—That person is president is to be considered on question of authority to make contract.

While no presumption arises that a person had authority to make an agreement for a corporation from the mere fact that he was its president, such fact may be considered with other circumstances, and it may more readily be inferred from circumstances proved that the president had authority to make a particular contract than in the case of one having no official relation to the corporation.

8. Corporations §432(7)—Silence when furnished with bills for goods delivered on president's order held evidence of authority.

Where a corporation had knowledge of its president's agreement to pay plaintiffs for meat furnished a third person, and received quarterly statements showing the meat furnished, but with such knowledge remained silent for over nine months before denying its liability, its silence was evidence of actual authority in the president to make such agreement.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Action by Jan Wai and others, copartners doing business as Wing Lee & Co., against the Smith-Riddell Company. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Driver & Driver, of Sacramento, and G. W. Bedeau, of Marysville, for appellant.

Otis & French, of Sacramento, for respondents.

FINCH, P. J. Plaintiffs were given judgment for the value of meats alleged to have been "delivered to T. Tominaga at the special instance and request of said defendant."

The evidence shows without conflict that the defendant leased certain lands in Yolo county to Tominaga for a term of one year beginning December 1, 1917, at the annual rental of $12,134, payable as follows: $6,067 on or before July 15, 1918, and $6,067 on or before September 1, 1918. Tominaga gave the defendant a mortgage on the crops to be grown on the land, as security for the payment of the rent, authorizing the defendant to take possession of and sell the crops grown in case of default in payment. Plaintiffs were furnishing Tominaga with meat to supply his camp, and early in 1918 they informed him that they could not deliver any more meat until he paid his bill for that already furnished. Not having the money with which to pay the bill, Tominaga informed the defendant of the situation, and requested the latter to make payment in his behalf. Thereupon the defendant wrote the plaintiff as follows:

"Telephone Market 1022. F. H. Smith, President. A. McD. Riddell, Secretary. Smith-Riddell Co. Cable Address Alfalfahay. Codes used A. B. C. 4th and 5th editions. Alfalfa Producers and Dealers. Ranch and Warehouses, Lisbon District, Yolo County. Office and Warehouse, 381-389 Seventh Street. San Francisco, Cal., Feb. 2, 1918. Wing Lee & Co., 1122 Third St., Sacramento—Dear Sir: I will be in town on Wednesday, Feb. 6th and will call and see you about the bill that our tenant T. Tominaga owes you for meat $460.75. Very truly yours, Smith-Riddell Co., 381 7th Street, San Francisco."

[1] Early in the following March, Mr. Smith, who was president of the defendant corporation, called on the plaintiffs at their place of business, and gave them the defendant's check for the amount of the bill. Smith testified that at that time there was due Tominaga from the defendant sufficient money to pay the bill. Jan Wai, one of the plaintiffs, testified that, after Smith paid the bill, he asked:

"'When you send meat?' Bookkeeper said: 'No.' He said: 'Why not?' 'Because I no give Tominaga credit.' He said: 'You send him order, then I come pay you every, we pay you every three months.'"

Chang Sing Ho, another plaintiff, testified that Smith said:

"Go ahead; send meat to Tominaga; we pay every three months his company. * * * Until we stop, just go stop—don't any more. * * * You ship meat all right; send me bill; never mind about him; we are going to pay for it."

shipping tags, showing the weight of each shipment, were produced and testimony was introduced as to the reasonable value thereof. This testimony was not contradicted, and was corroborated by Tominaga.

[4] The admission of the shipping tags in evidence is assigned as error. Plaintiff Chang Sing Ho, who was one of the partners and the bookkeeper for the firm, testified:

"Most of the time Jan Wai shipped the meat down to Tominaga, I made out the tag; the other man wrapped the meat. I cut most of the meat shipped to Tominaga; very seldom the other boys cut it. The other men wrapped the meat. I got the order for so much meat, so I cut it up and told the man to ship it. I gave the tag I made out to the boy. I gave the other boys the tags so they would know how much meat to cut. They would cut the meat, wrap it up in a paper, and put one of the tags inside; the other tag I kept in the office."

This testimony, corroborated as it is by that of Tominaga hereinbefore set forth, furnished sufficient foundation for the admission of the tags in evidence. They were not subject to the objection made "that they are hearsay, and not the best evidence." The account book, made up of entries from these tags, was properly admitted.

[5] The oral agreement to pay for the meat delivered to Tominaga is not within the statute of frauds. The complaint and the evidence show an original promise on the part of the defendant. "If goods are delivered by the seller to one person on the promise of another to pay for them and solely on the promisor's credit the promise is original and not within the statute." 25 R. C. L. 488.

[6] Appellant argues that the allegations of the complaint show an express contract, and are not sufficient to uphold the judgment for the reasonable value of the meat furnished. The complaint alleges that—

"Said defendant became and now is indebted to plaintiffs in the sum of $1,532.40, for and on account of goods, wares, and merchandise, to wit: Meats sold by plaintiffs to defendant at the special instance and request of defendant and delivered to T. Tominaga at the special instance and request of said defendant."

It is sufficient to cite the case of Merchants C. Agency v. Gopcevic, 23 Cal. App. 216, 137 Pac. 609.

Appellant makes many other assignments of errors of minor importance. A discussion of them would unduly lengthen this opinion. It is sufficient to say that they are without substantial merit.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: BURNETT, J.; PREWETT, Justice pro tem.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. [7, 8] In its petition for a rehearing the appellant states:

"It is admitted in this case that Smith had no actual authority to enter into the alleged contract."

No such admission appears in the record, and this court arrived at a contrary conclusion. The case was not decided on the theory of ostensible agency or authority, or on the doctrine of estoppel, but upon the conclusion announced that the evidence showed a prima facie case of actual agency and authority. Neither was the decision based upon any presumption that Smith had authority to make the agreement, arising from the mere fact that he was president of the defendant corporation. While such presumption does not arise, it may more readily be inferred from circumstances proved that the president of a corporation is clothed with authority to make a particular contract than one who stands in no official relation to the corporation. In other words, the fact that one is president may be considered with other circumstances shown in determining whether such person was authorized to act for the corporation. The statement in the opinion that, "Smith, being the principal officer of the corporation, must be presumed to have had the implied power to make all contracts which are essential to the successful prosecution of the business," must be understood in the light of the evidence showing his activities in the conduct of the defendant's affairs, and the latter's attitude toward the same. Smith arranged for the lease to Tominaga of the defendant's lands, and, pursuant to defendant's letter to plaintiffs, paid Tominaga's bill with a company check. When asked if he usually carried company checks with him, he testified:

"I generally carry some blank checks, because when I am buying hay around in the country, I have to pay the farmer a deposit; that is why I carry blank checks."

As stated in the opinion, the defendant must be presumed to have had knowledge of Smith's agreement in its behalf with the plaintiffs. Newell-Murdock Realty Co. v. Wickham, 190 Pac. 359. It received quarterly statements, showing that the meat furnished to Tominaga was being charged to the defendant. With all this knowledge, it remained silent for nine months. Under appropriate pleadings, the defendant would have been estopped by its conduct from disclaiming liability. Independent of any question of estoppel, the defendant's silence is evidence of actual authority in Smith to make the agreement. Even in a criminal case the silence of a defendant when he ought to speak is evidence that the fact is in accordance with the statement which he fails to deny. It cannot be less in a civil action. The defendant offered no evidence whatever to prove that Smith was not authorized to make the contract. While Smith was a witness for defendant at the trial, he testified to nothing from which even an inference could be drawn that he acted without authority. While the burden of showing authority rested on the plaintiffs, yet, in view of the rule that "evidence is to be estimated not only by its own intrinsic weight, but also according to the evidence which it is in the power of one side to produce and of the other to contradict," the plaintiff must be held to have sustained the burden to the extent of proving a prima facie case.

The petition for a rehearing is denied.

55 Cal. App. 160

TASHJIAN v. KRIKORIAN. (Civ. 4018.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California, Nov. 12, 1921.)

1. Appeal and error §1011(1)—Rule upholding court's findings applies particularly where testimony is confused.

The rule that the appellate court is bound by the findings of the trial court where the evidence is conflicting is more peculiarly efficacious where most of the witnesses, including the parties, were foreigners and expressed themselves with difficulty, so that the record was in apparent confusion.

2. Appeal and error §931(1)—All testimony supporting findings is assumed to be true.

In reviewing the trial court's findings, all statements appearing on the record, or matters reasonably inferable therefrom, which support the finding, are assumed to be true, and those in conflict therewith are assumed not to be true.

3. Evidence §568(1)—Purchaser's testimony he could borrow necessary money is insufficient to show ability.

The testimony of a prospective purchaser procured by a broker that he could have borrowed the money necessary to make the required cash payment does not establish his ability to buy, where such testimony was merely the conclusion of the purchaser, and he had no contract for the loan.

4. Appeal and error §1010(1)—Finding supported by evidence not disturbed.

Where the record contains evidence to support the finding of the trial court, the finding will not be disturbed on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; D. A. Cashin, Judge.

Action by S. K. Tashjian against G. Krikorian to recover commissions on sale of real property. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

A. W. Carlson, of Fresno, and Walter Sorenson, for appellant.

Arsen Yeretizian, of Fresno, for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment against him in an action to recover commissions alleged to be due him upon a written contract with the defendant for the sale of defendant's real property in Fresno county. The trial court found that neither during the term of the agreement between the parties, nor thereafter, did the plaintiff find a purchaser for the property who was ready, willing, and able, or ready, or willing and able, to purchase said premises according to the terms of said agreement. There is only one question presented to us upon appeal and that is the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain this finding.

[1] While this court is, necessarily, always bound by the findings of a trial court in a case where the evidence is conflicting, there are, nevertheless, certain types of cases in which this rule is more peculiarly efficacious than in others. The record here presents such a case. Almost all the witnesses, including the parties to the action, struggled to express themselves in a language which was unfamiliar to them. This difficulty, added to their apparent confusion when called upon to remember and state accurately and precisely important matters, leaves the printed pages rather meaningless and contradictory in many instances. It is in such situations that the trial judge is able and empowered to use his broad experience with witnesses and his observation of their manner upon the stand, and the innumerable other intangible things which throw light upon the testimony of a witness, in order to clarify vague and uncertain statements, to reconcile contradictions and explain inconsistencies. Without such aids, it would be difficult indeed to arrive at the facts in records such as the one before us upon this appeal.

[2] We are bound to assume that all statements appearing on the record, or matters reasonably inferable therefrom, which support the finding of the trial court, are true, and that statements in conflict therewith are not true. In the light of such an assumption, we have this picture: Plaintiff is a real estate dealer, and through his agency the defendant has purchased a vineyard, the subject of this controversy. Before said purchase was completed, it was suggested that plaintiff resell the vineyard for the defendant at a price in excess of the amount he had paid for it. Such an agreement was entered into between the parties, and after the defendant had become the owner of the vineyard this agreement was delivered to the plaintiff. By this agreement plaintiff was to have the right to sell the vineyard and some personal property for $60,000; $16,000 cash, balance in annual payments of $10,500. Plaintiff was to receive $2,400 commission upon such a sale. This agreement was dated January 7, 1920. On Saturday afternoon, which plaintiff stated was about February 5, but which the calendar discloses was February 7, 1920, the plaintiff called at defendant's ranch with Mr. Keoseyan. The plaintiff asked the defendant for a few days' additional time in which to find a purchaser, stating that his time to carry out his contract was about to expire. This the defendant refused, stating that the time was up that day. Keoseyan looked about the ranch and asked some questions regarding the crop, stating at the same time that he did not wish to buy the place. After several requests by the plaintiff that the defendant extend the time within which the plaintiff might sell the ranch, and defendant's repeated refusals to do so, plaintiff and Keoseyan left the ranch. On the way into Fresno, plaintiff offered to give Keoseyan $2,000 of his $2,400 commission if he would sign a contract to purchase the defendant's ranch; plaintiff stating at the time that he was going to lose the commission entirely if he did not make a sale at once. The parties then drove into Fresno and stopped their automobile on a street corner and Keoseyan signed a preliminary agreement and gave plaintiff his check for $100. Plaintiff then went to a restaurant and met there another real estate dealer, and took him out to the defendant's ranch as "a witness" to the scene which he seemed to have anticipated, and in which, apparently, he wished to be fortified with legal testimony. Plaintiff and "his witness" reached defendant's ranch about 9 o'clock in the evening, and plaintiff called the defendant out of his house and told him he had sold the ranch and had taken a deposit of $100, and demanded that defendant sign and approve the preliminary agreement. Defendant was unable to read English, and stated that he would consult his attorney in Fresno on the next day and would sign no agreement until it was explained by his attorney; that plaintiff should come to the attorney's office on Monday and "fix" it up. Plaintiff then handed to defendant a written notice signed by himself and by his "witness" Knapp, which read as follows:

"I herewith hand you notice notifying you that I have this day sold your place, and have a deposit on it, being the lot No. 9 and 10 in Indianola Colony in section No. 10, township 14 south, range 22."

On the following day, Sunday, Keoseyan took his family to the property and looked over the ranch to see if the place was "any good"; "if the place was not any good, I lose $100 and give it up." On Monday morning the defendant came to Fresno to the office of his attorney, and later he found the plaintiff on the street and together they went to the office of defendant's attorney. There the defendant asked the plaintiff to let him see the preliminary contract. Plaintiff refused to produce the contract, but said he would bring the purchaser. He failed to bring the purchaser to the defendant on Monday, and failed again on Tuesday, but finally found him and brought him to the office of the defendant's attorney on Wednesday. The plaintiff and purchaser were accompanied at this interview by an attorney, and discussions and negotiations were entered into with regard to numerous matters such as the amount of the deposit, interest upon the unpaid balance, etc., resulting in the parties separating without signing any contract for the purchase and sale of the property. The details of this interview are not material, according to the view we take of this record, because it does not appear from the evidence that the purchaser was able to buy the property according to the terms of the written contract between the plaintiff and defendant.

The facts herein recited as preliminary to this main interview are set out as throwing some light upon the character of this entire transaction. The crucial point is that the contract between the parties called for a cash payment of $16,000. Keoseyan testified:

"Q. Now, just a while ago you said you had about $10,000 in the bank. How do you know it was $10,000? A. I don't know. I said, 'I think I have $10,000;' I am not sure—"

"The Court: Just a minute, do you think you had $10,000 in the Farmers' Bank? A. I think, I am very sure."

"Q. Did you have any other money more? A. Yes: I had a little at the Selma First National Bank."

"Q. How much? A. It is in still and I had some in Reedley First National Bank."

"Q. How much money did you have altogether? A. I think I had over $10,000 anyway, altogether, and I can raise $2,500."

"Q. Wait a minute. Had you made any arrangement to get the balance of it? A. No; I did not."

[3] It is true Keoseyan testified that he bought other property two months later, but there is no evidence of what he paid for the other property, or of how much cash he paid, or of any other definite matters from which one must conclude that he would have had $16,000 available two months earlier. His statement that he was sure he could have borrowed the money from some one, without showing that there was any one legally bound to loan him this money, is insufficient to establish his financial ability to make this purchase. This question is considered in the case of Mattingly v. Pennie, 105 Cal. at page 522, 39 Pac. 203 (45 Am. St. Rep. 87), where it is said:

"That testimony amounted to nothing more than a statement of his belief that persons not bound by contract to do so would have advanced the money; and it is clearly not such evidence as, under section 1835 of the Code of Civil Procedure, would justify the jury in finding that he had the ability to pay."

[4] The record contains evidence to support the finding of the trial court regarding the financial inability of the purchaser secured by plaintiff to make the purchase. Under such circumstances, we will not disturb that finding, and upon such a finding the judgment was a proper one.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: NOURSE, J.; STURTEVANT, J.

55 Cal. App. 202

LAYTON v. NEW YORK LIFE INS. CO.
(Civ. 3936.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Nov. 15, 1921.)

1. Insurance — 379(1) — Insured bound by statements made in application.

Where insured over his own signature declared that he had carefully read each and all of the answers given to the medical examiner, that each was written as made by him, and that each was full, complete, and true, such statements thereby became his solemn representations, and of the same binding force upon him as though he had himself written them in his own handwriting and signed them.

2. Insurance — 291(1) — Misrepresentation of facts relative to health fatal to contract.

Misrepresentation or concealment of the facts relative to the health of those whose lives are insured is peculiarly fatal to contracts of life insurance, because the companies necessarily rely upon the statements and acts of the insured in making the contract.

3. Insurance — 379(5) — Effect of fraud, mistake, or negligence of agent filling out application for life insurance.

When insured in good faith makes truthful answers to the questions contained in the application, but his answers, owing to fraud, mistake, or negligence of the agent filling out the application, are incorrectly transcribed, the insurer is estopped to assert their falsity as a defense to the policy; but there must be no complicity on the part of the insured, actual or implied, and the duty of insured upon receiving his policy is to read it, and it will be assumed that he did so, and discovered the false representations, and failure then to promptly notify the insurer thereof is bad faith which is fatal to the policy.

4. Insurance — 379(7) — Agent's representatives of insurer and not of insured.

Acts of insurance agent in filing out application, whether he is a general agent with power to issue policies, a soliciting agent, or merely a medical examiner for the insurer, are the acts of the insurer, and he cannot be regarded as the agent of the insured, even though it is so stipulated in the application.

5. Insurance — 379(1) — Insured presumed to know contents of contract, including application.

Where one holds a life policy, referring in apt terms to the warranties and representations contained in the application annexed, for a reasonable time, he is conclusively presumed to know the contents of the contract, and any untruthful answer, plainly written in the application by the agent or medical examiner through mistake, negligence, or fraud, and is estopped to assert that he had no knowledge of the untruthful answer.

6. Pleading — 237(6) — Refusing to allow amendment to conform to proof held error.

In action on life policy, where defendant based its answer on statement in proof of death that death resulted from carcinoma of the mediastinum, and alleged that insured was not in good health at the receipt of the policy, and there was some conflict in the testimony as to the exact nature and name of the malady, the court erred in not allowing an amendment to the answer to conform to the proof in this regard.

7. Appeal and error — 1122(2) — Appellate court will not remand, with directions which would be in effect the making of new findings.

Where judgment against life insurance company was reversed by reason of fraud in answers contained in application, appellate court will not remand the case to the lower court, with directions to enter a judgment in favor of plaintiff for an amount tendered plaintiff as premiums paid, since to do so would be in effect the making of new findings for the lower court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; J. Q. White, Judge.

Action by Hazel F. Layton against the New York Life Insurance Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

McCutchen, Olney, Willard, Mannon & Greene, of San Francisco (James H. McIntosh, of New York City, of counsel), for appellant.

Robert Duncan, of San Francisco, and Thomas & Thomas, of Ukiah, for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. The plaintiff, as beneficiary, brought this action upon a policy of insurance in the sum of $2,000 issued by the defendant on the life of Archie B. Layton, her husband. Judgment was rendered in her favor, from which the defendant insurance company appeals, relying upon the two defenses interposed in the court below and reasserted here: First, that the insured was not in good health at the time the first premium was paid and the policy of insurance delivered, and never again was in good health during his lifetime; and, second, that it is entitled to rescind, and has rescinded the contract of insurance because of written misrepresentations made by the insured in his application, which became a part of the policy.

In response to the issues tendered by these defenses, the lower court found that at the time of the delivery of the policy and payment of the first premium, the insured was in good health, and was not at any time prior or subsequent thereto suffering from, or afflicted with carcinoma of the mediastinum (a species of cancer), or any form of cancer whatever from which appellant contends the insured subsequently died, and that he was not at the time of the payment of the first premium afflicted with, nor suffering from the malady which subsequently caused his death. It also found that at the time of the examination by the medical examiner of the defendant company, the decedent made true and correct statements concerning matters relative to his health, and did not make any false representations of any kind for the purpose of deceiving or defrauding the defendant, but that the medical examiner of the defendant insurance company, with full knowledge of the facts, and in his own handwriting, wrote down the alleged erroneous answers to the questions.

There is no conflict in the record of the principal facts of the case. Layton made application to the appellant for insurance on his life September 25, 1917, and was examined by the medical examiner of the company at Ukiah the next day. He received the policy October 11, following, and paid the first premium within a day or two thereafter. He died about six months later. About a year before the issuance of the policy, Layton visited Dr. Rea at Ukiah, and asked him to remove a lump from his throat, which bothered him a great deal with pains radiating up the side of his neck. The doctor examined "the growth," as he described it, but not being able to exactly determine its size, refused to remove it unless the patient went to the hospital. That was not done, and the operation was not performed. During the month of January following, and some eight months before applying for insurance, Layton consulted Dr. Van Allen about the lump, or swelling, on his throat. The doctor inserted a local anæsthetic, and made a small incision, removing therefrom what appeared to be several pieces of the sac of the cyst. He then drew the incision together with stitches, and continued for some time to treat and dress the wound. It was slow in healing, and "broke out again a time or two," discharging a serum which necessitated the insertion of a small curet, or drain. The treatment lasted for one month, during which the doctor treated the patient some 14 times. Shortly after ceasing his visits to Dr. Van Allen, Layton was taken to Dr. Rea again by his wife. He was very weak suffering from a very serious hemorrhage from the incision on his neck, which Dr. Rea stopped. During the month of July following Dr. Cleland, who was the medical examiner of the defendant insurance company, removed a piece of emery steel from Layton's eye, and on three occasions treated a small ulcer on his neck at about the same spot previously treated by Dr. Van Allen and Dr. Rea. On August 10, 1917, about 1½ months before making application, Layton again visited Dr. Van Allen. He complained of a "choking sensation, like as though something closed up the throat." The doctor did not regard this as serious, and administered a simple remedy.

All of these consultations and treatments—all but one within 9 months of the date of the application—are undenied. The doctors themselves testified to the facts and to the dates. Yet in the application for insurance it is represented that no physician had been consulted by the insured for any ailment within five years. Just how that occurred is best shown by the certificate of the medical examination, and by the testimony of Dr. Cleland, the medical examiner at Ukiah for the insurance company. Layton was asked several questions as to whether or not he had suffered from certain specified ailments, or disease, or had ever had any accident or injury, to all of which he answered, "No". The examination proceeded to question 9-d in the application, which reads as follows: "Have you consulted any physician for any ailment or disease not included in your above answers?" Layton's reply to the doctor was, in substance:

"You remember that I was here in your office; you treated this sore on my neck, and you remember you knew that the trouble was referred to in my conversation I had with Dr. Rea in regard to it previously.' I [the doctor] said, 'Yes, I think I know about that; are you all right from it now?' He [Layton] said, 'Yes, I think it is all right; don't give me any trouble.'"

Dr. Cleland thereupon wrote down the answer "No." When the doctor asked Layton question 9-e,

"What physicians, if any, not named above, have you consulted or been treated by in the last five years, and for what illness or ailment?"

—Layton replied:

"Only in regard to this thing on my neck which you treated and Dr. Van Allen treated, and Dr. Rea treated."

Dr. Cleland thereupon wrote down the answer "None."

[1-5] By the terms of the policy of insurance delivered to plaintiff's husband, the policy itself and the application therefor, copy of which, including the questions and answers making up the medical examination, was attached to the policy, constituted the entire contract between the company and the insured. Layton over his own signature declared that he had carefully read each and all of the answers given to the medical examiner, that each was written as made by him, and that each was full, complete and true. The statements contained in the application thereby became his solemn representations, and of the same binding force upon him as though he had himself written them out in his own handwriting and signed them. Westphall v. Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., 27 Cal. App. 734, 738, 151 Pac. 159. It needs no citation of authority to support the rule that misrepresentation or concealment of the facts relative to the health of those whose lives are insured are peculiarly fatal to contracts of life insurance, because the companies necessarily rely upon the statements and acts of the insured in making the contracts. See Equitable Life v. McElroy, 83 Fed. 631, 28 C. C. A. 365; Whitney v. West Coast Life Ins. Co., 177 Cal. 74, 80, 169 Pac. 997. But it has been held in this state that when the insured in good faith makes truthful answers to the questions contained in the application, but his answers, owing to the fraud, mistake, or negligence of the agent filling out the application, are incorrectly transcribed, the company is estopped to assert their falsity as a defense to the policy. The acts of the agent, whether he is a general agent with power to issue policies, a soliciting agent, or merely a medical examiner for the company, are in this respect the acts of the company, and he cannot be regarded as the agent of the insured, even though it is so stipulated in the application. Lyon v. United Moderns, 148 Cal. 470, 475, 83 Pac. 804, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 247, 113 Am. St. Rep. 291, 7 Ann. Cas. 672; Westphall v. Metropolitan Life, supra, 27 Cal. App. 739, 151 Pac. 159. Notwithstanding the justice of this rule, it is the statement of only a part of the law of the case, and is subject to the limitation that there must be no complicity on the part of the insured, actual or implied. The element of continued good faith enters into such transactions. The policy of insurance in this case was almost immediately delivered to Layton. It was his duty to read it, and we may assume that he did so. He knew, therefore, that the application and the certificate of the medical examiner, each of which was an integral part of the policy and the consideration therefor, contained two very material and vital statements that were false. His legal and moral duty was then to notify the company of the fraud that had been perpetrated. By his silence he virtually approved of the act of the medical examiner and became responsible for it. By his conduct he made Dr. Cleland his agent as well as the agent of the company, and the forfeiture of the policy is the result. Goldstone v. Columbia Life Ins. Co., 33 Cal. App. 119, 123, 164 Pac. 416. To the same effect is the decision of our Supreme Court in Madsen v. Maryland Casualty Co., 168 Cal. 204, 142 Pac. 51, and the opinion of Mr. Justice Field in New York Life Ins. Co. v. Fletcher, 117 U. S. 519, 6 Sup. Ct. 837, 29 L. Ed. 934, which seems to be the leading case on the subject, and which was affirmed in Mutual Life Insurance Co. v. Hilton-Green, 241 U. S. 613, 623, 624, 36 Sup. Ct. 676, 60 L. Ed. 1202. Where one holds a policy, referring in apt terms to the warranties and representations contained in the application annexed, for a reasonable time, he is conclusively presumed to know the contents of the contract, and the untruthful answers plainly written in the application. He is thereby estopped to assert that he had no knowledge on the subject. Modern Woodmen v. Angle, 127 Mo. App. 94, 116, 104 S. W. 302, 304. Even though the false answers were written by the examiners of the company without the knowledge of the assured, but the latter has the means at hand to discover the falsehood, and negligently omits to use them, he will be regarded as an instrument in the perpetration of the fraud, and no recovery can be had on the policy. Forwood v. Prudential Ins. Co., 117 Md. 254, 259, 83 Atl. 169, 172; Providence Life Assur. Soc. v. Reutlinger, 58 Ark. 528, 543, 25 S. W. 835, 840.

Because of the inevitable conclusion we have reached, that the plaintiff may not recover in the case, for the reason we have already advanced concerning the invalidity of the policy of insurance on account of the untruthfulness of the answers contained in the application, we deem it unnecessary to consider at length the contention of the appellant that the policy never became effective because the insured was not in good health when it was delivered to him, and when he paid the first premium, as he was required to be by the terms of the policy in order to render the insurance effective. The lower court found that at that time Layton was suffering from a temporary indisposition. There is some evidence in the record on which respondent relies to support this finding, but the fact remains that Layton was receiving sick benefits from two lodges when he accepted the policy and paid the first premium, and was ill and was not working at the time. He had suffered for a year, at least, with the persistent affliction already referred to, and which was described by the doctors as a "stiff neck," or "a gathering," or "a lump," or "ulcer," in or upon his neck. The immediate cause of his decease, given in the proofs of death furnished the insurance company by the plaintiff, was carcinoma of the mediastinum, or cancer involving the space between the lungs. Dr. Rea, his attending physician at that time, who was familiar with the case, testified that in his opinion there was direct connection between the trouble Layton had on his neck and the cancer which caused his death; that the growth on the neck was a secondary result of the primary trouble in the decedent's chest. In our opinion the history of the case of decedent, and other evidence in the record, would tend to overthrow the conclusion reached by the lower court, were we called upon to pass upon the sufficiency of the evidence to support the finding. But we deem it unnecessary to consider that question any further. The finding of the lower court on the issue of fraud by reason of the false answers in the application is not supported by, but is contrary to, the evidence, for which reason the case must be reversed.

[6] In the proof of death furnished by respondent to the appellant, the immediate cause of death of the insured was specified as carcinoma of the mediastinum. The insurance company, basing its answer upon the information thus furnished to it by the plaintiff, pleaded in its answer that Layton was not in good health at the time of the receipt of the policy, but, on the contrary, was afflicted with the malady "which thereafter caused his death, to wit, carcinoma of the mediastinum, a form of cancer." There was some conflict in the testimony as to the exact nature and name of the malady. At the conclusion of the trial, appellant asked leave to file an amendment to its answer to conform to the proof in this regard. The court denied the application to amend. Notwithstanding the great liberality allowed to trial judges in matters of this kind, we think the amendment should have been allowed.

[7] Because the appellant, upon discovering the facts relating to the illness of the insured, and the alleged fraud in the answers contained in the application, tendered to the plaintiff the sum of $66.36, the amount of premiums paid on the policy of insurance, and later deposited that sum in court, it would have us remand the case to the lower court, with directions to enter a judgment in favor of plaintiff for that amount. Were we to do so, we would be, in effect, making new findings for the lower court, which is beyond our authority.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; KERRIGAN, J.

54 Cal. App. 373

STEVENS v. MOON. (Civ. 3743.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1. California. Oct. 31, 1921.)

1. Adjoining landowners ⇨5—Complaint held sufficient to state cause of action.

Under Civ. Code, § 3479, declaring any obstruction of free use of property a nuisance, and Code Civ. Proc. § 731, giving an action to a person whose property is injuriously affected or whose personal enjoyment is lessened thereby, a complaint, stating that defendant maintained trees near plaintiff's land, which was entered by the roofs of the trees, and which was drained of plant food so that plaintiff's trees were stunted in growth, states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

2. Adjoining landowners ⇨5—Trees maintained near boundary so that their roots enter land of another and rob his trees of subsistence constitute a nuisance.

Trees maintained near a boundary so that their roots enter the land of another and rob his trees of subsistence constitute a nuisance which may be abated by the owner of the adjoining land by destroying the roots of the trees or by an action to abate the nuisance.

3. Appeal and error ⇨1170(10)—Appellate court not compelled to affirm judgment denying abatement of nuisance, based on findings not supported by evidence, because plaintiff could abate the nuisance.

In an action to abate a nuisance caused by maintaining trees near a boundary so that their roots entered the land of an adjoining owner, where the findings of the trial court are not supported by sufficient evidence, the appellate court is not compelled to affirm the judgment under Const. art. 6, § 4½, providing that no new trial shall be granted, * * * unless after a careful examination of the entire case, including the evidence, the court shall be of the opinion that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice, because plaintiff may abate the nuisance by destroying the roots of the trees.

4. Justices of the peace ⇨130—Judgment in justice court for damages does not constitute a bar to action for abatement of nuisance.

In an action to abate a nuisance and for damages, a judgment obtained by plaintiff in a justice's court, while it would be conclusive on the question of damages up to the date of the judgment, is not a bar to his equitable rights to an injunction to prevent a continuance of the injury.

5. Trial ⇨397(1)—Findings should be made on allegation of judgment in justice's court, pleaded in bar in answer.

In an action for abatement of a nuisance, and for damages, where defendant pleaded in bar a judgment in a justice's court, in favor of defendant, since it was not a judgment of a court of record, and since the allegations of the answer touching the matter are deemed denied, a finding thereon should have been made by the trial court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Wellborn, Judge.

Suit by James S. Stevens against Mrs. I. H. Moon. From judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

L. B. Stanton, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Griffith Jones and John J. Craig, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Action for damages and injunctive relief against defendant who, on her own land adjoining that of plaintiff, maintains a row of growing eucalyptus trees, set one foot from the common boundary line. Judgment went for defendant, from which plaintiff appeals.

It appears without controversy that plaintiff and defendant are owners of adjoining tracts of land; that of plaintiff lying immediately west of defendant's tract. Plaintiff has growing upon his land a walnut orchard set out in 1914, the easterly row of trees being 20 feet distant from the boundary line common to the tracts of land; that, set in place at about the same time, and 1 foot east of said boundary line, defendant maintains a row of eucalyptus trees 300 feet in length, which at the time of the trial had attained a height of upwards of 100 feet.

This being the situation, plaintiff, on March 9, 1920, filed his complaint, alleging, among other things, that the roots of the eucalyptus trees had at the time extended into and through the northerly 350 feet of the eastern portion of his land a distance of upwards of 50 feet, by reason of which fact the east row of walnut trees were dwarfed and stunted and the soil for a distance of 50 feet from such boundary line had been deprived of moisture and plant food necessary and required in their growth and production of walnuts, all to his damage in the sum of $590.80; that by reason of the rapid growth and far-reaching extent of the root system of said trees, unless checked, he will be continuously and further damaged, in that the row of trees next east and distant 60 feet from said boundary line will, due to the increasing root growth, be likewise affected, and the strip of land 60 feet in width adjoining said row of eucalyptus trees rendered valueless for the growing of walnuts or of crops of any kind. The prayer is for damages sustained by reason of injury due to the facts alleged in the complaint and for an injunction requiring defendant to abate the nuisance by checking the growth of the roots of said trees upon and into plaintiff's land.

In her answer defendant denied the material allegations of the complaint, and as separate defenses alleged: First, that any damage sustained by plaintiff and due to the alleged stunted growth of the walnut trees is directly and proximately the result of neglect on the part of plaintiff to properly irrigate, cultivate, and care for the same; second, that defendant has always carefully pruned the eucalyptus trees and on different occasions plaintiff has pruned such portions of the trees as extended over and upon his land; third, as a plea in bar, defendant alleged that all of the matter upon which plaintiff based his cause of action had been previously adjudicated in an action between the parties in the justice's court, which action was commenced on December 20, 1918, and a trial thereof had on May 6, 1919, which action, as shown by the complaint filed in the justice's court and set forth in defendant's answer, was to recover damages sustained by reason of plaintiff's walnut trees being stunted and the fertility of the land destroyed by the intrusion of the roots of the eucalyptus trees, in which action a judgment was rendered in favor of defendant.

[1] That the complaint states a cause of action we entertain no doubt. Section 3479, Civil Code, declares that anything which is an obstruction to the free use of property so as to interfere with the comfortable enjoyment thereof is a nuisance, and section 731, Code of Civil Procedure provides:

"An action may be brought by any person whose property is injuriously affected, or whose personal enjoyment is lessened by a nuisance, as the same is defined in section thirty-four hundred and seventy-nine of the Civil Code, and by the judgment in such action the nuisance may be enjoined or abated as well as damages recovered therefor."

In Grandona v. Lovdal, 70 Cal. 161, 11 Pac. 623, the court, quoting from Wood on Nuisances, section 112, says:

"Trees whose branches extend over the land of another are not nuisances, except to the extent to which the branches overhang the adjoining land. To that extent they are nuisances, and the person over whose land they extend may cut them off or have his action for damages, and an abatement of the nuisance against the owner or occupant of the land on which they grow."

[2] The same rule must necessarily apply to a nuisance due to the growth of the roots of such trees which extend into the land of another, thereby withdrawing the moisture and food constituents required in the growing of crops thereon by the owner. While it is true that under such circumstances an owner may himself abate the nuisance by cutting off the overhanging branches, or, by digging into the ground, intercept and destroy the roots, just as he might in a case where a defendant maintained a cesspool on the boundary line the poisonous waters from which percolated through his land, reaching a well of domestic water, abate the nuisance by putting in a drainpipe and conveying the waters from the cesspool, he is not bound to do so, but he has a remedy by an action to abate the nuisance.

In opposition to these views, respondent cites Corpus Juris, volume 1, page 1233, section 94, to the effect that:

"One adjoining owner cannot maintain an action against another for the intrusion of roots or branches of a tree which is not poisonous or noxious in its nature; his remedy in such case is to clip or lop off the branches or cut the roots at the line"

—which she claims is supported by Grandona v. Lovdal, 78 Cal. 616, 21 Pac. 366, 12 Am. St. Rep. 121. What is said in the excerpt from Corpus Juris is restricted to the roots or branches of a tree which is not poisonous or noxious; that is, where no injury results. In the instant case the allegations of the complaint clearly show that the roots of these trees were noxious, in that the fertility of the soil through which the roots permeated was destroyed to an extent that deprived plaintiff of the use of his land. In the Lovdal Case the judgment in favor of defendant therein was affirmed, because it appeared from the bill of exceptions that—

"There was a conflict of testimony as to whether either the shade or roots of the trees injured plaintiff's land, and as to whether said roots prevented plaintiff from plowing his lands as near said fence as he otherwise could, and as to whether either the shade or roots of said trees had an injurious effect upon the crops."

In Parker v. Larsen, 86 Cal. 236, 24 Pac. 989, 21 Am. St. Rep. 30, it is said:

"The rule is general that, where one brings a foreign substance on his land, he must take care of it, and not permit it to injure his neighbor. The law upon the subject is tersely expressed in the maxim, 'Sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas.'"

See, also, Tuebner v. California St. R. R. Co., 66 Cal. 171, 4 Pac. 1162, Gardner v. Stroeve, 89 Cal. 26, 26 Pac. 618, Schneider v. Brown, 85 Cal. 205, 24 Pac. 715, Sullivan v. Royer, 72 Cal. 248, 13 Pac. 655, 1 Am. St. Rep. 51, and Buckingham v. Elliott, 62 Miss. 296, 52 Am. Rep. 188, upholding the right of action where the roots of a tree on adjoining land invaded plaintiff's well, and wherein the court said:

"It seems to be settled law that overhanging branches are a nuisance, and it must follow that invading roots are. The person intruded on by branches may cut them off; it must be true that one may cut off invading roots; it must be true that he who is injured by encroaching roots from his neighbor's tree can recover the damages sustained from them. The right of action seems clear."

In order to maintain such an action it devolves upon plaintiff to show that he is or will be damaged by the acts complained of,

and upon this issue the court found adversely to plaintiff. It appears from the findings, among other things, that none of the trees were permanently stunted or would have to be removed or replaced; that it is not true that said eucalyptus trees have drained or will exhaust the soil of plaintiff's land of its plant food, or have taken food value from the plaintiff's land in the sum of $250 or any sum at all; that the roots of said eucalyptus trees have to a certain extent been cut off, and all of them could be cut off without injury to the eucalyptus trees; "that plaintiff can readily abate the nuisance by cutting off the projecting roots"; that walnut trees get all their food value from water (which, we may say is contrary to the experience of horticulturists), and that the alleged stunted walnut trees have not received as much water as the more thrifty trees in the grove; that any damage to the trees is due to the fact that they have not received sufficient water, care, and cultivation. These findings and others of similar import, appellant claims are wholly without support in the evidence, which, since the appeal is under the alternative method, he sets out at great length in a supplement to his printed brief. An examination of this testimony discloses no evidence whatsoever in support of the findings. On the contrary, there is no evidence to support the finding that walnut trees get all of their food value from water, or that the land upon which they were growing was not adequately irrigated, or that there was not proper care given to the trees by plaintiff. It does appear without contradiction that the roots of the eucalyptus trees had intruded into plaintiff's land to a distance of some 50 feet; that in many cases the roots surrounded the trees in the first row next to defendant's land whereon the eucalyptus trees were growing, and that by reason of the extent of such root system and the voracious feeding qualities of eucalyptus trees they had in their growth absorbed from plaintiff's land, where affected, the moisture and food value which but for their presence would have supported the growth and production of the walnut trees, and without which they were stunted and dwarfed and bore little or no fruit.

[3] Respondent directs our attention to no testimony whatever which supports the findings. Her sole contention is that, since plaintiff can abate the nuisance by cutting off the roots, that is his sole remedy, by reason of which fact she argues that, even conceding the findings are not supported by the evidence, nevertheless, under section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution, it is the duty of this court to affirm the judgment. The contention is without merit.

[4] As to the judgment in the justice's court pleaded in bar, it appears from the record that it was an action for damages alleged to have been sustained by reason of defendant's acts prior to the filing of the complaint therein on December 20, 1918, in growing said row of eucalyptus trees. Conceding that such judgment might bar a recovery for damages prior to such time, it could not affect plaintiff's right to recover for damages sustained subsequent to said date. In no event could it bar his equitable rights to an injunction to prevent a continuance of the injury. Moreover, it appears the action was dismissed by plaintiff.

[5] Nor is there any finding as to the truth of such matter pleaded in bar. Since it was not a judgment of a court of record, and the allegations of the answer touching the matter are deemed denied, a finding thereon should have been made.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

54 Cal. App. 763

FERRY v. FISK. (Civ. 2321.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 31, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 29, 1921.)

1. Mortgages $\S$ 218—No foreclosure necessary where land has been sold under prior lien.

Where junior mortgagee purchases at sale under trust deed, the mortgage lien ceases to exist, and the mortgagee can bring a personal action against the mortgagor without foreclosure, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary or equitable considerations; Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 726, and Civ. Code, $\S$ 2904, not applying.

2. Mortgages $\S$ 591(1)—No redemption under trust deed.

There is no right of redemption in case of sale of land under a trust deed, under Civ. Code, $\S$ 2904.

3. Appeal and error $\S$ 1071(5)—Finding as to consideration for note held immaterial.

In an action to recover balance due on note, it was immaterial that the court found that the note was executed in consideration of United States gold coin "loaned by said O. to the defendant at the date thereof," whereas the note was given for a part of the purchase price of a tract of land bought from O.

4. Trial $\S$ 397(2)—Finding on immaterial point unnecessary.

In personal action on note by mortgagee, who purchased the land at a sale under a trust deed, where defendant mortgagor set up an agreement whereby he was to be permitted to sell the land within a year, no specific finding as to the value of the land was required where the court found that the parties did not enter into the agreement set up.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Action by Mabel E. Ferry against Kate B. Fisk. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

R. T. McKisick, of Sacramento, for appellant.

Wm. M. Sims, of San Francisco, and Driver & Driver, of Sacramento, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. Appellant does not question the accuracy of the following statement of the facts, which is substantially as made by respondent:

The respondent is the owner and holder of the promissory note in the principal sum of $11,580, set forth in her complaint, it having been distributed to her on January 24, 1917, in the matter of her father's estate. At the time she became the owner thereof there was likewise distributed to her a mortgage securing said note and covering 77.6 acres of land situated in Yolo county. This mortgage lien was subject to a deed of trust executed by defendant to secure the payment to the Peoples' Savings Bank of Sacramento of a promissory note in the principal sum of $10,000.

At the time this note and mortgage were distributed to the respondent the bank was demanding payment of its note, and the trustees under said deed of trust had begun the publication of notice of sale of the real property. The trustees continued the sale several times, and on February 26, 1917, sold the property at public sale, and respondent purchased the same for the amount due the bank.

On October 25, 1918, respondent brought this action to recover the amount due upon her said promissory note, less a credit given appellant thereon voluntarily, which credit was supposed to represent the difference between the amount paid by respondent for the land and the price which might be obtained for it from another purchaser within a reasonable time.

[1] Appellant, as her main defense, set up in her answer to respondent's complaint that respondent should have brought an action to foreclose the mortgage securing said note, under section 726 of our Code of Civil Procedure. Another defense was also urged that plaintiff violated a contract entered into between her and defendant in reference to said sale, to which defense reference will be had hereafter.

In support of her first contention appellant cites a long line of decisions from this state, of which Brown v. Willis, 67 Cal. 235, 7 Pac. 682, may be taken as an example, in which it was held that a mortgagor cannot be compelled to pay any part of his mortgage debt until a decree is entered for a sale of the premises mortgaged, and he then becomes liable only for such deficiency as shall appear on the sheriff's return. There can be no doubt that these cases were correctly decided, but the situation here is such that said section of the Code of Civil Procedure has no application. This follows from the fact that the mortgage lien had ceased to exist. The section itself obviously refers to the time when the action is brought. If there is no security then for the obligation, necessarily there is nothing to foreclose, and the action may be brought to enforce the claim as though it had never been secured. The rule in this respect is correctly stated by this court in the case of J. I. Case T. M. Co. v. Copren Bros., 32 Cal. App. 195, 162 Pac. 647, as follows:

"Many conditions may arise after a mortgage has been given rendering what was originally security for the debt valueless. In most cases, perhaps, it might be a correct statement of law to say that the word 'security,' as used in section 726, should be considered as used in the present tense, and that the section refers to a debt that, at the time the suit is brought, is secured by a mortgage. The adoption of the above as a general rule of construction would be subject to exceptions in individual cases. Thus, perhaps, if one having a debt secured by a mortgage should cancel it of record, without the consent of the mortgagor, it might be held he could not bring a personal action. On the other hand, if such mortgage were canceled with the consent or at the request of the mortgagor, without any intention of canceling the indebtedness, or if the property, being personal, were all destroyed by fire, without fault of the mortgagee, in such cases the holder of the indebtedness would not be at all prevented by section 726 from bringing and maintaining a personal action for the amount due. So in this case, the property having been sold by the plaintiff acting under the written authorization of the defendants, and having ceased to be security for any part of the balance due, the notes were not secured by a mortgage at the time the suit was brought, and section 726 has no application to the situation."

There would seem to be no doubt that the mortgage lien was extinguished by the sale under the trust deed; in other words, that, as purchaser, the plaintiff became the owner of the land free from any subsequent incumbrance. That this is ordinarily the effect of such sale is settled by the authorities. In Metropolis, etc., Sav. Bank v. Barnett, 165 Cal. 449, 132 Pac. 833, a mechanic's lien was filed subsequent to the execution of a trust deed, and the property was sold under the power conferred by said deed. In regard to the sale the Supreme Court said:

"This latter conveyance vested the absolute title in respondent, and thereby effectually destroyed the lien of the mechanics' lien suit judgment."

Reference may be had also to City Lumber Co. v. Brown, 189 Pac. 830, wherein the distinction between a trust deed and a mortgage is discussed and other authorities cited.

[2] If the purchase had been made herein by an outsider for the amount due the bank it would not be disputed that the lien of respondent's mortgage would thereby be destroyed; but it is thought by appellant that the situation is different by reason of the fact that the holder of the inferior security was the purchaser. It is not contended that there is anything illegal or immoral in such purchase, or that any element of fraud, deceit, or overreaching was involved in the sale herein, but it is claimed that, by virtue of section 2904 of the Civil Code, the lien is preserved in favor of the mortgagee. The section is:

"One who has a lien inferior to another, upon the same property, has a right:

"1. To redeem the property in the same manner as its owner might, from the superior lien; and,

"2. To be subrogated to all the benefits of the superior lien, when necessary for the protection of his interests, upon satisfying the claim secured thereby."

We think neither of these subdivisions applies to this case. The first cannot apply, because there is no right of redemption in case of sale under a trust deed. This is settled by the cases which we have cited. Neither does the case fall within the second subdivision, for the reason that, having secured the absolute title to the property under a valid sale, it was not "necessary for the protection of her interest" that she have the lien preserved; and besides, if it might be said that her purchase for the amount of the first claim satisfied the superior lien, there were no benefits left to said lien. The lien was satisfied and discharged by the sale, and it could not be made the basis for any further claim against the property or the former owner. As the superior lienholder could not claim any further benefits or advantage, manifestly there was no legal right to which plaintiff could be subrogated. Of course, plaintiff and defendant could have agreed that the former would purchase the property and hold it as security for the amount of the two debts, or, if it appeared that it was the intention of plaintiff to preserve the lien of her mortgage, it might be that she could not thereafter assume a contrary attitude; but we have no such case. It is true that appellant claims that—

"The evidence establishes beyond question—in fact, it is nowhere questioned by either plaintiff or defendant—that with the money procured from San Francisco Commercial Company plaintiff became purchaser at the trustees' sale solely in order to protect the security of her second mortgage."

Appellant does not point out any such evidence, and a reading of the record does not disclose it. In fact, the supposed agreement between the parties was, in effect, that plaintiff was to become the owner of the property by purchase at the sale and credit a certain amount on defendant's note, and grant to the latter the exclusive privilege for the term of one year of selling the place and retaining whatever was received above a certain price. The correspondence between the parties is quite voluminous, but there is no intimation therein that, in case of the purchase by respondent at the trustees' sale, the mortgage lien was to be preserved. In this connection we may say that, as far as we can determine from the record, plaintiff treated defendant fairly, and sought no undue advantage. The credit she allowed on the note seems to have been just under the circumstances, and it does not appear to have been her fault that the controversy was not settled out of court.

The cases cited by appellant wherein the mortgage lien was continued, notwithstanding an apparent extinguishment, involved equitable considerations in favor of the mortgagee that in good conscience required the preservation of the security.

In Carpentier v. Brenham, 40 Cal. 221, two mortgages existed on the same property. The senior mortgage was foreclosed without making the junior mortgagee a party, and the mortgagee under the first mortgage became the purchaser of the premises. It was claimed by plaintiff that, since the debt secured by the first mortgage was entirely satisfied, partly by the sale and partly by release, the effect of the transaction was—"wholly to extinguish the lien of the first mortgage and to substitute the purchaser only to the rights of the mortgagor, leaving the junior mortgagee at liberty to assert and enforce the lien of his mortgage in the same manner as if the first mortgage had been absolutely released by the mortgagee, and the purchaser had acquired by a direct conveyance the legal title of the mortgagor."

But, after a learned discussion of the subject, the court properly held that equity would keep the two estates—"or the legal title and the mortgagees' interest—although held by the same person, separate, whenever this is necessary for the full protection of such person's just rights," and that the facts demanded the application of this principle, the court saying:

"The purchaser at such a sale became, as against the plaintiff, the equitable assignee of the claim of the first mortgagee, and held a lien on the premises to that extent."

In Brooks v. Rice, 56 Cal. 423, the mortgagee under the first mortgage was ignorant of the existence of a second mortgage, and it was held that a conveyance to him by the mortgagor of the premises to satisfy the mortgage would not operate as a merger, but the lien would be considered as still existing for the protection of the claim of the first mortgagee.

Matzen v. Shaeffer, 65 Cal. 31, 3 Pac. 92, also involved a case wherein the interest of the grantee of the mortgaged premises, which were conveyed to satisfy the mortgage, required that the lien of the mortgage which she paid off should be kept alive to protect her from a judgment against the mortgagor procured and entered after the execution of the mortgage and before the entry of the satisfaction of the mortgage debt.

In Swain v. Stockton Savings, etc., Soc., 78 Cal. 600, 21 Pac. 365, 12 Am. St. Rep. 118, it was held that the purchaser of land at an execution sale, before the time of redemption has passed, and before the sheriff's deed has issued, has a lien upon the land, and under section 2904 of the Civil Code, when necessary for the protection of his interest, is entitled to be subrogated to a superior lien held under a prior deed of trust in the nature of a mortgage, which had been executed by the judgment debtor on the same land. In that case the loan society was willing to accept the payment of the money claimed by it as due under the deed of trust and to procure the trustees to reconvey the land to the mortgagors, and the plaintiff tendered said amount and demanded that he "be subrogated to all the benefits of the defendant, of its said lien under said deed of trust." To this the Supreme Court properly held he was entitled to protect his interest against inferior liens.

In Tolman v. Smith, 85 Cal. 280, 24 Pac. 743, the same principle is involved, and the court held that the effect of a conditional payment of one mortgage by another is to suspend the remedy on the old mortgage until the maturity of the new one, and until such maturity the old mortgage cannot be foreclosed, but, if the debt be not paid at maturity, the old mortgage revives and has priority over an intervening mortgage to a third person.

In Shaffer v. McCloskey, 101 Cal. 576, 36 Pac. 196, two tenants in common executed a mortgage to secure the purchase price of the land, and one of them, being unable to pay his share, conveyed his interest to his cotenant in consideration that the latter would pay the full amount remaining due on the mortgage. This was paid, and the mortgage satisfied without knowledge on the part of the person making the payment that his grantor had previously made a deed of trust of his half of the land, and it was justly held that the person paying the mortgage debt could maintain an action to revive the mortgage and be subrogated to the rights of the assignee of the mortgage as against the holder of the deed of trust.

In Randall v. Duff, 107 Cal. 33, 40 Pac. 20, it was held that the purchaser under an ineffectual foreclosure of mortgages, who, by purchasing, had paid off the mortgages, was entitled in equity to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagees, and to receive all that was equitably due on the mortgages but that he would not be permitted to make a speculation out of it a resort to the securities being allowed only so far as necessary to protect the purchaser.

It seems apparent to us that these cases, and others along the same line, are essentially different from the case before us, and we deem it unnecessary to go further with the consideration of this point.

We have already referred to the other defense set up in the answer and cross-complaint. There is evidence in the record to sustain the view of the trial court that the alleged agreement was never consummated by the parties. An offer was made by respondent to appellant for the protection of the interest of both, to enter into an agreement quite similar to that set forth in the answer, but modifications were suggested by the latter, and from the correspondence in relation to the matter, which is set forth in the brief of respondent, it is a rational conclusion that the minds of the parties never met. It cannot be said that the finding as to that issue is unsupported.

[3] Some other criticism is made of the findings, to which brief reference may be had. The court found:

"That said note was executed for and in consideration of the sum of $11,580 United States gold coin loaned by said O. A. Lovdal to the defendant at the date thereof."

Whereas it is the claim of appellant that the note was given for a part of the purchase price of the tract of 38.8 acres of land which she bought from said Lovdal. But the variance, if it be such, is entirely immaterial. The validity of the note was not questioned, and it makes not a particle of difference whether you call the consideration money loaned or owed for the purchase price of the land.

[4] Appellant claims that there is no specific finding as to the value of said land. The court, however, having found that the parties did not enter into the agreement upon which appellant relies, the value of the property became unimportant. Keegin v. Joyce, 9 Cal. App. 207, 98 Pac. 396; Hulsman v. Todd, 96 Cal. 228, 31 Pac. 39; Bliss v. Sneath, 119 Cal. 526, 51 Pac. 848.

We have carefully considered the points made by appellant, but we think no sufficient showing has been made to justify an interference with the conclusion of the court below.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

We concur: PREWETT, Justice pro tem.; FINCH, P. J.

55 Cal. App. 157

SIME et al. v. HUNTER. (Civ. 4020.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Nov. 10, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 9, 1922.)

1. Costs $\S$ 222—Statute allowing expense of stenographer's transcript as costs not impliedly repealed.

Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 274, requiring fees for transcripts and copies to be paid by the party ordering the same, was not impliedly repealed by section 1027, allowing costs and expenses paid by the prevailing party on appeal, since those two sections are not so inconsistent but that full force and effect can be given to each.

2. Statutes $\S$ 159—Repugnancy implying repeal must be clear, and inconsistency such that effect cannot be given both statutes.

Repeals by implication are not favored, and the repugnancy between the statute claimed to be repealed and the repealing statute must be clear, and the two statutes must be so inconsistent that force and effect cannot be given to both.

3. Costs $\S$ 251—Attorney's traveling expenses on appeal not taxable.

Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1027, allowing as costs all amounts actually paid out by the successful party in connection with the appeal, does not authorize taxing the traveling expenses of the attorney in connection with the argument on the appeal any more than section 1033, providing for costs in the court below, and using similar language, authorizes taxing personal expenses of the attorney as costs.

4. Costs $\S$ 3—Must be expressly authorized by statute.

Costs were not recoverable at common law, and he who would claim them must put his finger on the statute which awards them.

5. Appeal and error $\S$ 1171(3)—Item of 45 cents too trifling to be considered.

On appeal from an order taxing costs, an item of 45 cents for expressage on briefs is too trifling to be considered in view of the maxim that the law disregards trifles.

Appeal from Superior Court, Monterey County; Pat R. Parker, Judge.

Action by A. Sime and others, copartners doing business under the firm name and style of the Laton Percheron Horse Association, against Mary A. Hunter, as administratrix of the estate of Byron P. Hunter, deceased. From an order taxing the costs after judgment for plaintiff was affirmed, and disallowing items claimed by plaintiffs, the plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Hugh R. Osburn, of King City, for appellants.

Wallace M. Pence, of San Miguel, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. This is an appeal from an order made by the trial court taxing costs. An action was commenced in the same trial court by the same plaintiff against the same defendant, judgment went for the plaintiff and the defendant appealed. The judgment was affirmed. Sime v. Hunter, 195 Pac. 935. The statute governing the allowance of costs on appeal is section 1027 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That section, as amended by St. 1919, p. 73, provides as follows:

"The prevailing party on appeal shall be entitled to his costs excepting when judgment is modified, and in that event the matter of costs is within the discretion of the appellate court. The party entitled to costs, or to whom costs are awarded, may recover all amounts actually paid out by him in connection with said appeal, and the preparation of the record for the appeal, including the costs of printing briefs; provided, however, that no amount shall be allowed as costs of printing briefs in excess of one hundred dollars to any one party. The appellate court may reduce costs in case of the insertion of unnecessary matter in the record."

Claiming to act under said section, the plaintiff did, after the remittitur had gone down, prepare, serve and file a memorandum of costs and disbursements for items as follows:

Paid Miss Sena Jensen for copy of transcript on appeal, 189 folios @ 11¢.....	$ 20 79
Paid Salinas Daily Index for printing brief on appeal, 81 pages @ $1.80 per page.....	145 80
Paid expressage on briefs.....	45
Paid expenses to San Francisco and return to argue case on appeal.....	20 00
Paid King City Herald for printing reply to petition for hearing in the Supreme Court after decision by District Court of Appeal	23 40
Total	$210 44

The defendant moved the trial court to re-tax the costs and the trial court made an order taxing the costs as follows, "to wit: Strike out all items set forth in plaintiff's memorandum of costs and disbursements, excepting $100 for printing brief on appeal," and from that order the plaintiff has appealed.

[1] As to when a transcript of the reporter's notes may be taxed as costs, the matter is covered by section 274, Code Civil Procedure:

"* * * The fees for transcripts and copies ordered by the parties must be paid by the party ordering the same."

[2] If that passage has been repealed, it has been repealed by implication. But repeals by implication are not favored, and the repugnancy between the statute claimed to be repealed and the repealing statute must be clear, and the two statutes must be so inconsistent that force and effect cannot be given to both. People ex rel. Wood v. Sands, 102 Cal. 12, 36 Pac. 404. But sections 274 and 1027 are not so inconsistent but what full force and effect can be given to each.

The trial court allowed the appellant $100 for printing briefs. That was the full amount to which he was entitled for that item. Code Civ. Proc. § 1027, supra.

[3] The traveling expenses of an attorney are disbursements of his, and not of his client. Such is certainly the rule as to trial work. Appellant has not called to our attention any statute which shows that such a rule obtains as to trial work and which shows that a different rule obtains as to appellate work. As to work on appeal, it is true that the statute refers to "costs" and "all amounts actually paid out." Code Civ. Proc. § 1027. But, as to trial work, the language of the statute is equally broad when it uses the words, "the items of his costs and necessary disbursements." Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1033. However, throughout the 67 years section 1033, Code Civil Procedure (section 510, Prac. Act), has been on the books, the settled practice has been not to include as costs the personal expenses of the attorney of the party prevailing.

[4] It must ever be borne in mind that costs were not recoverable at common law. He who would claim costs must put his finger on a statute which awards the same. The measure of the statute is the measure of the right.

"In England it seems that statutes relating to costs were considered penal in their nature and were to be strictly construed, and, with scarcely an exception, this is the rule generally adopted in this country where the question has been raised and considered by the courts." 15 Corp. Juris, p. 24, § 9.

And, in this case, if it be said that the traveling expenses were "actually paid out by him in connection with said appeal," the answer is that the expenses were paid out by the attorney, and not by "him" (the party to the appeal).

[5] We have thus considered every item which the trial court disallowed except "Expressage on briefs, 45 cents." As to that item affecting this appeal, it may be said, "The law disregards trifles." Civ. Code, § 3533; Connell v. Harron, Rickard & McCone, 7 Cal. App. 745, 747, 95 Pac. 916.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

MEMORANDUM DECISIONS

54 Cal. App. 796

FORDERER CORNICE WORKS v. CHATHAM et al. (Civ. 3958.) (District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California, Oct. 14, 1921.) Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George E. Crothers, Judge. Action by the Forderer Cornice Works against William Chatham and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed. A. A. Moore and Stanley Moore, both of San Francisco, and L. R. Weinmann, of Alameda, for appellants. Hartley F. Peart and Olin L. Berry, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. This is an appeal by the sureties on a contractor's bond from a judgment in favor of a materialman. The case is parallel in all of its facts with the case entitled W. P. Fuller & Co., a Corporation, Plaintiff and Respondent, v. William Chatham & F. E. Knowles, Defendants and Appellants, 200 Pac. 293, Civil No. 3812, First Appellate District, Division 2, filed July 20, 1921. A petition to have that case heard and determined by the Supreme Court was by that court denied September 17, 1921. Since this case was filed, the Fuller Case was heard and determined on appeal. Counsel for appellants have courteously called to our attention the above facts. On the authority of the Fuller Case the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

